But again, the '73 time argument claims that the 1260 years of papal supremacy ended in 1798, because the pope was taken prisoner in that year, which was just 1260 years this side of 538, where, it is claimed, the period began. Now the popes have been imprisoned and exiled so many times during the period of papal history, that the fact of the imprisonment of a pope in that particular year, seems to lessen its force as a point in the argument. Pope Silverius, mentioned above, died in exile, and Vigilius, the next pope, after suffering great indignities at the command of the emperor, was finally imprisoned and driven into exile for five months. And although he recanted and was permitted by the emperor to start on his return to Rome, he died before reaching the end of his journey. I will mention one other pope whose imprisonment and exile comes nearer the supposed point of the ending of the 1260 days. I refer to Pope Pius VII., who, after the death of the imprisoned Pope Pius VI., was elected to occupy the papal chair, March 13, 1800. Pius VII. continued to exercise the functions of the papal office, until A. D. 1808, when (April 2) Rome and the States of the Church were again seized by the French. The following year, 1809, the pope having ventured to disobey the mandates, and defy the menaces of Napoleon, was forcibly seized in his palace, dethroned, imprisoned, and Rome proclaimed the second city of the empire. This last captivity seems to be a more complete overthrow of the pope, and the whole papal system, than the imprisonment and exile of Pius VI. in A. D. 1798. But it is too late to fit in the argument. And now I repeat what I have said above. I see no force in the argument which ends the 1260 days at the captivity and exile of a pope of Rome, no matter at what point in its history such an event might transpire. It was not the pope, neither the papal hierarchy, that was to make war on the saints 1260 days; but rather the government symbolized by the leopard beast with seven heads and ten horns. The papal government is the "mouth" which was given to this leopard beast, which spake great things and blasphemies. And this mouth no doubt counseled the leopard-beast government to make war on the saints. And the prophecy affirms that the leopard-beast government did make war on the saints 1260 days. Hence in relation to the time when the 1260 days ended, the question is not, when was the pope taken prisoner, but rather, when did the seventh head of the leopard beast cease to make war on the saints? For the six heads of that beast were to make war during their entire history; but the seventh must continue (margin,—make war) only a short space.

For an answer to the above question, I refer you to an article recently published in the A. C. Times, giving a history of the rise and fall of the seven heads of the leopard beast, each in their order.

But it is said, you make the seventh head cease to make war on the saints prior to the darkening of the sun in 1780. Certainly; and did not Jesus say—"Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened"? Matt. 24. And yet it is affirmed it was only the tribulation that ended prior to the dark day, and that the 1260 days continued on many years after. But let us briefly examine the affirmation. Does not the Revelator say the leopard beast should make war on the saints 1260 days? and would there not be tribulation as long as the war lasted? If so, then if the tribulation ended prior to the dark day of 1780, so must also the 1260 days' war on the saints. Jesus also says: "Except those days should be shortened no flesh should be saved." This language indicates that the tribulation would continue the full term of the shortened days. But this position may be looked upon with distrust, from the fact that of necessity the 1260 days' war must have commenced some years before the 1335 and 1290 days. Yet who that has read the history of these times will not admit that the leopard beast government did commence to make war on the different sects, in the interest of the Catholic religion, immediately after Justinian was proclaimed emperor in A. D. 518? In some instances he commanded they should be put to death wherever they should be found. In 524 he issued an edict, commanding the Arians to deliver up their church to the Catholics, and their bishops to consecrate them anew.

Finally, Justinian issued an edict commanding all, whether Jews, Gentiles or Christians, to accept the Catholic faith on pain of death or exile. And history records the fact, that one hundred thousand of his subjects perished under the enforcement of that terrible edict, in the year 532. But notwithstanding all this, I cannot believe the abomination was at that time set up in the sense of the prophecy. In short, it was necessary the beast should make war in the interest of the Catholic religion many long years before he could set up, or establish, that abominable system of worship as the universal law or creed of his vast empire. But, to be brief, I will suggest I do not understand there is an intimation in the prophecy of Daniel that there would be just 1260 days' tribulation; yet Jesus clearly refers us to the tribulation of those days spoken of by Daniel the prophet.

I admit we read in Dan. 12: 7 about a "time, times, and a half," but the margin says "a part," which I think is the correct rendering, from the fact that in the answer to the same question reiterated in v. 11, he makes the plain statement that there shall be 1290 days. And as the 1290 days and 1335 days begin together, at the time when the abomination is set up, or established, I conclude that inasmuch as Jesus said the days spoken of by Daniel should be shortened (see Matt. 24), the 1290 were shortened so as to end exactly where the 1260 days' war on the saints ended, which was just prior to the darkening of the sun in 1780. I know it has been our position that the 1260 days of the book of Revelations, and the 1335 days of the prophecy of Daniel, commence at the same point of time; and it seems hard to look at the matter in any other light; but when we remember that some eminent commentators commenced the 1260 days in A. D. 606-7, and also that we once held that the seventy weeks, sixty-nine weeks, and sixty-two weeks, all had one common commencement; ought we to be too firm in holding to our old position that the 1260 and 1335 days commenced together, especially inasmuch as time has continued so long, that to hold the old position throws the 1260 day period out of harmony with plain statements in the word of God, as shown above?

Again. If the 1260 days did not end until 1798, how can we harmonize that arrangement with the fact that the two witnesses were slain, if slain at all, prior to that time? For we all agree that the period of 1260 years, during which time the two witnesses prophesied in sackcloth, and the period of 1260 years' war on the saints, run parallel; and we read that when they shall have finished their testimony clothed in sackcloth (and the original will not allow of any other rendering), the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, overcome them, and kill them. Now if they were slain, and lay dead, as I think there is no doubt, during the years from 1791 to 1795 (for every feature of the events presented in the prophecy was fulfilled by the French government during those years), then the 1260 years' war on the saints must have ended prior to that time.

The foregoing are some of the reasons why I cannot accept the position that the 1260 days measure the period from 538 to 1798, and if our tolerant editor permits what I have written to appear for your consideration, in my next I will give you my views in relation to the abomination—what it is, when, and where it was set up in fulfillment of the prophecy. I do not write to oppose any one. I have great respect for the honest, intelligent views of all. My only object is to excite a spirit of kind investigation, that, if possible, a clear light may shine out from the prophetic page to guide us on our journey to the everlasting kingdom.

LITERAL INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE.

A PARTIAL REVIEW OF "THE END OF ALL THINGS."

In our last we found that all the passages selected by Mr. G. would not only bear a literal interpretation, but that any attempt to give them a figurative interpretation, or reading, greatly weakened them, if not entirely destroyed them. We feel therefore equally sure that there will be no difficulty in finding an easy, natural, and scriptural solution of all that may follow. The next instance given is as follows:—

"Our Lord said to his disciples, just before he was about to leave them, 'In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.' Interpret these words literally, and the result would be that there are material houses in heaven, and that every redeemed saint of God shall have a mansion to himself in the realms of glory. I may be met here with the remark that no one could ever understand this in a literal sense. To that observation my reply is, that it has been so understood, and is at this hour so understood by thousands of christians. The Swedenborgians—and as a body they are very intelligent—one and all so understand it."

And they are not alone in this belief. We, too, most faithfully believe that there are mansions in heaven (for Jesus says if it were not so, he would have told us) prepared for the saints, which will in due time be given to them—not in heaven, but—on this earth when it is restored. We are told of a "city which hath foundations" now in heaven, which shall descend by and by to this earth, and which shall be the glorious capital of the new world. Proof: "I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." "Behold the tabernacle [or house] of God is with men." Rev. 21: 2, 3. Jesus went to "prepare" a place for the saints, and here it comes "prepared." The minute description of the golden city which follows this glorious announcement, forces us to take it as a literal city. Indeed, it can not be taken otherwise, for it is impossible for a city to exist without houses, or mansions. Therefore if the city is figurative, the mansions are figurative, the inhabitants are figurative; and if they are figurative, the throne of God and of the Lamb, which is in the city, is figurative; and if the throne of God is figurative, He who sitteth upon the throne is also figurative! Will those who differ with us accept this wholesale destruction "of the words of the prophecy of this book"? Either these passages are all literal, or else they are all figurative, for they are all equally plain and positive. As for me, I think I shall follow old Abraham's example, and take God at his word.

Again we quote—"In the eleventh chapter of John, we have three striking examples of the employment of figurative language on the part of our Lord, which in every instance were erroneously understood by his disciples in the literal sense, so earnestly contended for by modern millenarians. When Jesus, we are told, was informed that Lazarus, the brother of Mary and Martha, was sick, he said, 'This sickness is not unto death.' This our Lord meant in a figurative sense. If he had spoken in accordance with a literal interpretation of the words which he used, the event would have shown that he was mistaken as to the fact, for the sickness of Lazarus was unto death. This is one instance of Christ speaking in a figurative instead of a literal sense."

The peculiar selection of only a part of the sentence containing the words quoted, reminds me of that eccentric preacher, Lorenzo Dow. Being at one time greatly tried by the prevailing fashion among the women of his day, of wearing the hair in a huge ball, or top-knot, he announced one Sabbath that he would on the following Lord's day preach to the ladies, and prove to them from the Scriptures that Jesus condemned this method of wearing the hair. Accordingly at the time appointed, the church was full, all eager to know where the passage was that would convict them. With a solemn, stern countenance, Dow arose, and turning to Matt. 24: 17, he read in their astonished hearing, in tones of thunder—"Top-knot, come down"! From this he preached a powerful sermon, which had all the greater effect from the fact that, although his hearers were solemnly assured that those identical words were in the Bible, he ingeniously omitted to give them the chapter and verse, by telling them if they read their Bibles as they ought to, they would find them.

So with our author. He takes only the first part of the sentence, and ignores the rest, and from this first part proceeds to make his deductions. Now is this the true way to read and interpret God's holy word? I honestly think it is not. Jesus, in this instance, said no more than was necessary to convey his meaning intelligibly to his disciples. Why, then, take only half of what he said, particularly as there is no break in his sentence? Let us read—"When Jesus heard that [viz., that Lazarus was sick], he said, This sickness is not unto death, but [or except] for the glory of God [why, Jesus?]; that the Son of God might be glorified thereby" (i. e., by Lazarus' death). But how could the Son of God be glorified by the death of a man whom "Jesus loved"? Because if Jesus had gone at once to see Lazarus before he died, his human nature might have been so overcome by the love he bore "Martha, her sister, and Lazarus" (for Jesus was "a man of like passions with us, yet without sin"), that he would not have suffered Lazarus to die. Therefore "he abode two days still in the place where he was," during which time Lazarus died.

But, Lord, we are like Martha; it is not fully clear to us yet how thou shalt be glorified by our brother's death. "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldst believe thou shouldst see the glory of God?" "I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent that ye [also] may believe." "Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said—Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always; but because of the people which stand by, I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me. And when he had thus spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth! And he that was dead came forth." What was the result? "Many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him." Ah! here, then, is the grand secret of Jesus doing as he did. It took a resurrection from the dead to convince some of the Jews, and to confirm those who already believed; and Jesus suffered Lazarus to die, and lay four days dead, in order to prove to them that he was the Christ, the Son of God. Thus was he glorified, and thus did he show the glory of God. How plain, and how touchingly beautiful is this simple narration of the doings of the Lord Jesus. Nothing figurative about it.

The second instance cited is the eleventh verse of the same chapter, where Jesus said to his disciples—"Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." "The literal meaning of these words of our Lord," says Mr. G., "was, that Lazarus was simply asleep. But he did not use them in a literal sense, nor did he mean that they should be so understood by his disciples, for in the fourteenth verse of the same chapter, Jesus spake of the death of Lazarus, when he represented him as being only asleep, for he says in so many words—'Lazarus is dead.' This is another instance of error in a literal interpretation of Scripture."

There is no more reason for saying that this expression of Jesus is figurative, than there is for saying that Lazarus' sickness was figurative. Jesus knew the meaning of the words he used full well, and he used them in their broadest and most literal sense. He used the word "sleep" in its absolutely true meaning. Death is but perfect sleep. It is a sleep so profound, so absolute, so complete, that nothing short of Almighty power can break its spell. That rest which we enjoy during life, and which we call sleep, is but a counterfeit of the real sleep. Perfect sleep means absolute rest. However soundly a man may sleep in life, there are organs within him which know no rest until they rest forever. But in death's sleep the weary are indeed at rest. Therefore we hold that Jesus spoke the literal truth, and nothing but the truth, when he said, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." The disciples took his words figuratively, i. e., that Lazarus was taking healthful rest; whereas Jesus spoke only of that sleep which, but for the great resurrection, would be an eternal sleep.

We come now to the third instance given by Mr. G., preceding which he remarks, "The third instance will be found in the conversation which Jesus had with Martha respecting the death of Lazarus. The conversation commences with the twenty-first verse, and ends with the twenty-seventh. But the verse which bears on the point of a literal interpretation of Scripture is in the twenty-sixth, where Christ said to Martha, 'Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die.' If these words of our Lord were received in their literal sense, they would justify the conclusion that no believer in Christ could ever die, but would live on forever and ever. But we know our Lord never meant them to be so understood. He spoke in a figurative sense.' He spoke of spiritual, not natural death."

I do not wonder, when I see such mutilations of God's sacred word, that sceptics and infidels say that "the Bible is like an old fiddle; you can play any tune upon it you choose"; for instances like these make the remark a true one. Indeed, it is just this wholesale spiritualizing of the blessed book which gives a semblance of truth to their words. Take it as it reads, or as one would read any other book, and their shafts fall harmlessly. As this passage is frequently quoted on any and all occasions, whether pertinent or not, I propose to notice it carefully, and see whether it is nothing but a figurative expression. I contend that it (the story) is a beautiful narration of a most touching incident, given in explicit and truthful language, which language is most positive and literal. Let us therefore look it over, and see under what circumstances these blessed words were spoken, and what occasion gave rise to their utterance.

Jesus was then on his way to Bethany, to wake Lazarus out of sleep; and when Martha heard he was coming, she went to meet him, leaving Mary sitting in the house. "Then said Martha unto Jesus—Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. But [note this most delicate and tender petition] I know that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee. Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again! Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection, at the last day. [Observe, the subject now is the resurrection, and the time mentioned is the "last day.] Jesus saith unto her—I am the resurrection, and the life [now by faith, but at the resurrection at the last day by sight]; he that believeth on me [as Lazarus did], though he were dead [as he now is], yet shall he live [at the resurrection at the last day]. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me [at the resurrection of the last day] SHALL NEVER DIE," (as Lazarus died.) Why, Lord? Because he "shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump," and be caught up in the clouds, together with the resurrected saints "to meet the Lord in the air."

The idea of saying that Jesus spoke of spiritual and not physical death, is so utterly at variance with the whole account, that I cannot for the life of me see where the point is made. Jesus and Martha were not talking of spiritual death at all, for this would have been entirely foreign to the subject; besides, it would have cast a most unkind and unjust reflection upon Lazarus. But we know that Lazarus was a true disciple of Jesus, hence such remarks could not apply to him. Yet he was, nevertheless, the cause of this interview between Jesus and Martha, and the sole subject of their conversation from beginning to end. He was literally and physically dead, and Jesus recognized the fact by saying so. He came to Bethany for the express purpose of waking Lazarus from literal death, and not from spiritual death, for he had not died spiritually. Therefore taking these undeniable facts, and discarding fanciful theories, we hold most tenaciously that spiritual death was not spoken of, consequently has nothing whatever to do with the question, but is repugnant to it.

There is, however, another signification to our Lord's words which is equally literal and equally true; but it occurs in this instance in a secondary sense. We will take the language of Jesus as Mr. G. has quoted it, without any reference to its connection, and we find a most beautiful and comforting truth illustrated. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me [in this life, even though he die as Lazarus did], shall never die" the second or eternal death; for his "life is hid with Christ in God," who will give it to him at the resurrection of the just forever. How simple this is. How plain and how in perfect keeping it is with the rest of God's word. Not one conflicting sentence, phrase, or word. Nothing figurative in either reading. All is literal. All is true. Thank God, that it is true.

It is this blessed and glorious hope of being redeemed from actual death, to enjoy actual life with Him who is the resurrection and the life, that acts as an anchor to the soul sure and steadfast. It is this hope that enables us to lay hold of the rich promises of God, remaining faithful to which we shall be permitted to sit down together with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the redeemed ones, in the kingdom of God, to go no more out forever.

LOVE TO JESUS.—No. 2.

"We love Him, because he first loved us."—JOHN.

How many things there are to call love into existence: how many to give it birth. Beauty, with all its fascinations, is not the last or least prolific in this direction. The flashing eye, the rosy cheek, the dimpled chin, the spotless skin, the pearly teeth, the comely figure, have more than a thousand times accomplished the task. Accomplishments, too, have succeeded in the work. The flit in the dance-room, the tremulous public reading, the sweet strains that issued from a fair singer's throat, the music aroused from bone, wood, and wires, have captivated many a bystander's heart. Acquirements both useful and ornamental have issued their fiat to the susceptible individual, and love has been awakened. And we should not omit to mention what graces and charms of the person have done in this direction. The blush of untainted modesty, as it turned away from the rude gaze of human kind, have but led the being after it. The benevolence of a god-like soul has been more charming to many a heart than aught else. And hosts of other virtues have riveted the eye and heart on an object as desirable and worthy to be obtained. But how much greater is the number of those who have esteemed the belongings, or the property, of a person as worthy to secure love for the possessor. O this greedy love! How many men have loved woman for their money and estates, and vice versa. And the last that may be mentioned here is position. The rich but low-bred have coveted a lordly ancestry; they have coveted the peerage of the noble, and for the sake of rising in the social circle, and having their names titled, they have wedded the poor daughters of reduced baronets.

So there are hosts of things which incline people to love others—beauty, accomplishments, graces of the person, property, and high position in the social circle.

But there remains yet one other more potent force than any I have mentioned. It is love. Love begets love. Do I feel within me that a heart burns with pure affection for me? Can I recognize in the tone of the voice, in delicate attentions, in the contemplative glance of a soul, that it moves to me—that I am the object of its special regard; then how can I help responding, if there is any response in my nature? How can I help reciprocating the feeling, if I will give way to the sentiments which reply to those evoked? He loves me. He visited me in my poverty, took my hand in his, filled my pantry with plenty, and seemed to yearn over me; how can I resist the secret magnetizing influence of this affection?

It is well to love from real motive and downright persuasion. Alas! love in its exercise is too often guided by whim. It is ruled by caprice. Begotten of fickleness, it lives a short life, dies in misery, and its decayed carcass appears in the Divorce Court. How much of this fickle love there is in these United States! But the Apostle loved from real motive. He had groundwork for his affection. He had built his love on a reasonable basis. The whole thing of Christianity with him was reasonable. His dedication to God was his "reasonable service." He was ready to give a reason of the hope which was in him. He loved, too, because he felt there was reason for it. Says he—"We love Him because he first loved us." John loved Jesus, not because of a floating whim that passed just under his scalp, and could be blown away by the next person or system he encountered; not because of some appearance of worth or merit, but "because He first loved us." His love was not born of nothing. John knew the origin of his love; it was the love of God in Christ Jesus his Lord.

Let us notice John's reason for loving God, and see if it is not provocative of love in us. O that it may reach the reader! O that it may stir us out of our indifference! O God! prepare our hearts, and open our eyes widely, that we may look at the fact of thy love as it really is.

"He first loved us." Who is it that loves? Who is the "He" of our article? Here let us stop for a moment; let us linger; and slowly and meditatively let us utter his name, which is unutterable. It is the Deity who loves. The Jew, as he utters the name of the Deity, bends his head in reverence. For the Deity is great. He is mighty. He is "a jealous God and a Savior"; and does not delight in those who take his name in vain. Angels will not dare do it; but man is vile, and he utters the sacred name of the Infinite as carelessly and commonly as he would the name of his companion. "He"—the Deity—who made us, O Christian, "first loved us"! "He" to whom heaven pays homage—"He" who counts it condescension to look upon the angels—"He" who provides for the whole world—"He" who is our Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer—loves us. If it were some poor, ignorant outcast, one of ourselves, who loved us, who could neither do us good or harm, then the world could afford to pass on without being particularly interested in the fact; but when we find that not the master of the factory, not the king on his throne, nor the angels, nor the archangels; but that the Head of all—even God himself, loves us, how shall we stand astonished, and rejoice with trembling. Here, my brother, my sister, let us devoutly acknowledge His kindness who deigns to love us.

And whom does He love? "Us." Who are we that God should love us? What the race to which we belong, that God notices it, and is attached to it? We are from the dust—that is what we once were before God made us men. We were a portion of the atoms which went to make up this body we call the earth. "Dust and ashes," as Abraham truly pleads. David, too, said God "remembereth that we are dust." And so it is, for "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." How with astonishment we cry to God, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" And with still greater, "that thou dost love him?" Our origin is the dust. And our state is an alien one. We by nature and practice were outlaws in God's world; were sinners in his sight; and yet he loved us—us sinners.

"He saw me ruined in the fall,
Yet loved me notwithstanding all;
He saved me from my lost estate,
His loving-kindness, O how great!"

O how wonderful the fact. The pure Deity, and so lofty, loved me when I was impure and so despicable. I cannot help saying—who can?—"I love Him."

"He first loved us." The Bible opens with these four words—"In the beginning God"; and God has been first in all that is good and generous, and ever will be so. It is not—"We loved God, and then he loved us"; but, "He first loved us." It was in the past he loved us. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "He first loved us."

This, then, is the source of our love to God—God's love to us. Ours is the consequence of his, and flows out of his. O for gratitude! God has loved us so as to provide us a Savior. O for grateful affection! Dormant powers, awake! Lethargy, begone!

"Dear Lord, and shall we ever live
At this poor dying rate,
Our love so faint, so cold to thee,
And thine to us so great!"

It must not be, ye godly souls. There must be an alteration. Lord, look thou into the mirror of our imaginations. Reflect thy likeness there. Show thyself the ideal and model of love. Show us thy love in the wounds of thy feet and side and hands. We love thee. "Thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee." O quicken the flame. Let thy words of love be fuel cast on the changing and dying embers of our affection; that we may always prove our love to thee by keeping thy commandments. "And let all the people say Amen." W. SAN FRANCISCO.

Our meetings in San Francisco have increased in interest during the past week. Twenty-one were baptized last Friday (Feb. 24th), and others are now waiting for the next opportunity. Those who witnessed the baptism say it was the most interesting they ever beheld. There were but few whose eyes were not moistened with tears; especially when one dear little girl seven years of age, noted for her piety, was taken in our arms and laid down in the watery grave and raised again in the likeness of Christ's burial and resurrection. Her happy, sweet expressions of love for Jesus, as she was raised out of the water, made every heart melt. The scene will not be forgotten by those who were present. She is the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Place, from Portsmouth, N. H.

The meetings are exerting a powerful influence in the city. Infidelity, cold formalism, and all other things opposed to vital godliness are compelled to stand back from the onward march of this glorious work. Several new ones present themselves for prayers in almost every meeting. It is estimated that not less than one hundred have been converted or reclaimed from a backslidden state. Strong men from other churches are uniting with us in the work; and several such have expressed a desire to continue with us, making their home with this company of believers looking for the coming of Jesus. Notwithstanding the strong opposition from popular ministers and their admirers, the influence of the meetings is spreading like a rising tide in all directions.

A few days since, we met on the side-walk, in one of the principal streets of the city, a prominent business man, well-known in financial circles, who remarked that his associates, who had been to the meetings, had come to the conclusion that, if the Bible is true, we are right; and said these men are anxious to hear more on the subject. This gentleman has made no profession of religion, but said he would head a paper with —— dollars, and go among his business friends to raise money to hire the Music Hall for another course of lectures. To this we consented, and have arranged to commence next Monday evening, March 6th.

Our last meetings have surpassed all others in power and interest. The common remark from christians of the most extensive experience is, that these meetings are the best they ever enjoyed. Last Sabbath evening, Feb. 26th, four prominent, leading infidels in the city, spoke in the conference meeting. One said he had been an infidel twenty-five years, but was tired of infidelity, and now desired to be a christian. The melting power of Jesus' love is being felt by stout hearts, which, till now, have resisted all offers of salvation. We expect to see yet greater things. This week—from Feb. 27th to March 5th—we are holding meetings in the city of Vallejo [pronounced Vallaho], in the Presbyterian church, where Mr. N. B. Klink is pastor. This is said to be the most wicked place in the state. The prospect is very encouraging. The Methodist minister, Bro. Rich, has given up his regular meetings for the week, and invited his church and congregation to attend our meetings with him. Truly the California field is white for the harvest. Dear Brn. and Srs., God is answering your prayers in a wonderful manner. Continue to "pray without ceasing."

The weather here is delightful. Imagine yourself sitting in a room with no fire, door open, and then feeling too warm, and you will have some idea of our position while writing at the present time, Feb. 28th. People work here in their gardens during the entire winter, raising vegetables for the markets. We have had no idea of winter since we arrived on this coast; only by imagination, while thinking of the state of things in our New England home. We find most of the people here have no desire to return east. They have a strong preference for this coast; yet we would not advise those to come to this country who can get a comfortable living in other places.

WHAT THEY SAY.

The following, from "The Spectator," is part of a letter from Bro. J. C. Simmons, the State Sunday School Agent. He appears to be a true christian.

"On my return to San Francisco I had the pleasure of attending a special service held in Minna-street church. It was indeed a feast to my soul. Though at two o'clock P. M., yet there was quite a large congregation, more than sometimes assemble there on Sunday at eleven o'clock. Elder Grant struck the right key-note at the opening of the meeting—entire consecration to God and loving him with all the heart. The holy fire burned with a steady flame all through the meeting. This is evidently a deep work, and is of God. 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' Men who were not only sinners, but infidels, have been soundly converted and stand up firmly for Jesus. Eld. Grant does not look like a fanatic to me, and whatever heterodox opinions he may hold, he is sound on the great doctrines of justification by faith, repentance, and sanctification. He has a holy horror of sin, and is not afraid to tell people if they do not give it up they never can be saved. It is true I saw but little, but what I did see pleased me. Yours, February 14th, 1871. J. C. SIMMONS."

The following are from the editorials of the San Francisco Daily Examiner, of Feb. 15th and 16th. This paper is conducted with much ability:—

WHAT IS THE SOUL?

Elder Grant will deliver a lecture to-night at Platt's Hall upon a subject which should be of absorbing interest to every one, to wit: 'What is the soul?—What does the Bible teach concerning it?' The Elder promises to make his remarks so plain and his views so clear that a child can understand them. Admission to the lecture will be free, but after its delivery a collection will be taken up to pay for the Hall and gas, and those who are able will be expected to contribute a trifling sum for that purpose. Those who attend will not fail to be edified.

MISERY NOT ETERNAL.

Elder Grant will deliver a lecture at Platt's Hall this evening, commencing at half-past seven o'clock. He will take the position, that the doctrine of eternal misery is not taught in Holy Scriptures. Elder Grant's familiarity with the Bible is remarkable, and only equalled by his reverence for the sacred book. His remarks upon this and kindred themes are those of a thoughtful, clear-headed man, given neither to bigotry nor superstition, and are calculated to impress the mind favorably and awaken earnest inquiry upon the most important subject that can engage the attention of men.

Seats will be free to-night, as usual, and those who desire to put questions to the Elder after the lecture is concluded, can do so.

CALIFORNIA THUNDER-STORM.

It is rare that a thunder storm visits California, but during the night of Feb. 20th, we had a good specimen of a genuine New England thunder storm, said to be the most severe known on this coast by the oldest inhabitants. We heard of several who were very much frightened, and thought "Mr. Grant's doctrine," as they call it, about the end of the world, had actually become true. One man who had opposed us most persistently and bitterly, said he was very much alarmed during the storm. He has not ventured to oppose the doctrine since, and seems quite changed in his spirit.

The following notice of the storm is from the San Francisco Bulletin:—

THUNDER AND LIGHTNING VS. EARTHQUAKES.

"The storm of last night afforded a new sensation for Californians. Hitherto we have occasionally had a dim flash or two of lightning, after the style of the "heat lightning" of the summer evenings in the eastern and western States, accompanied by low rumblings of thunder, hardly reconizable as the genuine article, at intervals of years, as the only substitutes for the thunder and lightning of the Atlantic and western States. Last night we had something faintly approaching a genuine eastern thunder storm. It is safe to say that it created nearly as much consternation as is usually produced among our inhabitants by a first-class earthquake, the agony being prolonged through hours instead of minutes or seconds, and caused more loss of life in the city than has ever resulted from any earthquake which has ever shaken up San Francisco. These thunder storms are of frequent occurrence throughout the eastern States and the Valley of the Mississippi, and are frequently accompanied by considerable loss of life and destruction of property. Notwithstanding all this, our eastern neighbors sympathize deeply with us on account of our 'dreadful earthquakes.' Our people have now had a chance to judge of the comparative merits and demerits of the peculiar climatic institutions of the East and the Pacific coast, and the popular verdict appears to be decidedly in favor of earthquakes, contrasted with thunder storms. We are satisfied with our own institutions, and do not crave any more borrowed luxuries."

THE CHINESE NEW YEAR.

Saturday, Feb. 18th, was New Year's day among the Chinese. They celebrate the beginning of the year very much as the American people do the 4th of July. A large amount of fire-crackers are burnt; business is suspended, and a general visitation is enjoyed. They appear in their best attire—some of their dresses are very rich,—and their tables are loaded with their choicest teas, wines, cakes, candies, fruits, and other luxuries, for the entertainment of those who come to make their new year calls; quite like the custom in Montreal and New York. They continue their new year festivities for several days. Some of them drink wine and tea, smoke opium and cigars, till they lie down unconscious of joy or sorrow.

We were much interested during our visit to their temples of worship, where we had an opportunity of examining their various gods, and of witnessing their mode of doing reverence to them. The six Chinese companies in California, who control the Chinamen, called "Coolies," have just fitted up a new temple for the worship of their gods. It is located on Dupont street, between Washington and Jackson streets. We find the following at hand, from the Alta California, which we give instead of our own description of the same things:

MODE OF WORSHIP.

Among the Chinese it is the custom whenever any male or female has done noble deeds during life, that after death that person shall be worshiped as a saint in recognition of the services rendered either for the Empire or for humanity. These idols are placed in the Temple, are made of clay and highly decorated with paintings and gildings. The temple is open day and night for worship, which consists of kneeling before the particular idol of whom the worshipper desires blessing, the repetition of prayers and the offering of sacrifices in the way of tea, fruits and meats. They also burn gold and silver paper as a spiritual offering. The principal days of worship, however, are on the first and fifteenth of every month. On the first they ask that they may be blessed for the month and success attend them. On the fifteenth they return thanks for the privileges granted them for the first half of the month, and ask that they may be continued. Tuk Wang Ti Tie is the Supreme Being of the Universe. They have priests who are robed in red gowns, and wear black silk skull caps; these officiate wherever their services are required. The temple is supported by the worshipers who pay from twenty-five cents to two dollars and fifty cents on every occasion, and according to the quantity of offerings made by them.

THIS TEMPLE

Occupies the whole story, which is divided up into different worshiping rooms or chapels. The centre hall is the largest, and on the right of the room as one enters, on a pedestal is Tay Ting King, a white bearded man, who is worshiped as the doorkeeper and controller of the forests. In one cabinet, richly carved and gilded, are three saints.

One is called Quan Tie, who is red faced. He was a celebrated General in his day, wielding large armies always with success.

Pak Tie is in the centre of the cabinet, and in olden time is said to have descended from Heaven to instruct the people in agriculture.

Hung Sing, the third in the case, was known as a brave Emperor.

To the right of this cabinet is Choy Pah, who is known as the controller of the fortunes of his race. The Chinese believe that as the Supreme Being has written down in a book the days allotted to each man when born, so this Controller also has written in a book the respective amount of fortune each man is to have in life, whether rich or poor.

To the left of the cabinet is the idol of Tun Goe, a funeral of war, who won many decisive battles.

In another room to the left of the main Temple, is a cabinet containing two female idols—one is known as Kum, for the saint of flowers. The other is Tin How, a Queen, who was a sister of a mariner. She is worshiped on account of having on one occasion saved a number of lives from a wrecked vessel.

In a room to the right of the main Temple is the altar, at which is worshiped particularly by sailors Quen Yum, a woman whom our informant says is compared to Cinderella, as having been cruelly treated by haughty women, for which she in turn did acts of charity.

In addition to these, there are the idols of Wah Tor, a divine person who cured the sick. On a floor in one of the rooms is the idol of Chay San, the controller of the precious treasures in heaven and earth. There are also several other idols of lesser note. All the rooms have decorations on the walls, and the idols and cabinets are fitted up gorgeously. In all, there are eight rooms, five of which are devoted to places of worship, the others comprising a salesroom for candles and other offerings, a conversation room for friends, and a visitors' room. The whole affair has been fitted up at an expense of several thousand dollars.

Before throwing the temple open to worship, a wooden figure of a horse supposed to belong to the gate-keeper of Hell, was burned up, and last evening the effigy of the gate-keeper himself was set in flames, in order to keep the evil spirit away from the new temple.

When the Chinese appear before their gods, they put their hands together, and bow three times. A light is kept burning perpetually before their gods. We could not help noticing the similarity between the Chinese and Catholic worship. The latter is but a modified form of the Chinese, and is as truly as theirs, a worship of idols. Their idolatrous worship is the result of a belief in the immortality of the soul. If these idolaters could be made to believe the Bible, which teaches that "the dead know not any thing," their whole system would fall to the ground like the baseless fabric of a vision. We are more and more convinced that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is Satan's pet doctrine. On this foundation rest all the false systems of religion in the world, including Spiritualism, which is but a rehash of the old heathen systems, presented in a new dress. The lie of Satan is the corner-stone on which they all rest; and we do not feel at all careful about disturbing this key-stone in the temple of error. We are rejoiced to know that thousands of devoted christians are assisting to expose this prince of lies, uttered to our first parents by the arch deceiver, in the garden of Eden. Let every christian, with Bible in hand, and the Holy Spirit in his heart, stand up with a bold meekness against the leading lie of Diabolos.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH.

The people in London are making earnest demonstrations against the established church in England. They desire to separate the church and state. They rightly consider that the church and state are two distinct powers, that should never be married together; and that the time has come for their perpetual divorcement. Crowded meetings are being held in London to consider this subject.

Whenever the church leans upon the state for support instead of upon Christ, we may expect that cold formalism will be the result. The spirit of the world and of Christ are entirely different in their effects. When we are filled with the one, we are not with the other. The Spirit of Jesus never leads one to seek for worldly honor; hence, when a church does this, we may be sure it has departed from her divine Master. We are exhorted to come out from the world and be separate. The more fully this is done, the sweeter our peace.

We think it will be a benefit to the church of England to be divorced from the state, and be thrown entirely upon Christ for protection.

THE CATHOLICS are doing all in their power to save their sinking ship. They are making a desperate death-struggle to re-establish the political power of the Pope. They are leaving no stone unturned that they can move. A telegram from Florence, dated Feb. 10th, says:—

"The newspapers announce that a Catholic league has been formed in Belgium to prepare an expedition against Italy, with branches established in Austria and Spain, and some provinces of France, and a meeting place in some island in the Mediterranean. The Italian Government has received information of the conspiracy."

OUR READERS will please excuse the extracts from California papers that refer to your editor. Knowing that our friends, who are daily praying for us, are anxious to know how we are received on the Pacific coast, we send a few samples of what appears in the papers.

☞ WE are compelled to abridge many of our articles, especially the correspondence, our columns being so crowded. Our friends will please make a note of this.

A NEW HEALTH JOURNAL.—Health and Home is the title of a new Health Magazine, of 44 pages royal octavo, just issued in very neat form by W. R. De Puy & Brother, 805 Broadway, New York. In their prospectus the publishers promise a high-toned, practical health journal, edited not in the interest of any medical party or clique, but one which shall "glean from all fields, hold under contribution all schools of medicine, and seek aid from all intelligent accessible teachers." The first number now before us has a varied and inviting table of contents, which needs only to be seen in order to awaken attention.

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC.—A new political movement is on foot among the civilized nations of the world, having for its object the establishment of a "Universal Republic." The headquarters of the European division is at London, and it is said "there are branches in all the capitals of the old world." It has presidents of its own in every country. Thousands in the United States are reported as members. We mistrust that Napoleon is the corner-stone of this political structure. In one of his speeches he said: "I represent a principle, and that principle is universal suffrage."

SOUTHERN NOTES.—No. 6.

In addition to preaching, I am trying to scatter a few publications on the most judicious principle—putting them into the hands of those only who can read, and who will be apt to exert an influence over others who cannot. My supply is not large enough to scatter in a wasteful manner. Readers are not as numerous in this country as in the north. Even in this city, as well as in the villages, ministers line their hymns, that is, read two lines and sing them, then read two lines more, and sing them, etc. On the night of Feb. 16th, I attended prayer-meeting at the Methodist church, and the pastor invited me to open the meeting. I had a free time in exhortation. Some of the people in the city are grumbling because I teach contrary to their early views of the kingdom; and others contend with them, saying, "He proves his views by the Bible, any way."

Feb. 17th, I re-commenced my meetings in the Baptist meeting-house. The Baptist minister gave out my hymns. The congregation listened with remarkable candor to a sermon on Prophecy, and all seemed impressed with the great truth that earth's history is near its close; and after meeting the minister told me he believed I had preached the truth; and the deacon said he was bound to give me a candid hearing all through. Before closing, I invited all who were willing to make a covenant to pray and labor with me for the salvation of men during my meetings, to manifest it by rising. Members of different churches thus made the pledge. Feb. 18th, I preached again at the Baptist church to a candid congregation, and was followed by some warm exhortations, including one from the Baptist minister.

Feb. 19th, Sunday forenoon, I preached in the Methodist meeting house, to a full congregation of attentive listeners, the pastor aiding me in the preliminary services. Though I brought out some new thoughts for their consideration, the minister expressed himself gratified with the sermon. At the close of the meeting, I was invited to preach for the colored Methodist church. They have no meeting-house like the colored Baptist church who have been urging me to preach to them, but hold their meetings in a large school-house, built for their use by the U. S. government. All the religious bodies in this city have now invited me to preach for them except the Episcopalians and Catholics; and I have already spoken for the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists.

Sunday evening I preached again in the Baptist church to a large congregation, and the Lord helped me to give the judgment alarm to this people. Every body, so far as I can hear, seems to acquiesce in the preaching for the time being, ministers and people alike; and doubtless some reporters of meetings would represent the whole city in sympathy; but I prefer to speak modestly, and await the final result, instead of relying on present appearances, feeling confident that though the seed is extensively scattered, much of it will not fall on good ground. The old Quaker said, "It is not the much money thee gets, but the much money thee keeps that makes thee a rich man"; so it is not the many that are pleased to hear the truth preached for the time being, partly owing to its novelty, and partly because they fancy the address of the preacher, but the few who receive and obey the truth, who are to be benefitted by it. Some here, out of many listeners and admirers, believe and love the whole truth, so far as they have learned it.

Monday night, Feb. 20th, I preached at the Baptist house again, being aided in the services both by the Presbyterian and Baptist ministers. At the close of my sermon, two convicted persons took the anxious seat for prayers. Though some thought that my sermon had cut the theology of those ministers "into shoe-strings," they, in common with the rest of the people, listened with great candor; and, greatly to my surprise, the Baptist minister complimented me on having preached a "very convincing sermon." The elements of opposition are being stirred up, but the opposition is undercurrent in its operations, repudiating "Yankee theology."

Feb. 21st, I enjoyed a free time in preaching the judgment near, and after sermon some requested prayers. Several took part in the prayer-meeting, which preceded the sermon, ministers and members of different churches included. Feb. 22nd, took dinner with the Baptist minister, and enjoyed a profitable time in conversing with him on various chains of prophecy, in which he seemed interested. In the evening, the Baptist minister, and a Methodist minister from an adjoining township, took part in the meeting. This Methodist Bro. thought he should so shape his affairs that he could come and give me a hearing, expressing much anxiety to inform himself concerning our faith and hope. He was worth seventy-five thousand dollars when the war broke out, but is now reduced to poverty. Feb. 23d, owing to the cold, wet weather, our congregation was very small—not over seventy persons out—but at the close of my sermon two arose for prayers, and deep solemnity pervaded the place. One minister who was present and took part in the prayer-meeting, who had long advocated the conversion of the world prior to the advent of Christ, said he was obliged to surrender that doctrine, as it was useless to stand out against such arguments as I had adduced—twelve strong proof texts having been adduced in refutation of the temporal millennium doctrine.

The south is a very hard place to conduct a revival meeting, owing to the cold state of ministers and church members, disqualifying them for labor, throwing all the work at the altar upon me. I have had as many as twenty take the anxious seat in a night, at some of my meetings in this State, and have tried to have several prayers offered, but have never been able to get a single prayer from minister or member, except when personally invited to pray, and then there is a great lack of zeal. It is hard to get the stream to rise higher than the fountain. Religion is very low. Many southern deacons and officials never pray in public, if any where else. Of course they have poor prayer-meetings, the minister doing nearly all that is done, no other one to speak, and seldom over one prayer offered, as a general rule. It is a far greater task to get professors into working order, than it is to get sinners to move.

Feb. 24th, preached on the time of reward, and had great freedom, and good attention. At the close of my sermon, two new seekers rose for prayers. My claim to the meeting-house is now about out, and it is doubtful whether it will be extended. There is a strong undercurrent opposition now developing itself, and every string is being pulled to hedge up my way, such as the following: (1) The circulation of reports about our breaking up churches, stories about ascension robes, no-soul doctrine, and similar things. (2) My being a northern man is made a great scare, as so many preachers of their own denomination have proved treacherous, and after getting the confidence of the people, have turned out to be "carpet-baggers"; and they secretly insist that a man of my talent will yet work them some injury. (3) After long and strong invitations to preach to the colored people, and after submitting the matter to the decision of several of my friends, including the Baptist minister, I have promised to preach one sermon in the colored church, and that is deemed a sufficient pretext for a hue and cry against me; but after having made the promise, I will not betray cowardice in recalling the appointment, if they cut off my head; for to recant now would be worse than to bear the reproach of being called a "nigger preacher." The Baptist minister promises to accompany me, and aid in the services. But if I were to try to hold a series of meetings among them, my friends would all bolt, and I should shortly be waited upon by a committee requesting me to leave town, which I would have to do, or place myself under the protection of the colored people and their sympathizers. (4) The opposers to my occupying the church have been determined in their opposition, and it may yet result in their opposition to their minister, who says he "will stand by Bro. Sheldon, if they pitch him out of the church heels over head, till my time expires, as I was invited by vote." He further says that he believes much that I have preached, and is not yet prepared to reject any part of my preaching, but claims time to carefully examine every point before either receiving or rejecting. I shall furnish him suitable reading matter.

Sunday forenoon, Feb. 26th, I enjoyed a free time in preaching on the coming of Christ and its attendant events, in the Baptist house, the pastor being present and assisting in the preliminary services. He is making himself unpopular with a portion of his church for taking a strong stand in my favor. He says he has been more deeply interested in my preaching than any preaching he ever listened to in his life. A part of the members refuse to hear a single sermon, which much grieves the minister. Some already prophesy he will yet preach our faith fully. Sunday afternoon, accompanied by the Baptist minister, I went to fill my appointment in the colored Baptist church, where I was heartily welcomed by the pastor. As the people came flocking in, I concluded that the statement of a colored friend was not far from correct, "A heap of us wants to hear you preach powerful bad." For some nights past, a goodly number of them had ventured to creep into the Baptist church, occupying a back seat, and the result was, the colored people were already much excited by my preaching, by mere hearsay. As they took their seats by the hundreds, I gazed upon their countenances, and recognized all grades of colors—white, whitish, blackish, black, very black, blacker, blackest; and their extravagance in dress was really amusing—ribbons, flowers, silks, etc. They will deprive themselves of a thousand comforts to get some showy article of dress; and if they can get but one article, they will wear that with their rags, thus making a laughable contrast.

When the people got in, the Baptist minister, at my request, opened the meeting, and I preached to them on the judgment and its nearness. I knew they were an emotional people, but sometimes I was both startled and bothered by their responses; and such a swinging of themselves on their seats, swaying to and fro, and nodding of heads, as I witnessed, mingled with symptoms of grief and signs of joy, were proofs that I had the attention of all. At the close of my sermon, I inquired how many sinners and backsliders desired prayers, and, to my surprise, over one hundred and fifty arose. I had been told that such sermons as I had been preaching would move the blacks by the hundreds, but did not believe it. But I presume the larger share of them had once been professors; for they are famous for backsliding, and being often reclaimed again. We had a season of prayer, and closed. I was at once surrounded by colored friends, giving me a large job of hand-shaking to do, importuning me to preach more for them. I agreed to speak at the white Baptist church in the evening, which was to terminate my claim to the house, the opposition not having abated, and it not being thought best to pursue an arbitrary course. But two hours before meeting time arrived, a heavy rain set in, and lasted till midnight, so there was no meeting held in any church in the city. For my own sake I was glad, being thoroughly fatigued, and needed a little rest before doing more. W. S.

SUGGESTIVE.—In some parts of the South, the people are strongly averse to allowing a colored person to enter their houses of worship. Recently one who had formerly been a slave, now employed as a servant girl in a Presbyterian family, being about sixteen years of age, was sent to lead the children to the Sabbath School, and though she was fully as white as the children, she well knew the customs of the country would not allow her to enter the house; so she seated herself on the steps at the door, which act was noticed by the minister, and not suspecting she was of African origin, thinking it was the result of bashfulness, he went out and invited her in, and seated her in a white Sabbath School class. Being treated with such unexpected kindness by the minister, she was emboldened to take her seat in the class on the next Sunday; but lo, there was an uproar in the camp—the discovery had been made that she was a negro!

The minister told them that he was to blame for her being there, having invited her himself, thinking she was a white girl, though he had been a slave-holder for long years. The decision was, she must leave the school, and also that, as he had invited her in, he must be the one to turn her out. Good for the minister. Scholars are left in school much darker than she was, but they are the children of a white mother. Comments are superfluous. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THE CALIFORNIA MISSION.

TO THE CRISIS:—"When is Miles Grant coming back?" What do I know about the Elder's whereabouts or intentions, that people should run after me with this question? Now the Dist. Att'y of the county tells me that he must hear the Elder before he "leaves for good," and those accustomed to his preaching mourn his temporary absence. This is not hero-worship or fanaticism. O, no. The newly revived truths are so clearing and satisfactory, that more and more of the inexhaustible treasury of Scripture parallelisms in their illustration is anxiously desired. And yet the Elder has been absent only five days. O, how glad I am that he has proclaimed the nature and destiny truths here. Never before in California have I seen such a clear sky as we have had during the past winter. But my joy is feeble compared with that of the converts who never before heard these grand Bible doctrines. Hence this regard for the preacher.

Large package of Crisis came to hand to-day. Their judicious distribution by sale and gift—as the Elder may direct—cannot fail to return great acknowledgments.

The quotation from Joseph Priestly, in the Crisis of Feb. 15th, was most opportune. You should publish the compact but brilliant eulogy of this man to be found in Appleton's Encyclopedia of Biography; that another of the "ignorant and obscure" men who have re-discovered the Bible truth just referred to, may be brought prominently forward.

In connection with some direct review of our Dr. Scott's sermon,* as, the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked, it occurred to me that when the venerable clergyman was preaching the creed and the bigotry of his church, and saying that "this fossil heresy" occasionally cropped up as a "new discovery" by some "fiery champion," and that it had been held aforetime by some good but "ignorant and obscure men," he forgot, or did not know, that this and kindred doctrines were held and promulgated—

1. By the greatest religious reformer of the Christian era—Martin Luther.

2. By the first translator of the Bible into English—Wm. Tyndall.

3. By the greatest religious poet and most powerful essay-advocate of political freedom of the Christian era—John Milton.

4. By the most renowned pioneer discoverer in the realms of chemistry—Joseph Priestly.

5. By the greatest English church theologian of the present century—Abp. Whately.

It is true that if the Scriptures say thus and so, it matters little though all the professed church backslide from the truth; but when we can, or think we can, induce men to listen to the truth by showing that it has been entertained, in late and early years, by persons who are very far from being either "ignorant or obscure," can we not make the showing in all charity? It seems "Yes" to me on this question. C.

ELD. MILES GRANT IN VALLEJO.—Yesterday (Feb. 19th), the Rev. Miles Grant, whose preaching and lectures have occasioned so much excitement in San Francisco, officiated at the morning and evening services in the Presbyterian church. In the morning this church was crowded, all available places being occupied. . . . . The Rev. Mr. Grant is an eloquent and forcible preacher. His great power consisting of his simplicity. His discourse was not marked by any lofty flights of rhetorical splendor, nor vivid imaginations, but it was full of home truths, such as touch and pierce to the very marrow, the faults of our every day life. His appearance is not specially commanding, but his whole manner in the pulpit is indicative of his estimate of the importance and responsible duties attaching to the sacred office of a preacher.—Vallejo Daily Chronicle.

CHRIST AND SOCRATES.

ROUSSEAU'S CELEBRATED CONTRAST.

I acknowledge to you that the majesty of the Scriptures astonishes me, and the sanctity of the gospel fills me with rapture. Look into the writings of the philosophers, with all their pomp and parade, how trivial they appear when compared to this volume! Is it possible that and yet so sublime, should be the work of man? Is the style that of an enthusiast or a sectary inflated with ambition? What sweetness, what purity in his morals! What force, what persuasion in his instructions! His maxims, how sublime! His discourses, how wise and profound! Such presence of mind, such beauty and precision in his answers! Such empire over his passions!

Where is the man or the philosopher that knows how to act, to suffer, and to die, without weakness or ostentation? Plato, in his picture of the imaginary just man, covered with all the opprobriousness of guilt, and worthy of all the reward of virtue, gives us an exact representation of Christ; so striking is the resemblance that all the fathers saw and indeed there is no possibility of mistaking it. What prejudice, what blindness, to compare the offspring of Sophronica to the son of Mary!

HOW IMMENSE THE DIFFERENCE between the two! Socrates dying without pain and without ignominy, found it easy to support his character to the very last, and if his life had not been honored by so gentle a death, we might have doubted whether Socrates, with all his understanding, was anything more than a sophist. You will say he invented a system of moral philosophy. Others had practiced it before his time; he only related what they had performed, and drew lectures from their example. Aristides had been just, before Socrates told us what justice was; Leonidas had sacrificed his life for his country, before Socrates had made the love of our country a duty; Sparta was sober before Socrates commended sobriety; before he had given a definition of virtue, Greece abounded in virtuous men. But of whom did Christ borrow that which he, and he only, taught both by work and example? From the center of the most extravagant fanaticism the highest wisdom made itself heard, and the vilest of nations was honored with the simplicity of the most heroic virtues. The death of Socrates, philosophizing coolly with his friends, is the easiest that can be desired; that of Christ expiring in the midst of torments, abused, scorned, detested by a whole people, is the most dreadful that can be apprehended. Socrates taking the poisonous draught, returns thanks to the person who with tears in his eyes presents it to him. Christ, in his exquisite torture, prays for the bloody executioner. Yes, if Socrates lived and died like a philosopher, Christ lived and died like a God. Shall we say that the

SUBLIME AND PURE MORALITY

EVANGELICAL HISTORY

was invented at pleasure? My friends, inventions are not made after that manner, and Socrates' history, of which nobody entertains any doubt, is not so well attested as that of Christ. Upon the whole, it is removing the difficulty further back, without solving it; for it would be much harder to conceive that a number of men should have joined together to fabricate this book, than a single person should furnish the subject to its authors. Jewish writers would never have fallen into that style or system of morality; and the gospel has such strong and inimitable marks of truth, that the inventor would be more surprising than the hero.

For the World's Crisis.

SISTER C. B. TURNER.

BRN. AND SRS.:—You see by the Crisis that our business agent, Bro. Adams, has acknowledged the receipt of $83 for Sr. Turner, which is nearly one half the amount called for through the Crisis, viz., $200. Just as soon as this sum is made up, I shall be ready to fulfill my pledge to add to it $100, pledged to me by responsible parties on condition that I raise the $200 through the Crisis. I have just received a letter from her niece, who is taking care of her in her sickness, expressing many thanks for what the friends have already done. Now it is for you to say whether or not the remainder shall be made up. Awaiting your response, I remain your Bro. in Christ, A. H. BROWN.

Rahway, N. J., March 8th, 1871.

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. N. Crawford.

DEAR BRN:—You have a large number of preaching brethren in the eastern States, while we are almost entirely destitute. I am trying to do what I can to publish the glad tidings of the coming King, but we need help. Who will come? Some of the preaching brethren know the condition of this country, for they went from here in the early part of the Advent movement. If there is any single man who will come, who is competent to preach the gospel, and is in sympathy with the Crisis, I will bear his expenses here, and give him a home with me one year free. You will please correspond with C. N. Crawford, South Bombay, Franklin Co., N. Y.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. D. C. ABBOTT writes:—"I have been permitted to live one year in the glorious sunlight of truth. In the winter of '59 and '60, I trust I was converted to God, through the labors of a Congregational minister, from that time on have felt the love of God and the salvation of souls uppermost in my mind. After about eighteen months I saw the truth concerning the mode of baptism, left the church together with my wife, asked and received the ordinance at the hands of a Baptist minister, and we were greatly blessed in the truth as then revealed to us. We then united with that church, and I believe enjoyed gospel privileges equal to almost any one of the orthodox faith. But I am obliged to admit there was always an aching void; a lack of the true manna. I could only pray daily for years for more light, that I might know that we were on the right road, and see the way clearer before us. Finally, when it seemed that the heavens were brass, and God's ear heavy, and men waxed worse and worse, and the love of many waxed cold, I began to doubt and despair, and fear that after all my experience had been a delusion. Thank the Lord, just in the time of need Eld. D. D. Reed and wife came to our wicked town, and scattered tracts. Our preacher was pleased to denominate them 'fire-brands,' and warned the congregation not to read them, for 'they taught damnable heresies.' Notwithstanding, I ventured to read a portion of one on the state of the dead, just to see what the foolish Adventists would teach about that which no man could know. In reading I went for assistance to the pastor. But he could not help me out; then I asked God for assistance as never before, and took the Bible and Cruden's Concordance, and sat down for ten days and examined the highest authority for quotations to assist me in the strange and humiliating dilemma in which I found myself. After a thorough investigation, notwithstanding the inveterate hatred and contempt in which I held the abominable doctrine of the sleep of the dead, I could only lift up my hands and exclaim, Glory be to God, I have found the truth! I then truly felt that the scales had fallen from my eyes. Now I believe the Bible as never before; the knots are loosed, and an illiterate man may understand it. O what blessed comfort in every word of Divine inspiration! What a blessed hope to buoy the weary pilgrim up! How precious the shed blood of the only Son of God, the blood that saves from eternal death. How animating to know that all who will may eat and live forever, and Jesus will raise him up at the last day.

The truth has made us free. Now I see the wisdom of God in the doctrine of the resurrection, the saints' inheritance, and the second advent of the Savior. Jesus is soon coming to raise the dead and give immortality to the believers. I will thank God while I live for sending Bro. and Sr. Reed to this coast, for I have enjoyed more in partaking of the unadulterated word in just one year, than I had with the mixtures of heathen philosophers and theological immortal-soul dogmas for the previous ten.

The Crisis supplies the place of my former eight papers. It is meat and drink, indeed, for the hungry soul. God bless the Crisis."

BRO. J. T. ONGLEY writes:—"We are still on the march for the kingdom. The truth is gaining ground slowly in the different places where we labor. Some even in the city of Pittsburgh have said that they have reason to thank God that their eyes have been opened to see the truth through our weak instrumentality, and some others I trust will soon go forward in obedience to the commands of our blessed Lord; also at McClintockville, near Rouseville, Pa., some are getting interested in the blessed hope that we cherish. We also found quite a company of believers in the city of Titusville, Pa., who a few days ago did not know of there being over two families in the city of like precious faith. I found five families, besides two other names that take the Crisis that we did not find. Hope to hunt them up. We prevailed on them to get together once a week, and we have agreed to meet with them on Wednesday evenings for awhile, until the way opens for them to get established.

We also found a few at Bucklin's Corners, Chaut. Co., N. Y., who are still striving for the kingdom. The good work is going on here. Bro. Buzzell and Newell Wood are holding forth the word, and the prayer and conference meetings are well attended. Four have lately put on Christ by baptism, and hope to see others soon. Father and mother Ongley are holding on to the faith, and believe they will live to see Jesus come.

We are living in momentous times. Pray for us, that we may be found among the faithful laborers in the vineyard."

BRO. JAMES LESSLIE writes from Toronto:—"I enclose you a small tract on Life Everlasting, by Dr. Leask of London, Eng., editor of the Rainbow, which I have just republished with some remarks on the glorious theme on the cover. Until I issued this small publication, and began to put it into circulation, I had no idea of the stereotyped ignorance and alarming opposition which prevail upon this subject, not only among professed believers in divine revelation generally, but among the more educated—the elders and scribes of our day. Conscientious men often differ in judgment with respect to religious doctrine, but it is sadly at variance with Protestant intelligence and freedom to find them not only oppose the truth, alleged to be founded on the revelation of God, but to resist its investigation. The editors of denominational journals, while exposing what they affirm to be an old heresy revived—a doctrine whose tendency is 'evil and only evil,' with strange inconsistency refuse to publish a scriptural exposition of their error; while booksellers—professedly christian men—will not allow Dr. Leask's tract to be seen in their shops; while light, frivolous, and sensational or profane literature everywhere abounds. The disciple need not be dismayed by these things, when the orthodox in the days of the Savior said of him—'He hath a devil and is mad; why hear ye him?' The counsel of the apostle is calculated to encourage under all difficulties—'Be patient . . . stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.'"

BRO. G. A. STREETER writes:—"Yesterday, the 12th, was a good day to me. I came here (Gloucester, Mass.) the tenth, and held meetings over Sunday. This is a new field. They have had but little preaching. About two months ago Sister J. Boswell came here. Brn. Hook and Hastings have labored some, Sr. B. mostly. The people are poor; the class that come out to hear are mostly fishermen. The attendance yesterday was large, interest good. After meeting last evening quite a number tarried, and we proposed that they begin to work aright. Accordingly a committee of five were chosen, two brethren and three sisters, to solicit subscriptions for hall and meetings. Bro. Ephraim Brown was chosen clerk and treasurer, to whom any can write if they desire. Direct to Gloucester, Mass., Box 877.

A great work is begun. May God help. How many such places can be found, even in Mass., where our faith is not truly known. Brn., let us work while the day lasts. The gathering time is now. My heart is in the work. O God! lead where we can be the means of doing some good."

BRO. E. COTTON writes:—"Since Oct. I have labored in Wyoming, West Greenwich, Nuse Neck, North Scituate, R. I.; Williamsville, Danielsonville, Putnam, Ct.; Webster, Charlton, Clinton, Westboro, Mass; Newport, and Claremont, N. H. Some of the time I have labored with preaching brethren. Thirty-three have been persuaded to seek the Lord. 'Many of the children of God have been comforted and strengthened. I am exceeding joyful in the Lord. My spirit leaps with inward joy, whilst I feel the sacred fire burning in my heart. It has been over five years since I have been hard tempted by the devil. Sometimes temptations are presented to my mind by the wicked one, but I have grace to resist, and he flees from me. We have an armor that is complete, and the shield of faith quenches all the fiery darts of the wicked. And 'he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not.' Brn., I hope to meet you soon in the kingdom of God."

BRO. GEO. THOMSON writes:—"We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Prairie du Sac. The few believers here have been greatly cheered. Backsliders have been reclaimed, a number of new ones have made a start for the kingdom, among the number a Spanish Mexican brother, who was formerly a Roman Catholic. He is a very intelligent brother. He saw the truth in the downfall of 'Mystic Babylon,' came out from her, and is now happy in the Savior's love. We have organized a church of seventeen members, including one by letter, a preacher from the 'Christian' church, and who bids fair, we think, to become useful as a preacher of present truth. Pray for us.

BRO. B. A. WARREN writes:—"The people in Islesboro, Me., have been greatly blessed. When the meetings first started, we were a feeble few, but our number has been increased, and I do not see anything to discourage us. I feel that the best of the land is ahead. Old and young are now seen in our ranks. Bless the Lord. Jesus has a people here who will praise him in that great day."

BRO. R. R. YORK writes:—"It being reported that I have joined the 'Free Masons,' I hereby wish to inform all interested, that such is not the case; neither have I ever had such an intention. Let me belong to Christ, and be united to his people, and it is enough. Amen."

Obituaries.

WILLIAMS. In Hartford, Feb. 22d, 1871, Bro. Edward Williams, aged forty-nine years.

In the death of Bro. Williams, the community has experienced a great loss. He was one of the old stand-bys of the Advent cause, having been associated with us for many years. Possessed of a kind and generous heart and a loving disposition, he was ever moved at the call of suffering humanity, and had greatly endeared himself to a large circle of friends and the community generally. He rests in hope. His disease was erysipelas, and the inflammation affecting the brain, he was deprived of his reason; but we believe he stood ready, and will share a part in the resurrection of the just. H. H. D.

COOLEY. In Hartford, Feb. 23d, 1871, Bro. Almon Cooley, aged forty-eight years.

Bro. C. was converted a few years since, under the labors of Bro. Grant, and although he seldom took an active part in meeting because of his temperament, yet he delighted in the association of the children of God, and his life evidenced the change in his affections. His disease was long and painful, yet he continued to labor until about three months before his death. A few days before his death, at his request, it was the privilege of the writer to converse and pray with him, and although hardly able to express himself, he seemed to have the rejoicing of the hope. H. H. D.

SCRUTON. Died, in [illegible], N. H., Feb. 1st, 1871, Mrs. Mary Scruton, widow of Mr. William Scruton, aged seventy-[illegible] years and nine months.

The subject of this notice was converted and united with the Freewill Baptist church in early life. In 1842 she became a believer in the immediate coming of Christ. She has ever lived a humble and devoted life, beloved and respected by all who knew her. For many of the last years of her life she suffered much from weakness and infirmities, all of which she bore with christian fortitude and patience. Her last hours were peaceful and happy. She fell asleep in hope of a resurrection at the last day. Words of comfort were spoken at her funeral by Eld. John Parsons, from Matt. 13: 28. JOSHUA ROBERTS.

BAXTER. Died, in Lake Village, N. H., Feb. 15th, 1871 (after much suffering), Sr. Miriam G., wife of Bro. John C. Baxter, aged forty years.

Although our sister suffered much, she bore it with much patience. She was baptized in 1854, and in her sickness had the support of Him who bore our sicknesses, and carried our sorrows. She leaves a husband, brothers and sisters, with other friends, to mourn their loss, but not as those who have no hope. Words of comfort and instruction were spoken at the funeral by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 22. J. G. SMITH.

PHINNEY. Fell asleep, Feb. 19th, Carrie, daughter of Sr. Sarah Phinney, of Olena, O., aged eighteen years.

Her illness had been protracted over a year, yet her death was unexpected to herself and widowed mother, who mourns not as those who sorrow "without hope," from which words of the apostle, the writer offered consolation to the bereaved, and admonition to the hearers gathered at her funeral. G. W. STETSON.

MARTIN. Died, in Portsmouth, N. H., March 6th, Lucy A. Martin, aged nineteen years.

She was converted some six years since, in Jackson, N. H., under the labors of Brn. Buzzell and Wheeler, and has been a consistent, devoted christian, though for the past five years a constant sufferer. She expressed herself as ready and waiting to go. E. OWEN.

PERKINS. Died, in Gilford, Sept. 15th, 1870, of consumption, Mary E., also Feb. 20th, 1871, Emma J., aged fifteen years, twin daughters of Bro. and Sr. A. H. Perkins.

Although young, they were ripe for the harvest. They sleep in Jesus, awaiting the resurrection morn. Consoling words were spoken by Elder N. Glidden. N. H. P.

RIDLEY. Died, in Wayne, Me., Feb. 27th, 1871, Mrs. Rebecca Ridley, aged seventy years.

Sr. Ridley enjoyed the blessed hope of seeing Jesus, and being made like him. Words of comfort were spoken from Rev. 14: 13. E. M. HAGGETT.

The subject of the above notice was a true-hearted christian woman. WM. A. FENN.

NEWELL. Died, in Granby, Mass., Feb. 9th, Mr. Luther Newell, aged seventy-two years.

Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. S. Ayers. C. NEWELL.

MOODY. Died, in Albion, Me., Jan. 25th, 1871, of canker rash, James Fred., son of Jonathan and Harriet Moody, aged seven years, five months, and twenty-eight days. M. J. WING.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

BERLIN, March 8. It is officially proclaimed that the day of the Emperor's return to Berlin shall be observed as a day of thanksgiving throughout the fatherland. No period of mourning will be appointed. The Emperor in person will open the Reichstag on the 21st inst.

A transport fleet is going to the Elbe to convey 90,000 released prisoners home to France.

There is much typhoid and plague among the cattle and horses in Paris; the animals, nevertheless, are said to be fit for food.

LONDON, 9th. Napoleon has addressed a communication to the President of the French Assembly, protesting against the vote by which that body declared his dynasty has forfeited the throne, as unjust and illegal. The Assembly, he says, was created only to make peace and it has exceeded its powers. The foundation of all public right is the plebiscite. To that he is ready to bow and to that alone.

LONDON, March 11. The Tablet states on authority that the French Government has offered the island of Corsica to the Pope in the event of his desiring to avail himself of it as a resort.

PARIS, March 11. Gen. Von Moltke has demanded the immediate departure from Paris of the regiments of Gardes Mobile now in the city, in conformity with the convention previously agreed upon. The departure of the troops is therefore expected.

A great deal of interest and discussion is elicited in this city with reference to the Assembly, and the early dissolution of that body is generally expected and considered a foregone conclusion.

PARIS, March 11. All is quiet to-day at Montmartre. The National Guard return the cannon in their possession to the Government on conditions that their organization is not to be dissolved, and the continuance of the allowance to each member of one franc and a half per day until work is resumed. In accordance with this arrangement the National Guard have already commenced to pack their cannon in the Garden of Luxembourg.

LONDON, March 14. A dispatch from Weimar says that preparations have been made to receive Emperor William and Gen. Von Moltke, who will pass through the city Thursday on their way to Berlin.

PARIS, March 13. The announcement of the death of Henri Rochefort was premature. He is still alive, but his death is expected daily. The city is gradually getting quiet and free from assaults on law and order by the irrepressible "Reds." The rioters of the 10th of December, who were condemned to death, will have their sentence commuted to imprisonment for life. The punishment of death for political offences is on all hands condemned, and the government has yielded to the effect of public opinion.

BERLIN, March 13. The Pope refuses to sanction the transfer of the Arch Episcopal Sees of Alsace and Lorraine from France to Germany.

A request has been transmitted by the Prussian government to the Holy Father desiring him not to select Prussia as his residence.

LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, the third son of Louis Bonaparte, ex-king of Holland, by Hortense, the daughter of the Empress Josephine by her first marriage with General Beauharnais, was born at the Tuileries, April 20th, 1808. His birth was announced through the whole Empire, from the Rhenish Provinces to the shores of Holland; from the Invalides to the castle of St. Angelo, by the exulting roar of the cannon. The rejoicing was the greater because the Emperor was not yet divorced, and, having no children, had adopted, by a plebiscite of the year 1812, the children of his brother Louis. The late Emperor's name was the first to be inscribed on the family register, and that proved to be an omen.

In Brief.

—— Since Charlemagne there have lived fifty-one German Emperors, till the Empire was dissolved by Napoleon in 1806. Their portraits have been all hung in niches in the Kaisersaal or Emperor's hall of the Roemer Palace in Frankfort. All niches but one are full, so that there is room for but one more portrait, that of William I. of Prussia, an evil omen which seems to signify that the new line of German Emperors will not be very extensive.——The organ in the Royal Albert Hall, London, will be the largest and most powerful in the world, having 9,000 pipes and 190 stops, inflated by two steam engines, built by Messrs. Penn.——A Turin letter says Kossuth is so very feeble in health that he can hardly live until spring. It is stated that he is extremely poor, and occupies very humble apartments in the city, steadily refusing to receive pecuniary aid from those who would be only too happy to help him.

Minna-Street Church.

(From the Spectator.)

DEAR SPECTATOR:—The work of God at Minna street is still increasing in power. We have held meetings, with a few exceptions, every day and night since before new year. We need rest, soul and body, and will suspend the meetings from this (Monday) afternoon until Friday, and shall then commence again, to continue as God may direct.

We have not kept account of the number of conversions, but I presume it would be safe to say that not less than one hundred persons have been either reclaimed from their backslidings, or brought into communion with God for the first time. But the great work has been in the hearts of those who have professed to know the Lord in other days, but at these meetings have seen new beauties in Christ, and have given themselves wholly to God in a perpetual covenant, and intend to be shining lights in the dark world.

But, you inquire, what will become of this when Elder Grant leaves? I answer, some will go into other churches with a power to do good for the Master, which they never had before. But a great many will stay with us at blessed Minna.

Some of my brethren expressed sympathy for me at conference, and expected me to have a hard time. Dear brethren, I thank you for your kindness and prayers, but up to this time it has been the happiest year of my life, and I can trust God for the future. A. M. BAILEY.

Mass. Conference.

The Advent Mass. Conference will hold their annual meeting for the choice of officers at Worcester, Mass., at the Advent Chapel, commencing Tuesday evening, April 4th, and continuing through the week, and over the following Sunday. There will be preaching afternoons and evenings, upon the subjects of our faith and the prophecies relative to our Lord's coming, as we hope to have a general gathering of the defenders of Bible truth. The business will be held Thursday morning, at nine o'clock A. M. We hope to be represented from every part of the State. Come, brethren, make up your minds to be at this meeting. Send delegates. Let them be chosen immediately. Come in the name of the Lord to this feast, ready for the Master's work.

GEO. A. STREETER, Secretary.

Conference.

The Lord will, the third quarterly session of the N. H. State Conference will be held at Farmington, commencing Thursday, April 20th, at 7 o'clock P. M., to continue over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is extended to all to come to the feast. It is hoped that the Lord will send such of his servants to administer the word as shall most glorify him, and benefit the church.

T. W. PIPER,
A. W. SIBLEY, } Committee.
C. H. FLETCHER,

R. I. and East. Ct.

The R. I. and East. Ct. Conference will hold its next quarterly session with the church at North Scituate, R. I., commencing Wednesday, April 5th, at two o'clock P. M. We hope that all who can, especially our preachers, will attend this meeting, and labor for the advancement of the cause of truth. C. H. SWEET, Secretary.

Notice.

Having closed my labors for the present in West Thornton, N. H., I would say I am at liberty to go and labor where the door may be open and God in his providence shall call. My P. O. address, for a few weeks, will be Castleton, Vt., care of Eld. S. G. Matthewson. A. W. SIBLEY.

Notice.

The church in Brewer Village, Me., having opened a place for a Sabbath School and preaching purposes, would say to the preaching brethren, Come over and help us. God is with us and moves in a mysterious way.

Per order of the Brn., L. P. FOWLES.

Notice.

As I have considerable money to make out on my Hymn Book between this and April 1st, I hope that those owing me will remember my necessities, and send to me, if possible, between March 1st and 20th, at South Exeter, Me. If at any other time, address me at Machiasport, Me., my home.

If any brethren have sent me letters in the last six or eight weeks containing money, which I have not acknowledged, or calling for books or Admonitions, which they have not received, I wish they would inform me directly, stating all the facts, as I fear that some letters may be lost in this time. I. K. LOMBARD.

Notice.

As Bro. C. W. Rathburn, of Washington Village, R. I., formerly of the Methodist E. church, has received the light of the gospel of Christ's soon coming kingdom, and kindred truths, and feels called of God to preach the gospel, I cheerfully commend him to all the churches of God.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Notice.

The church of God, formerly worshiping in the Quincy Hall, 127 Lacock Street, Allegheny City, Pa., having hired the Duquesne Hall, corner of Third and Market Streets, Pittsburgh, Pa., will commence meetings in the same, Sunday, March 26th, and services will be held (Lord willing) every Sunday, at 10½ A. M., 3 and 7 P. M., and on Thursday evening for prayer and conference. The writer has engaged to preach the word for them every other Sunday. Bro. Jonas Wendell is requested by the church to be with us at the opening of the new hall. JOHN T. ONGLEY.

German Tracts.

I will send my German Tracts gratis (except postage), to any one who wants them for himself, or to distribute. I have a good supply. Send your orders to L. REIMER, 1006 Chesnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE FASTIDIOUS HEARER'S MIND.

"Who preaches here next Sunday?
I'd like to know right well;
I hope the clerk has some one
Who'll do his work up well.

"I'm sick of these small teachers,
Who stammer and feel bad;
The fact is, we want preachers
Who can preach—good or bad.

"I hate to hear the speaker
Say, 'Brethren, pray for me!'
I go to church a seeker,
The present truth to see.

"I want to hear on doctrine,
The coming of the Lord,
The glorious restitution,
And nature of reward.

"I do enjoy to listen
On the unconscious state,
If preachers would but hasten,
Nor keep us quite so late.

"The Abrahamic promise
Is very dear to me,
Unless handled by a novice,
Who would a preacher be.

"The doom of the ungodly
I love to hear explained;
But some preachers dress oddly,
And shout till I'm ashamed.

"I'm glad to have the difference
Between the faith we hold,
And that of other christians,
Set forth in language bold.

"I want a man decided
In his religious views,
Nor fellowship confided
In Orthodox or Jews.

"We're a peculiar people,
Have a specific work,
Outside a church with steeple,
Give us the straight out-talk.

"It does not so much matter
About the man at home;
This light some one must scatter,
The kingdom soon will come.

"We heard of good salvation
When we were in the church;
Truth for this dispensation
Leaves that far in the lurch.

"The gospel of the kingdom
Is all we care to know;
Give us a man of wisdom
This glorious seed to sow.

"We'll pay him for his labor,
Wish him to do the work,
Nor brother, friend, or neighbor,
Intrude his after talk."

Oh! fearful declination
From apostolic way;
List, church and congregation—
What doth the Spirit say?

"Preach thou the word, in season
And out, preach still the same;
Reprove, exhort, and reason,
Warn men in Jesus' name.

"I've set thee as a watchman,
And blood will be required;
To show mankind their danger,
Needs men of God inspired.

"Cry thou aloud and spare not;
My people show their sin,
The blessed work that Christ wrought,
Makes men all pure within."

But oh! the wondrous "itching ear,"
Men somehow do possess;
Great God, give thou the ear to hear,
Thine own word deign to bless.

Oh! give us moral likeness,
Dear blessed Lord, to thee;
Thy Spirit's light and guidance,
So we may reign with thee.

LETTER FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

To the Crisis:—This afternoon Eld. Grant baptized some twenty persons, at Dr. Sawtelle's church. The house was crowded with interested spectators, and those gathered from mere motives of curiosity. The ceremony was preceded by some pertinent words from the Elder, and the administration of the rite seemed to create a deep impression on those who were lookers on, as well as those who were buried in the water.

When the Elder first came to this city, the Evangel, the Baptist weekly published in this city, said some unkind words of him, warning those in authority in the Baptist churches of the city against admitting the Elder to their pulpits; but the editor of that little paper is probably sorry for his banishing paragraph by this time. At all events, the leading Baptist clergyman of this city has not been guided by the shut-the-door advice of the denominational organ. For here is the Elder, in his baptizing gown!

Last evening, at Minna street church (a church the locality of which is now as well known as the site of the great Catholic Cathedral, though comparatively few knew of its existence three months ago), the Elder delivered a discourse designed to show how it is that there are so many creeds in the world. Of course the argument was against the spiritualizing interpretation of the word of God, and the illustrations were on the nature of man, state of the dead, the second coming, and the earthly inheritance. The Elder now seems to have absolutely free course in the pretty little chapel. And certainly the welcoming and associate minister is one of the best co-operators that could have been provided. Of him, more anon.

And now that the Elder is away from his sanctum, and in no wise responsible, or only in a remote degree, for the tenor of the correspondence—always providing it is serious and sensible—I hope his local representative will tolerate a few of the personalities I deem it just to write. The praise of men is not the Elder's object of ambition, nor is it my disposition or habit to sound eulogies in behalf of my fellow men. I can find fault more readily. And I know it is of no advantage to the paper to have this or that preacher extolled for his work, the actual and expected reward for which comes from the highest source.

But I want to say that the Elder's style of preaching is peculiarly adapted for this latitude. It's lack of all flourish, the fact that it is often or usually devoid of rythm or oratorical cadence, that he never indulges in fancy antitheses, that he marches straight forward in his statements and reasonings, and does not present in any one discourse more advertisements of other topics than truths in regard to the announced subject,—these and similar characteristics have contributed to retain and convert audiences of men and women, while many an eloquent divine in the same time, and with great comparative advantages, as we would naturally count them, has seen no good or large results. I have heard many say that at the first they thought the Elder's manner of delivery rather hard, but on rehearing they are delighted with its simplicity and precision. I have experienced this myself.

Now the point justifying this paragraph—if it is justifiable—is this: should it not be the special aim of the ministers of truth to acquire (if they have it not as a natural endowment) an eminently direct and pungent manner and style of speech?

I do believe that if the Elder had been what is termed an "elegant orator," he would have met with comparative failure in his mission here. As it is, I am not extravagant in announcing that he has shaken the city. The number of candidates for baptism gives no indication of the breadth of the influence he has exerted. A large number of Episcopalians, including several church vestrymen, have said to me that they were convinced of the truth of the prophetical interpretations the Elder has given, and have spoken of the frequency with which they met men of like views adopted from the same preaching. And the discussion and the Platt's Hall discourses have manifestly checked the progress of Spiritualism in this city. This may be said to be a point that is almost universally conceded in San Francisco. Straight talk has accomplished this. There has been no hurrah about it, but unadorned proclamations of thorough conversational work. Some are beginning to express their dread of the time when the Elder must go. He will leave a large congregation of believers.

Praise where it rightfully belongs; gratitude from hence to the liberal men and women in the East who have enabled the Elder to open and continue his popular Hall meetings. I have written more especially that the generous-hearted persons referred to might have the satisfaction of knowing that their gifts have been of great service for the dissemination of the truth.

At the prayer meeting last evening, preceding the sermon, a middle-aged gentleman, who said that he had been a christian for thirty years, gave utterance to his surprise at the simplicity and clearness of the Bible statement of the nature and destiny of man, as the Elder has taught. He wondered how he had lived so long and read the Bible so much without finding out the truth of man's origin, composition and future, as he now beheld it. Well, the force of education and the ties of sectarian creed are tremendous.

I well remember when I first learned the truth in regard to the great topics mentioned. I was a lad, not yet fourteen years of age. I happened accidentally to hear that on a certain evening there was to be preaching (subject not stated) in the Academy Hall in our village. I think I was the only boy in the audience. I have reason to think that the speaker was Elder Jacob Blain. At all events, the man who preached stated in the course of his sermon that he had been a Baptist minister, and still retained his "good standing." The discourse was plain, and to me immediately convincing. In fact, I became aware during the preaching that I had never really believed that the wicked were eternally tormented. I fairly ran home when the meeting closed, ran up into my bed room, and knelt down and thanked God that I had been permitted to hear the glorious truth that had just been made known in my presence. And I have never doubted the "doctrines" from that hour to this. Let all the children of our generation hear the "sound doctrine," and I am satisfied the proportion of literal to spiritual interpreters of the Bible would be reversed from the present array. But time may not last for that.

At the close of the sermon last evening, Rev. Mr. Bailey declared that he had seen one of the most important epochs in his life since the series of protracted meetings had commenced. What this imports may be more specifically made known by the Elder by and by, and in his editorial columns. I accepted it as meaning that Rev. Mr. Bailey had become convinced of the correctness of the Elder's preaching in all doctrinal respects. If this is so, there is now a church in San Francisco where the whole counsel of God will be set forth without hindrance from this time until the King comes in his glory.

Minister Bailey is a "character" worth studying, because he is a friend worth having. From his own occasional, public remarks, I learn that he was born in the mountainous portion of Kentucky—which does not locate his place of nativity too closely—and that his educational advantages when young were not very great. He is a very large-framed man, over six feet high, with a thick shock of iron-gray hair, which grows straight out and is cut close, so that each particular hair maintains its perpendicular responsibility (in this respect having somewhat the appearance of Rev. Dr. Todd of Pittsfield, Mass., when he was in his vigorous half-century), and blessed with a comely and genial countenance, which when he becomes excited in speech fairly radiates good fellowship and love. When he takes up the great Bible from his desk, or from the infidels' Lyceum, and holds it up with a muscular ease that is astounding to a spectator of not more than medium strength, emphasizing by this style of gesture his expressions of attachment to the word of God and his reliance upon its promises, there is a powerful earnestness exhibited which is magnetizing to a delightful degree. He is physically and spiritually a giant; and yet as gentle in his social manners as a little child. Such is Barnabas, in San Francisco.

When the Elder has closed his evening discourse, Mr. Bailey will advance to the desk and utter an appendix so apt, harmonious, sealing in its character and force, that all the people listening feel sad when he thinks it best to say, "We will close with the Doxology and the Benediction." C.

QUARTERLY SESSION.

The Mass. Conference, according to appointment, commenced meeting Tuesday, Feb. 7th, at the Advent Chapel in Westboro, Mass. The meeting continued afternoons and evenings through the week, and over the following Sunday.

The preaching brethren present to proclaim the words of this life were Elders Munger, Boutell, Barnes, Cotton, Cunningham, and Goodrich. The preaching was well adapted to comfort the faithful early Advent believers, for by the signs they could see almost the golden City, the New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven. The meeting was a good one; all seemed interested. The snow storm deterred some from attending a day or two, but the interest increased to the last.

As there was no business very important to come before the conference, we concluded to put all over to the annual meeting to be held in April, and devote all our time and energy to building up the cause of Christ, by converting men to the love of truth and the coming of Jesus. The Lord was with us, and while I staid the spirit of love prevailed. It was evident that the spirit of early Adventism was gaining among us, and growing more blessed from day to day.

I left Bro. Goodrich and others to stay over the Sunday, and I learn with pleasure that the interest increased, and many were refreshed, and concluded the Second Advent doctrine with the signs of the Lord's soon coming is as good as ever; that it is wholesome to preach, and more blessed still to believe.

The communion of the Lord's Supper was observed Sunday, a precious season. The church in Westboro received us gladly, and did their best to make us comfortable. They have a good chapel, and we wish them prosperity in the work of God and the truth, so they may have love, joy and peace, and be able to have the word of life through Christ, and a resurrection of the dead at Jesus' coming to give life, preached in their house till the Savior comes.

We as a conference feel very grateful for the favors bestowed. Their hearts and houses were thrown open to us, and I can but hope it may revive and strengthen them in the doctrine we hold so dear. God bless the people of Westboro with everlasting life. Amen.

L. Boutell.

HIS OWN LOGIC.

Mr. J. S. Loveland, who travels about the country, delivering lectures against the Bible and the christian religion, recently addressed the good people of Dixon. His theme of discourse was: "The contradictions of the Bible." He called attention to certain verbal differendes of statement in the Gospels. He then remarked that superficial apologists for the word were ready to believe that all was inspired, and that these apparently different statements only served to strengthen the testimony given, inasmuch as they demonstrated that there was no collusion on the part of the writers of the Gospels. Then, to gain his point, he employed that form of argument which has been styled the reductio ad absurdum. He supposed a case: A lawyer appears in court to defend a client; he brings forward his witnesses. They severally testify; but fail to agree. In several particulars there are differences of statement. The lawyer makes his argument. He recapitulates the statements of witnesses, admits contradictions, but argues: "Gentlemen of the jury, these contradictions only serve to strengthen the testimony; they show that the witnesses are honest; there has been no collusion: therefore, gentlemen of the jury, because of these contradictions, I demand that you render a verdict for my client!

As his lecture closed he gave the audience permission to ask him questions, and sat down. A gentleman in the congregation rose up and catechised the speaker substantially as follows. He assumed that he had a case to try in court, and put Mr. Loveland on the stand as a witness.

Gent.—"Mr. Loveland, is it true that you were once a minister of the Methodist church?"

L.—"Yes, sir; I was."

G.—"Did you profess conversion, claiming that you had passed from death unto life?"

L.—"I did so profess."

G.—"And is it true that you declared before the church and conference that you were called by the Holy Spirit to preach the gospel?"

L.—"I did so affirm."

G.—"How long did you preach under such vows?"

G.—Is it true that you renounced your church and your religion, declaring it all to be a delusion, embracing spiritualism?"

L.—"I did renounce it, and taught spiritualism."

G.—"How long did you teach spiritualism?"

L.—"About six years."

G.—"You were earnest and positive in affirming it to be true?"

L.—"I was."

G.—"Is it true that you have also renounced spiritualism, declaring it to be false and corrupt?"

L.—"I have renounced it, believing it to be false."

The gentleman then addressed the court, remarking that he was done with the witness. Turning to the audience, he said: "Gentlemen of the jury, you have heard the testimony of the witness; you see it is full of contradictions, because of these conflicting statements, you must be convinced of its truth! I, therefore, demand a verdict for my client."

The audience saw the point, and poor Loveland felt himself vanquished. He made an effort to defend his position, but the people were not in the humor to listen to his sophistries.—California Christian Advocate.

REJOICE.

This is a duty which is enjoined upon every one who puts his trust in the Lord of hosts; yet we seem at times to forget that we are bidden by the inspired writer to "rejoice evermore." 1 Thess. 5: 16. Surely we, his chosen ones, have much cause for exceeding joy, being saved as we are by faith in Christ, and living in hope of his soon coming to restore all things; for we know "in that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people." Isa. 28: 5.

In Egypt it is said the large caravans, by which they transport their goods and make their pilgrimages, are beguiled of the tediousness of the way, and cheered onward, by having camels with bells upon their necks or about their legs, the sound of which could be heard a great distance. The servants who have the care of the camels, trudging along on foot, sing all the night, making with the music of the bells quite a joyful sound. Should we not, then, learn a lesson from this ancient people? We are traveling on our way Zionward. Let us not give up to despondency, making life a drag, but rather look aloft, keeping our eyes heavenward; then we will not see the unpleasant things of the earth, nor feel its gloomy darkness, for "blessed is the people that know the joyful sound; they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance." Ps. 89: 15. Nowhere in God's word are the unrighteous told to rejoice; the impenitent sinner has reason to sorrow, because in that great day "terrors shall make him afraid on every side"; he is in danger of eternal death, but the ransomed are heirs of glory and eternal life. The Psalmist says of the ungodly, "So let the wicked perish in the presence of God, but let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God; yea, let them exceedingly rejoice." Ps. 98: 2, 3.

Yet the objector may inquire, Does not the "Preacher" say (11: 9), "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes"? Very true; but why not quote the text in full—"But know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment"; hence, we see the former part of this oft-abused verse is a sort of irony; as for instance, "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still." There can be no true joy out of Christ, consequently there can be no true source of rejoicing to any but the pure in heart.

We are under the curse, 'tis true, and we are tempted daily and hourly by sin; yet the Spirit helpeth our infirmities; we have mental sorrows and anxieties, worldly troubles and cares; nevertheless our brother Paul says (Rom. 8: 18), "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." Not many of us are called upon to endure what he did, and perhaps we murmur more than is meet. David says (Ps. 73: 26), "My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever." What a comforting assurance this is. Again we read—"Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains; for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted." Isa. 49: 13.

If we go about continually wearing "sackcloth and ashes," as though the world was a vast grave-yard and our friends were all dead, we do violence to the truth, and prevent men from becoming christians; no one wishing to adopt such a sombre religion; we should go on our way cheerfully, allowing the light of God's reconciled countenance to shine through us, causing us to speak kindly and to make all who come in contact with us feel cheered by our freshness, and then we shall show by our actions that "the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Ps. 126: 3. We will prove these words of Hudson—

"How happy is the christian's state;
His sins are all forgiven;
A cheering ray confirms the grace,
And lifts his hopes to heaven."

And now, dear brethren, amidst earth's thickening darkness of sin and false doctrines, amidst all its delusions, cares, afflictions, and persecutions, we can and do rejoice, knowing that in the shadow of His wings we are safe. All the things which are now upon us, and are yet to come, though causing men's hearts to fail them, are to us harbingers of rest and peace, being the signs of the soon coming of our great Comforter. O what a cheering hope is ours, enabling us to delight in the Almighty, and to look up to God.

Let us serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling, so that, when He shall appear, we may "come before his presence with singing." In the New Earth we shall rejoice all the day, and in his righteousness we shall be exalted. No matter what we have to endure for a short time here; even if we sit in darkness of sorrow, "the Lord shall be a light unto us," and with Habakkuk of old we will say—"Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." 3: 18.

Finally, my brethren, "rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, Rejoice." "Behold, I come quickly." "Hold fast that thou hast, that no man take thy crown." To him that overcometh is the reward to be given. Then, brethren, glory ye in his name!

Art thou sorrowing? Art thou sad?
No ray of hope to make thee glad?
Wouldst thou assuage thine inward grief?
And dost thou seek a sweet relief?
Only believe.

— God did not take up the three Hebrews out of the furnace of fire, but he came down and walked with them in it. He did not remove Daniel from the den of lions; he sent his angel to close the mouths of the beasts. He did not answer the prayer of Paul to remove the thorn in the flesh, but he gave him a sufficiency of grace to sustain him.

Faith vs. Practice.—A practical philanthropist, who picks drunkards out of the mire, gets them washed and clothed, and restored to their right minds, once visited a poor widow on a cold winter day. "Have faith in Christ," said one, "he will help you." Quoth the practical man, "It is not faith in Christ she lacks; she has as much of that as you or I: it is wood she stands in need of. Her faith will not save her with the thermometer at zero. Do you think the Savior will come and tip up two feet of wood at her door? No such thing. She has got faith, but wants firewood." The missionary went his way; there was no more that he could do. The practical man had the wood there in an hour.

True Peace of Mind.—True peace of mind does not depend, as some seem to suppose, on the external incidents of riches and poverty, of health and sickness, of friendship and enmities. It has no necessary dependence upon society or seclusion—upon dwelling in cities or in the desert—upon the possession of temporal power, or a condition of temporal insignificance and weakness. Let the heart be right—let it be fully united with the will of God, and we shall be entirely contented with those circumstances in which Providence has seen fit to place us, however unpropitious they may be in a worldly point of view. He who gains the victory over himself, gains the victory over all his enemies.—Upham.

Self-Denial.—Without the real spirit of self-denial, high excellence of character cannot be attained; and hence Jesus declared that those who would come after him, must deny themselves as well as bear the cross.

SANCTIFIED LOGICALLY.

During the early days of December, 1870, Mrs. G., and myself spent some days in revival work with Rev. C. D. Battelle, the beloved pastor of the church in London, O. Among the seekers of full salvation there, was a Mrs. C., who for a while could not find the way of faith. At the close of one of the meetings, she was about to leave the church with her hope still deferred, when several friends gathered around her, seeking to aid her in her search for the path. Presently one of these friends turned to me, as I stood near, saying, "Bro. G., can't you help our friend?" I replied, "I presume not, if she is not helped by the friends now standing round her;" still I approached her to utter any word that might be given me. My thought at once recurred to the precise steps by which I found full salvation myself many years ago, and it struck me as possible that Mrs. C. might be induced to take similar steps, so I said to her,

"Sister C. do you want full salvation enough to be ready to abandon all you have and are for it, into the hand of God for time and eternity?"

She answered with emphasis, "Yes."

"Do you do it now?"

"Yes."

Answer me then these questions: "Who has required you thus to come out from the world and be separate?"

"Jesus."

"And you say you know your consecration is complete?"

"Yes, I know it is."

"Who gave you the gracious desire to make this consecration?"

"Jesus."

"And who gave you the light to make it?"

"Jesus."

"And who gave you the power to make it?"

"Jesus."

"So then, Jesus utters the command, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you;" and you have done just what the command enjoins, and done it by the help of Jesus at every step. God has wrought in you to will and to do in this whole matter, so that every step of your consecration is his work in your soul. Would he then command you to make the consecration, promising to receive you, and then assist you in making it, and after all refuse to fulfill his promise? How could he do this and be a God of truth? Would you dare to say that he rejects you?"

"No."

"But he either rejects you or receives you."

"Yes, but I don't feel as I expected to."

"It is not a question of feeling but of faith. Do you believe that Jesus Christ is true?"

"Yes," she cried, "I do believe it."

"Dare to say it then, 'Thou dost receive me.'"

She looked up and tremblingly uttered the words. New strength came at once from God, and she still repeated, many times over, "Thou dost receive me," for the very words in which her halting faith had found a vehicle seemed precious to her lips.

We tarried several days after the occurrence and met this happy christian many times, but never took her hand that she did not look devoutly up and say, "Thou dost receive me."

Salvation in all its degrees is by faith. Whatever else a seeker does or fails to do, he will still fall short of the prize, till he hangs his soul on the veracity of God. True, there is no promise for any man either of justification or of sanctifying grace, till his soul be completely surrendered to God, according to the light upon the conscience at the present moment; but when the sacrifice of all is laid upon the altar, with such willingness, that the offerer would gladly find something more to give, then the offering is accepted, as sure as the word of God is true. To doubt the fact is to doubt God's word, and to doubt God's word is to make him a liar.

The Israelites at Kadish Barnea entered not in because of unbelief, but were turned back to perish, even that whole generation in the wilderness. So it is with many. They reach a point where a single act of faith would bring them into the land of corn and wine and oil, and then, through fear of presumption in believing the plain word of God, are betrayed into the presumption of disbelieving. He that believeth shall be saved. He that believeth not shall be damned. Believe in God, my brother. Don't say, "I can't." It is an insult to say of any man, "I can't believe him." Believe. You can believe, and the power to believe in Jesus is the power to be saved. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Let me help you a little if I can. Are you now in a state of complete surrender, so that your will is entirely supple in the hand of God? Then you have met the conditions, and the promises are yours. They are checks on the bank of heaven every one. Come boldly to the throne of grace then, and in the name of your great endorser demand the face of the promise. If you indulge in unbelief, you treat God's paper with contempt, and by throwing away the promise, rob your soul of the blessing it conveys. Don't cast away any one of the exceeding great and precious promises, for they are given unto us, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature.—Guide to Holiness.

A Title to which there is no Title.—Why should we prefix "Reverend" to certain persons' names? If a man is truly reverend, it is not from his title but from his character. We know of clergymen who inspire very little reverence; we know of laymen who inspire a great deal. Why attribute to one what he does not possess, and deny to another what he does? There might, for instance, be a propriety in saying the Rev. William Cullen Bryant, even though this good man is not a minister; but the fitness of things is violated by affixing an artificial reverence to some clergyman who has no other claim to it than from the office which he holds. And as to the conventional sanctity attaching to the clerical function—the "divinity that doth hedge" a minister—we cannot see what there is more sacred in one man's standing in a pulpit than in another's sitting in a pew. Why should a priest, any more than a parishioner, be called "reverend?" Certainly it is a rare fact in the history of any church when the minister proves himself to be the best man in the congregation. He does not derive his flattering title from any real or supposed moral superiority over his brethren, many of whom are more than his peers; and he ought therefore to refuse a designation which makes him apparently say to his fellow-man, "I am holier than thou."—Golden Age.

☞ The following rules for the government of children, which were first presented in one of Mr. Jacob Abbott's books, have been of great service to many teachers:

1. When you consent, consent cordially.
2. When you refuse, refuse finally.
3. When you punish, do it good-naturedly.
4. Command often.
5. Never scold.

If parents and teachers would bear these simple directions in mind, children would be better and happier.

☞ Says the Psalmist: "He maketh my feet like hinds' feet." A negro preacher read it "hen's feet," and proceeded to say, "dat a hen in de hen-roost, when it falls asleep, tightens its grip so's not to fall off. And dat's how true faith, my bredren, holds on to de rock."

☞ God can do business on a very small capital. He can take your one talent and make it ten. He can take a man small in his own estimation, small in the estimation of others, and small in all natural endowments, and make him a Samson in spiritual might. Do not, then, despise the one talent. God makes the weak things of the world to confound the mighty.

☞ Rev. Dr. Tyng met an emigrant family going west. On one of the wagons there hung a jug with the bottom knocked out. "What is that?" asked the doctor. "Why, it's my Taylor jug," said the man. "What is a Taylor jug?" asked the doctor again. "I had a son in General Taylor's army in Mexico, and the General always told him to carry his whisky jug with a hole in the bottom, and that's it. It is the best invention I ever met with for hard drinkers."

☞ No one thing occasions so much trouble to printers as the blind manner in which proper names are written. It is often impossible to tell w from m, n from u, a from i, and so on, etc. Hall and Hale are rarely written so distinctly that a stranger can decide which is correct.

AS THE STARS.—Dan. 12: 3.

See how calmly star on star
Through the heavens are wheeling;
Far from wrath, from tumult far,
Far from cannons pealing.

Thus in night like sons of day,
Knowing no declining,
Should the saints pursue their way,
Ever brightly shining;

Turning many to the light,
And to God its giver,
Till they shine in glory bright,
Like the stars forever.

LUTHER'S SNOW SONG.

On a cold, dark night, when the wind was blowing hard and the snow was falling fast, Conrad, a worthy citizen of a little town in Germany, sat playing his flute, while Ursula, his wife, was preparing supper. They heard a sweet voice singing outside—

"Foxes to their holes have gone,
Every bird unto its nest;
But I wander here alone,
And for me there is no rest."

Tears filled the good man's eyes as he said, "What a fine, sweet voice! What a pity it should be spoiled by being tried in such weather!"

"I think it is the voice of a child. Let us open the door and see," said his wife, who had lost a little boy not long before, and whose heart was opened to take pity on the little wanderer.

Conrad opened the door and saw a ragged child, who said—

"Charity, good sir, for Christ's sake!"

"Come in, my little one," said he. "You shall rest with me for the night."

The boy said, "Thank God," and entered. The heat of the room made him faint, but Ursula's kind care soon revived him. They gave him some supper, and then he told that he was the son of a poor miner, and wanted to be a scholar. He wandered about and sang, and lived on the money people gave him. His kind friends would not let him talk much, but sent him to bed. When he was asleep they looked in upon him, and were so pleased with his pleasant countenance that they determined to keep him, if he was willing. In the morning they found that he was only too glad to remain with them.

They sent him to school, and afterward he went into a monastery. There, one day, he found a Bible, which he read, and learned the way of life. The sweet voice of the little singer became the strong echo of the good news—"Justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Conrad and Ursula, when they took that little street singer into their house, little thought that they were nourishing the great champion of the Reformation. The poor child was Martin Luther! "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers."

The following is the whole of the song which Luther sang on that memorable night:

Lord of heaven! lone and sad,
I would lift my heart to thee;
Pilgrim in a foreign land,
Gracious Father, look on me.
I shall neither faint nor die,
While I walk beneath thine eye.

I will stay my faith on thee,
And will never fear to tread
Where the Savior-Master leads:
He will give me daily bread.
Christ was hungry, Christ was poor—
He will feed me from his store.

Foxes to their holes have gone,
Every bird unto its nest;
But I wander here alone,
And for me there is no rest.
Yet I neither faint nor fear,
For the Savior Christ is here.

If I live, he'll be with me;
If I die, to him I go.
He'll not leave me, I will trust him,
And my heart no fear shall know.
Sin and sorrow I defy,
For on Jesus I rely.

How a whole Family became Blind.—There lives a family in Dorchester county, every dark-eyed male member of which, for the past fifty years, has gone blind at the age of twenty to twenty-five years. Those with blue eyes escape the terrible circumstance, which we lay before our readers as we heard it: Some sixty years since—so goes the story—a beautiful black-eyed girl of twenty, for some cause or other, lost her eyesight. Her misfortune brought penury and want with it. Being reduced to beggary, she was won't to go abroad asking alms. During one of her journeys she visited the neighborhood in which resided the ancestors of those who are now sightless. Instead of her helpless condition exciting as it should have done, a feeling of sympathy, she was treated with ridicule by some of the younger members of the house her evil star had led her into. Two of the boys, as a matter of mere deviltry, took her out, promising to conduct her to a place where plenty awaited. Instead of giving her a safe conduct, they carried her into a swamp and left her. It is said that she cried out beseeching them to put her on the public road, but they heeded not her lamentations. Finding herself about to be deserted among the tangled brushwood, she turned her prayer to a curse, asking her Maker, in her revengeful anger, to punish her betrayers by making their offsprings for several generations as helpless as she was. It is said that she was found dead in the swamp, having perished from hunger and cold. This may appear somewhat romantic, but whether the traditionary part of it be false or true, it is assuredly a fact that the male offspring of the family referred to lose their sight as indicated. Hundreds of persons in Dorchester county will verify it.—Cambridge (Mass.) Herald.

An Incident.—The late Dr. Spencer said that when he was a lad, his father gave him a little tree that had just been grafted. One day, in his father's absence, he let the colt into the garden, and the young animal broke off the graft. It was mended, however, on the following day, and continued to grow finely. Years passed, and young Spencer became a man and a minister. Some time after he became a pastor, he made a visit to the old homestead where he spent his boyhood. His little sapling had become a large tree, and was loaded with apples. During the night after his arrival at the homestead, there was a violent thunder-shower, and the wind blew fearfully. He rose early in the morning, and on going out found his tree lying prostrate upon the ground. The wind had twisted it off, just where the colt broke it when it was a sapling. Probably the storm would not have broken it at all, if it had not been broken when it was small.

"I-can't give lots of money, and I can't sew cloaks and gowns for poor children, because I'm not rich enough or big enough, mamma. But I'll tell you what I can do; I can 'highway and hedge 'em'?" said a bright little girl,

CANCERS CURED.

As there are some of our brethren suffering from this worst of diseases, and are doomed to die by the inch, it is duty to tell such where they can get cured. Three years ago last fall, Bro. Myers, of Pownal, Vt., had a cancer under his eye; and as his brother had just died with one, I recommended him to Bro. Moses E. Davis, of Concord, N. H.; and one week made him sound (so he told me); and I have seen him since. Bro. Levi Allen, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., last month had a cancer come on the upper lip. I recommended him to go to Dr. Davis, and in ten days he had it out, and is now rejoicing. Others I know have been cured by him, and some that other cancer doctors had given up. These brethren who have escaped a terrible death, think their cures ought to be made public through the Crisis. Interest for the suffering is all I have in this matter.

There are different kinds of cancers. One kind the wood sorrel will kill, and if not far advanced, the common sorrel, mixed with cranberries, equal parts, made into a salve, by stewing them. Others, by other plasters used for the same purpose. But more malignant cases have seemed incurable except by Dr. Davis' plaster; this I know, and so do others. Unless the cancer is out of sight, inside, Dr. Davis has killed and can kill it every time. The discovery was accidental, or unsought. He does not advertise as others do, and refuses to make a great show for the sake of making money out of the afflicted.

Such as see fit to communicate with him, will know what he will do in regard to furnishing the knowledge to cure one of the worst diseases human nature is heir to. Direct to Dr. Moses E. Davis, Concord, N. H. I believe this notice will save the life of others, as many have been saved in the past.

Hemorrhage from the Throat and Lungs.—We have frequently met with ministers whose labors and exposure had induced hemorrhage. So unpleasant and dangerous a physical disturbance as this may warrant us in quoting a brief paragraph upon its cause and cure:

"Hemorrhage, except as it occurs as the result of accident, excitement, sudden congestion, etc., is owing to an impure and depraved condition of the blood, or a flabby and relaxed state of the tissues and the coats of the blood-vessels, or to both combined. Hemorrhage is always to be feared when it occurs as a result of the last mentioned conditions. In these cases the blood must be purified, and the tissues of the body strengthened and invigorated. To this end the patient should lead an out-of-door life, with plenty of active exercise, take a daily towel-bath with thorough friction of the skin, and, when practicable, a sun-bath, and take absolutely nothing into the stomach except the plainest and purest food, and pure, soft water. Well-ripened fruits and graham bread, and other simple preparations of the different grains, should constitute the diet, or at least the main part of it. To relieve an attack of hemorrhage of the throat or lungs, keep the patient perfectly quiet, give him pieces of ice to swallow, put ice-cold cloths upon the throat or over the lungs, as the case may be, and put the hands and feet in water as hot as can be borne."

With ministers of the gospel, a remote cause of this dangerous bleeding is often found in the overstraining and careless exposure of the lungs and vocal organs. A proper management and care of the voice is therefore the duty of this class of public speakers. Nine-tenths of the throat difficulties among ministers are the result either of exposure or over exertion—either of ignorance of one's own physical organization, or of criminal exposure to conditions of weather against which frail humanity is not proof.—Ex.

Influence of Sunshine.—Light and sunshine are indispensable to our highest physical well-being. Most persons in our larger cities and towns are very much shut out from the sun's rays, and the effect of this confinement is visibly depicted on the colorless cheek and faded countenance. Human beings, like plants, cannot thrive if constantly excluded from the sunshine. Farmers know something about this, as their ruddy faces and usually stalwart frames attest. Their common sense in regard to air and sunshine is commendable, and goes far to mitigate the numerous pernicious habits to which many are addicted.

The Herald of Health says of the characteristics of wholesome water:—1. It should be transparent. 2. Nothing should settle to the bottom after it stands a few hours. 3. It should be devoid of smell or taste. 4. It should be well aerated, and of such temperature as to render it neither flat, nor so cold but it can be drank in moderate quantity without injury.

Sick Headache.—Sick headache is caused by overloading the stomach—by indigestion. It may be relieved by drinking very freely of warm water, whether it produces vomiting or not. If the feet are cold, warm them. To prevent it, let plainness, simplicity and temperance preside at the table.

THE SAVIOR'S PROMISE.

Children of the kingdom,
Hear your Savior's voice,—
"Lo! I am with you alway,"
Then let your hearts rejoice.

"Lo! I am with you alway,"—
What cheering words for thee;
It is the Savior's promise,
To cheer both you and me.

"Lo! I am with you alway";
In each dark day and hour;
Not earth or hell can harm thee,
I shield thee by my power.

"Lo! I am with you alway,"
To make thy burdens light;
I fill all earth and heaven;
Lean on my arm of might.

"Lo! I am with you alway";
Though evil tongues assail,
I bring their schemes to nothing,
Unless thee they can't prevail.

"Lo! I am with you alway,"
Though dearest ones have left;
O, let my presence cheer thee
When of thy loved bereft.

"Lo! I am with you alway,"
Let nothing thee dismay;
I'll strengthen thee and shield thee,
Through all thy devious way.

"Lo! I am with you alway,"
In sorrow, pain, and death;
When vigor crowns thy pathway,
When I remand thy breath.

"Lo! I am with you alway,"
Until this world shall end;
Then thou shalt share my glory,
Where life and bliss will blend.

THE BIBLE AND SCIENTISTS.

There are many things revealed in the Scriptures which appear to the learned men of this world exceedingly foolish, especially to the pretended and boastful wise in human knowledge; and there are also many things which this class deem even beyond the power of the Almighty God to accomplish, which are the subject of divine prediction. The most intelligent and distinguished for their worldly wisdom often seem the least to comprehend God's wisdom and power, as declares the apostle,—"Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called." 1 Cor. 1 . 25, 26.

These, with comparatively few noble exceptions, in all ages and generations have been arrayed against the truth. The Bible also predicts the same to be the case to the end. What has been is to be. "History repeats itself" in this particular, and the intellectualism and power of this world will be found on the side of error, and against God and his truth.

We must make up our minds to this consideration; and if there is anything which demonstrates the natural infidelity, depravity, and pride of the human heart and understanding, it is this ever-repeated fact; and it establishes the truth of the Scriptures which these men seek to destroy beyond all equivocation and gainsaying, with the thoughtful and reverent. But Paul adds—"God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence." 1 Cor. 1 : 27–29.

How true to the picture of the history of this world are these words! The prophets were dis-esteemed in their day, and the patriarchs before them. The disciples, with Jesus himself, and his chosen apostles, were "despised and rejected of men." The martyrs, "of whom the world was not worthy," were regarded unfit to live, and were put to death by their contemporaries with the most cruel tortures, they thinking at the time they were doing God service! The Reformers were hated, maligned and persecuted, and given no rest. It is in view of this undisputed history of the successive ages, to be repeated to the very end of this world by human pride and human power, ever boastful in itself, so abhorrent to God, and distasteful to every humble, reflective, and benevolent soul, which led Jesus to utter the following remarkable sentence as recorded by Luke—"Jesus rejoiced in Spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight."—Luke 10 : 21.

In view of the above history, may it not be that the despised, the ridiculed and slandered Adventists, opposed and condemned by all the great leading, professed orthodox and evangelical denominations, as well as those sects not regarded so evangelical,—as the Roman Catholics, the Unitarians, the Universalists, the Swedenborgians, the Spiritualists, etc.; for like Herod and Pilate they make common cause against the Adventists, as they are on one platform as to man's nature, making man immortal and undying without Christ the Lord, whom the Scriptures set forth as the Life-giver of the world;—may it not be, as I said, that these despised ones are the chosen vessels in whom God has put the treasure of his word, and through whom to communicate it to the world? Without boasting, or glorying, save in the Lord, God forbid! One thing we know, God and the Bible are with us. And we stand or fall with the Bible; when that fails, then we fail: but of that we have no fears, so we feel that we stand upon that which is immutable and abiding. Said Robertson—"I appeal to the recollection of any man who has passed through the hour of agony, and stood upon the rock at last, the surges stilled below him, and the last cloud drifted from the sky above, with faith and hope and trust no longer traditional, but of his own; a trust which neither earth nor hell shall shake thenceforth forever." This is our feeling at this hour. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Thanks be to his ever-blessed name, who hath wrought in us his grace, and given us his gospel to shine into our hearts. And do not those who have despised and looked down upon us with a degree of contempt, in the churches and the world, begin to fear that we have the truth on the near advent of our Lord and the great future of our race? Are they not confounded that a people despised and counted as lacking almost in common intelligence, schooled in adversity and disappointment, yet come forth with Bible in hand, having uncommon faith in God and the Scriptures, and are prepared to defend the word of God against the learned infidelity and skepticism and tradition of the age, whether in the church or out of it?

The sun never shone upon an era in this world's eventful history of greater intelligence than this. It is an age of "increase of knowledge," of intellectualism unsurpassed; but it is full of "heresies"—the "lo! here's" and "lo! there's." The "perilous times" have indeed "come," and the "last days" are here! Is it anything strange, with the thousand faiths, and while the multitudinous voices like "the seven thunders" pealing in the air are proclaiming so many antagonistic and conflicting opinions and theories, that we hear the despairing multitude crying out, "What shall we believe?" "We don't know what to believe!" While thousands more have already abandoned all faith, believe in nothing, and heedlessly rush on to the great unknown future before them.

Let every one adhere to the Bible, and those who have departed from it return to it and study it as the word of God, and obey the injunction, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Isa. 1 : 22. When the learned men of this time endeavor, as in the past, to "make void the word of God" by their "profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called" (1 Tim. 6 : 20), heed them not, but "search the Scriptures" the more, and cling to them the stronger, as you learn their preciousness. Don't un-anchor from Christ and the Bible until you find better anchorage-ground for your vessel tossed on life's tempestuous billows; for then you venture out upon the great sea of uncertainty, to be stranded or dashed upon the rocks of a dark and hopeless infidelity.

When learned men in this world's boasted wisdom summon archæology, geology, zoology, astronomy, philosophy, chemistry, psychology, or any science whatever, all the facts of which sciences are far from being known as yet, even to their professors—to refute the Mosaic cosmogony, or any part of the Biblical record, or to destroy faith in the promises of God—do not receive their theories without deep and long-continued study and research for all the facts which may be gathered; and be always suspicious of those doctrines and theories of men founded on pretended facts, which would un-anchor your hopes from Jesus, the "Rock of Ages," and the Bible, the only reliable and written revelation within the sphere of man's comprehension.

Remember, too, that "the Lord of hosts hath purposed it, to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honorable of the earth" (Isa. 23 : 9); while "the meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way." "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant." Ps. 25 : 7, 14.

There are no true and well-established facts in science that can, or ever have, contradicted the written word of divine revelation as given us in the Bible, when both have been understood. Apparent discrepancies, and contradictions, and clashings, which have made unblushing infidelity to rejoice for a season, have given way to a beautiful harmony, to the everlasting shame and discomfiture of these men. And so it will be to the end.

O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis.

VICTORY.

How refreshing and comforting it is to repose in the calm of victory. What a thrill of joy and delight does the soldier experience after the fierce contest is passed, and he knows that victory has turned on the side in which he is engaged. What shouts arise and songs of triumph swell when the enemy is routed and his stronghold destroyed. But if men who fight with carnal weapons can rejoice when they have conquered their fellows, how much more and with what greater ecstasy should they rejoice whose "weapons are not carnal, but mighty through God," when they have obtained victory over their foes, and can rest in the calm assurance of peace.

The christian's life is compared to a soldier's and he is commanded to war a good warfare," to fight the good fight of faith." Thank God, it is a good warfare. He is not engaged in killing his fellows, in desolating homes, and filling the land with widows and orphans; but in overcoming evil; in subduing evil passions, dispositions and appetites; in ruling his own spirit; in bringing evil thoughts into subjection; in overcoming temptation, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, the pride of life, and the love of the world; in resisting the devil; conquering his enemies with kindness; bearing his cross, and rising above the fear of man. He who achieves victory in these things is the greatest victor. Around such a brow will be entwined a crown of amaranthine glory; in such a hand will wave the palm of everlasting victory, and from such lips will swell the song of Moses and the Lamb. It is the christian's privilege to rejoice in victory every day. He has a good Captain, who never lost a battle; and he furnishes all his soldiers with a good armor. It is very beautifully described in the sixth of Ephesians. They who put on this armor and obey the orders of the Captain, may be sure of victory every time. I apprehend the reason why there are so many faint-hearted, crippled soldiers, is, because they have neglected to put on the whole armor, and to obey strictly the orders of the Commander. How many prisoners the devil has taken. He has his officers out—Pride, Selfishness, Covetousness, Conformity to the world, Pleasure-seeker, and many other petty officers; and what multitudes they are capturing! The Lord's army is only a "little flock," but, thank God, their motto is, "Victory, or death!" and they will have victory though they die, for the Captain whom they serve has "all power in heaven and on earth, and the time is hastening when death, which is the "last enemy," will be destroyed.

Here the christian has trials and conflicts, "fightings without and fears within," and diseases on account of his mortal nature prey upon him; but the hour of final victory is at hand. Thus it is written—

"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." J. W. THOMAS.

For the World's Crisis.

"COME, LORD JESUS!"

Ere the seeds of mortality could ripen for the harvest that sin had sown, hard by the bowers of Eden, earth once so placid and pure becomes the area of the first fratricide engendered by envy in the heart of Cain. "And the Lord said, The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground. And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand; when thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth."

Murder this moment is doubtless equally offensive in the eye of Him with whom we have to do. And had infinite purity under this dispensation prescribed the papal monsters that made the soils, especially of Spain, France and Italy, to swim with the blood of saints and the martyrs of Jesus, it is almost certain that the lands of these murderers would have been like Sahara's desert. The dust of this martyr that was hidden away in the earth ere the first man that ever lived fell beneath that awful fiat—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return"—cries, Come! How frequently we read in Holy Writ—"The land mourneth"; "the earth also is defiled under the inhabitants"; "by swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out; and blood toucheth blood. Therefore shall the land mourn."

It is not surprising that in these days earth does not yield her increase. Earth is teeming with iniquity, and its rapid deterioration from bad to worse cries, Come! The effect of sin hath permeated every thing, and that which hath life is represented in a suffering condition. Hear Inspiration testify—"For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." Truly creation utters the invocation—"Come, Lord Jesus."

The millions of martyrs that sleep in the vales of Piedmont, the dreary Appenines, and all through the plains of Languedoc, cry—"Come, Lord Jesus." Wicked spirits in high places, perverting the simple truths of the gospel, and strewing the paths of their simple faithful with flowers and perils, cry—Come!

Apostasy, apostasy, apostasy, that is emblazoned on the gaudy devotees of pleasure and fashion, that flaunt their rich Babylonish garments on their Sunday gala day, cries—Come, and make an utter end of mockery. Apostasy, apostasy, is now an established institution, and the man that hath distinguished titles appended to his proper name, and can "split a hair twixt south and south-west side," and never disturb the easy consciences of his truly popular and fashionable hearers, is the successful man to preach the progressive gospel of the nineteenth century, although neither himself nor his devotees may feel to say—Come. Yet for all this, perverted truth cries, Come!

Injured innocence, crushed and weeping under accumulated wrongs of tyrannical oppressors, without a ray of hope to brighten the thick and perpetual gloom that hangs over their bowed heads and aching hearts, cries—Come!

The comparatively few that are in reality converted to a saving knowledge of the truth, compared to the hundreds of millions that are constantly crossing the line of accountability, cry, Come quickly!

The immense and unparalleled improvements of our day, that are in a vast majority of instances perverted to unhallowed purposes, cry—Come! Crimes of blackest dye stalk abroad in open day with impunity, and in multitudes of instances defy masked justice, permitting wealthy criminals to riot in luxury, and punishing petty offences of the poor to the uttermost extent of partial law, cry—Come! The alarming increase of murdered innocence to cover infamous guilt in unparalleled instances, and in myriads of instances the fulfillment of 2 Tim. 3 : 3, cries—Come! Multitudes are without natural affection. Truly iniquity abounds, and love is cold.

"Meanwhile, the earth increased in wickedness,
And hasted daily to fill her cup.
Satan raged loose, sin had her will, and death
Enough. Blood trod upon the heels of blood;
Revenge, in desperate mood, at midnight met
Revenge; war brayed to war; deceit deceived
Deceit; lie cheated lie, and treachery
Mined under treachery, and perjury
Swore back on perjury, and blasphemy
Arose with hideous blasphemy, and curse
Loud answered curse; and drunkard, stumbling, fell
O'er drunkard fallen, and husband husband met
Returning each from others' bed defiled;
Thief stole from thief, and robber on the way
Knocked robber down; violence and hate.
Oh, earth! thy hour was come; the last elect
Was born; complete the number of the good;
And the last sand fell from the glass of time.
The cup of guilt was full up to the brim;
And mercy, weary with beseeching, had Retired behind the sword of justice, red
With ultimate and unrepenting wrath.
But man knew not: he o'er his bowl laughed loud."
—Pollock's Course of Time.

Could that highly gifted bard have lived in this day, he could not have more graphically portrayed earth's closing hours than the above presents it. Dark as it is, it is true. Such overflowing iniquity cries—Come!

"Meanwhile, thy saints unite their cries,
And pray and wait the general doom;
Come, Thou, the soul of all our joys,
Thou, the Desire of nations, come."

ROMAN CATHOLICISM COMPARED WITH THE BIBLE.

It has been affirmed, and proved again and again, times without number, by Protestants, and published generally by the pulpit and the press, in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, that the following articles of the Romish Creed are novelties in religion, unknown to the first early Fathers of the Church—the apostles of old—and not found in the Holy Bible, namely:—

INVOCATION OF SAINTS.

Introduced in the fourth century. God forbids it. "See thou do it not." Rev. 19 : 10.

WORSHIP OF IMAGES.

Introduced in the year 787. The Popes, Gregory II., Gregory III. and Zachary, opposed this sin. Pope Constantine I. deposed the Greek Emperor Philip, in the year 713, and put out his eyes for setting up images in churches. Gregory III. excommunicated the Emperor Leo IV. for this crime. The present pope, Pio Nono, unlike some of his predecessors, approves of idolatry, and has issued a rescript to the bishop and clergy of Rimini, authorizing them to ornament, with a crown of gold, a manufactured winking image of the Virgin Mary, and to honor and venerate, with much piety and devotion, the said image, on the 15th of August, the day of her supposed assumption. God forbids this sin, saying: "Neither shalt thou set up any image which the Lord thy God hateth." Deut. 16 : 22.

INFALLIBILITY OF THE CHURCH.

Introduced in the year 1076, by the second Council of Nice. Popes and Councils contradict each other, and Romanists cannot agree about the seat of this infallibility. Some place it in the Pope, others in a general council, and some in the Pope and a general council. The doctrine is not revealed in Scripture. God says—"Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God." 1 John 4 : 1. See also 1 Thess. 5 : 21; Rom. 11 : 20–22. After Stephen V. there was so much contention in the election of the Pope of Rome, that, in the short space of nine years, there were nine popes. Each succeeded to the popedom by poisoning his predecessor.

THE CELIBACY OF THE CLERGY.

Introduced in the year 1190. God forbids it. "A bishop must be blameless, the husband of one wife." 1 Tim. 3 : 2. "Marriage is honorable in all." Heb. 13 : 4. See also 1 Cor. 7 : 2; 1 Cor. 9 : 5; Matt. 8 : 14; 1 Tim. 4 : 3.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

Introduced in 1215, by the fourth Council of Lateran. It contradicts our sight, our taste, our smell, and the Scriptures. The Holy Spirit says "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." 1 Cor. 11 : 26. See also Luke 22 : 19; Matt. 26 : 29.

AURICULAR CONFESSION.

Introduced in 1215. God says, "Confess your faults one to another (James 5 : 16); but he does not say anywhere, confess to a priest. See also Ezra 10 : 11; Dan. 9 : 4, 20; Luke 15 : 18, 19; 1 John 1 : 8, 9.

SUPREMACY OF THE POPE.

Introduced it 1215, by the Council of Lateran. Phocas murdered his master, the Emperor, and Pope Boniface supported him in his treason; for which Phocas, in return, conferred the title of Universal Bishop on the pope. Hence the origin of papal supremacy. God forbids it. "But be not ye called Rabbi; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." Matt. 23 : 1. See also Acts 8 : 14; 11 : 2; 2 Cor. 11 : 5; 12 : 2; Gal. 2 : 11; Acts 15 : 13, 19.

SALE OF INDULGENCES.

Introduced in the twelfth century. The traffic was excessively scandalous in the sixteenth century. In the pardons sold by Tetzel the following words are used: "I absolve thee from all thy sins and transgressions, how enormous soever they may be." God forbids it. "Who can forgive sins but God only?" Mark 2 : 7. See also Jer. 1 : 20; Isa. 43 : 25; Luke 5 : 21.

SERVICE IN LATIN.

Introduced in the year 1215. Strange! there never was a decree of Council in favor of this practice; but the fourth of Lateran decreed, that divine services should be in the vulgar tongue of every nation. The apostle Paul says, "If I pray in an unknown tongue my understanding is unfruitful." 1 Cor. 14 : 16–28.

WITHHOLDING THE CUP FROM THE LAITY.

Introduced in the year 1418, by the Council of Constance. God forbids it. "Jesus took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it." Matt. 26 : 27. In the church of Rome the cup is not even given to priests unless they officiate.

PURGATORY.

Introduced in 1438. This doctrine is not even mentioned in the Bible; but God says, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." 1 John 1 : 7. See also Rev. 14 : 13; Eccl. 9 : 5, 6.

MARIOLATRY OR, THE WORSHIP OF THE VIRGIN MARY.

In the year 1558. Saint Bonaventure, in 1215, substituted the name of the Virgin for that of God throughout the Psalms. In the Scripture no mention is made of worship to her: but she, on the contrary, worshiped Christ, saying, "My spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior." Luke 1 : 47.

SEVEN SACRAMENTS.

Introduced as an article of faith, in the year 1547, by the Council of Trent. Peter Lombard, a schoolman of the twelfth century, first mentioned seven sacraments. Our Lord instituted only two: Baptism and the Lord's Supper. See Matt. 28 : 19; Luke 22 : 14–20.

APOCHRYPHAL BOOKS.

The Church of Rome, only in the year 1546, admitted these books into the sacred canon, at the Council of Trent. They are rejected by the Greek Church, and by the Jews, whose canon is the same as ours.

PRIESTLY INTENTION.

This new error was only established in the year 1547, at Trent. It is grossly absurd. For instance: If the priest does not intend to baptise, the infant remains a heathen; or, if the intention fails in the celebration of matrimony, the parties, according to the Church of Rome, who fancy themselves married, are living in fornication.

VENIAL AND MORTAL SINS.

Introduced in 1563, by the Council of Trent. The Bible draws no such distinction. God says: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. 18 : 4. See also Rom. 6 : 23; Gal. 3 : 10; James 3 : 2; James 2 : 10; 1 John 3 : 4.

SACRIFICE OF THE MASS FOR THE DEAD.

Introduced in the 8th century, and determined as an article of faith by the Council of Trent. It is contrary to Scripture; for "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." See Heb. 9 : 22–28; 7 : 26, 27; 10 : 14.

MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.

Convents and monasteries have no authority in Scripture; for God says: "Ye are the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5 : 14, 16. See also John 17 : 15.

INSUFFICIENCY OF THE SCRIPTURES AS A RULE OF FAITH.

Romanists add tradition to the Bible as a rule of faith; but God forbids this addition, saying: "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 7 : 7. See also Isa. 8 : 20; 2 Tim. 3 : 16, 17.

PROHIBITION OF THE READING OF THE BIBLE TO THE LAITY.

The Council of Trent prohibits the general reading of the Bible, and, strictly speaking, no Romanist can read the Bible without the permission of his priest. But God commands us to "search the Scriptures." John 5 : 39. See also Acts 17 : 11.

THE INTERPRETATION OF THE SCRIPTURES ACCORDING TO THE SENSE OF THE CHURCH.

Romanists say, the Church is the interpreter of Scripture; but their Church has given no authorized interpretation of the Bible; therefore, the error is a most glaring absurdity. To ascribe the authority of the Scriptures to the Church, is as absurd as to contend that the light of the candle is produced by the candlestick on which it rests. God says: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes." Psa. 19 : 7, 8.

EXTREME UNCTION.

As used in the Church of Rome, it has no authority in Holy Writ, nor is it necessary to salvation; for God declares—"The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1 : 7.

WORKS OF SUPEREROGATION.

The pope is said to be the treasurer of this bank; but our Lord says it is a forgery, in the following words—"When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do." Luke 17 : 10. See also Gal. 6 : 4, 5; James 3 : 2.

NEW CREED OF POPE PIUS IV.

Confirmed by the Council of Trent, 1564. The Nicene Creed was composed in the year 325, to which Pius added twelve new doctrines, embodying all the corrupt and persecuting tenets of the Church of Rome.

THE HOLY INQUISITION.

This inquisition was conceived by Innocent III. in the year 1198. Total punishment by this office, in Spain alone, 340,921, in the three hundred and thirty-nine years.

The Church of Rome is the counterpart of John 16 : 2; and the opposite in spirit to Matt. 5 : 10, 11.

These are collated proofs of the modern and deadly errors of Roman Catholicism. We call on the dupes of the system to renounce it, and to return to the "good old paths"—the religion of the Bible, of antiquity, and of common sense. Should any Protestant be asked, "Where was your religion before Luther or Henry VIII.?" tell the interrogator—"Where it always was, and where it always will be—in the Bible!"—Christian Herald—London.

For the World's Crisis.

"COUPLE HEAVEN WITH IT."

As John Ashworth, a home missionary in England, was traveling one day, he met an aged christian who was called "old James." He was very poor, and although more than seventy years of age, he was obliged to work very hard to supply his daily wants, and was then carrying a heavy burden. But he was always contented and happy, for he was a child of God and rich in faith. The missionary stopped to speak to the aged pilgrim; and as they were talking, the carriage of a rich man rolled by.

Mr. Ashworth thought he would try the old man's faith; so he said,

"How is this, James? There goes the Squire; he is a rich man; he has no fear of God, no love for him; yet he rolls in wealth; his eyes stand out with fatness; he has all of this world that heart can wish,—while you are praying to God daily, and trying to do his will and keep his commandments; yet you are left to suffer poverty, and in your old age are compelled to labor beyond your strength for your daily bread."

The old man looked up earnestly—"Are you trying me, John? If you are, couple Heaven with it, couple Heaven with it."

In a little while "old Jamie" fell asleep. The rich man also died, and when Mr. Ashworth again passed that way, he visited the grave-yard where they slumbered; and, as he stood by their graves and thought of the contrast between the lives of those two men, and of old Jamie's poverty, he seemed to hear his voice again repeating—"Couple Heaven with it."

Why is it there is so much repining even among christians? Why do they fret when disappointment comes or misfortune overtakes them? And when trials beset their pathway round, and trouble breaks in upon them like a flood, why do they sink down in gloom, and murmur, saying, The Lord has forgotten to be gracious? It is because they have not learned the secret of old Jamie's contentment; they do not "couple Heaven with it."

Child of God! does your lot in life seem hard? Are toilsome days and weary nights appointed you? Does poverty's griping hand oppress you? Think of the kingdom—the home that God has promised to his people. Think of the rich inheritance to which you are joint-heir with Christ. Think of the glory, the peace and joy in reserve for you. In short, couple your present lot with your future prospect; and then say if you would exchange places with any of the rich men around you, who have no hope in Christ and no share in his great salvation. Have friends turned coldly from you, and do you feel lonely and forsaken? You have the friendship of Jesus, who is able to comfort you in all your sorrows, and can deliver you from all your trials, if he sees it is for your good to be delivered. Couple his friendship with your seeming loneliness, and say whether you would give up his love and watchful care for all the friendship of earth.

You may be sick and suffering. Death may seem to be staring you in the face; or your friends may have been snatched away by the grim destroyer, and you are sighing over the ravages which he has made, and is still making, in your circle of loved ones. Well, think of the time when "death itself shall die"—of the resurrection morn, when God's children shall come from the land of the enemy, to die no more. Then shall they receive "glory, honor, immortality, eternal life," and a home in the kingdom of God, where there will be fulness of joy, and pleasure forevermore. In all your trials, learn to couple with them the glory that is to be revealed, and go on your way rejoicing, trusting all to Him who "doeth all things well."

CHURCH DIVISIONS.

THE CAUSES.

4. Evil-speaking. The uncharitable, censorious spirit, that vents itself in passionate outbursts of bitter accusation to a person's face, though productive of much alienation and trouble, is far less disgraceful in its nature and damaging in its results than the practice of evil-speaking. It requires neither grace, courage, nor intelligence to make a tattler. A thimble-full of brains will suffice to catch up a floating rumor and spin "street-yarn" enough to entangle a whole church in the meshes of mischief. And sneakish cowardice is indispensable to the trade.

Many seem to suppose that they are at liberty to tell whatever is true, irrespective of time, place, party, or circumstances. But the principle is at war with sound ethics, and the practice is detrimental to the best interests of society. Have I any moral right to gather up the failings of another and herald them on every breeze? Is this the way that you, or I, or anybody likes to be treated? Surely the "golden rule" puts an everlasting veto on this nefarious business. There are instances where hypocrisy is to be unmasked and base villainy exposed, for the sake of shielding the innocent from threatening ruin. In all other cases, if we cannot speak favorably of the absent, it is better to maintain a watchful silence. There is a sense in which public men are public property; and as such they must expect to be pretty fully canvassed and freely criticised; but even here we are in greater danger of saying too much than too little. Actions, rather than actors—crimes, rather than characters—come legitimately under the province of the public dissecting knife. "Speak evil of no man."

If people would comprehend their own mission and mind their own business, they would have neither time nor inclination to peddle the faults of others. Tale-bearing is commonly born of idleness. We read of certain persons who "learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also, and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not." A few such church-members will do more to tear down the cause of God than the most devoted minister can do to build it up. I have known societies to be kept in a state of constant fermentation by the sour leaven of evil-speaking which had been unfortunately infused. Churches, once vigorous and flourishing, have been swayed by this terrible power until, at length, they have been divided and scattered and destroyed. How often is it true that "one sinner destroyeth much good;" especially when that "sinner," though ensconced within the sacred precincts of the church of God, has a tongue that is "set on fire of hell." Commend me rather to the ferocity of an untamed tiger, than to the cruel mercies of him who has the "poison of asps" under his tongue.

Who is benefited by evil-speaking? The retailer of slander is neither physically, mentally, morally, nor financially improved by his unlawful traffic. Nor is the person profited who consents to act as a reservoir to receive all the filth and trash which the gossip-gatherer can scrape up in a whole neighborhood. And, surely, no one will claim that the party dissected is especially profited by having his reputation gnawed to pieces by the rugged teeth of slander. At least it is not his interest that the vile traducer seeks to promote.

"A whisperer separateth chief friends." A "whisperer" is one who has some conscience in the way of indiscriminate evil-speaking, but who throws out various prejudicial hints and half truths, spoiling each favorable admission with a fatal "but," and slyly enjoining secrecy upon every one who is allowed to receive the strange revelation of facts or falsehoods. Some persons succeed in getting nearly every one in the church or community to help "keep" a given secret. The reader can judge of the practical tendency of such a course in promoting christian unity and "brotherly love." When nearly every member of a given church has been so "posted up" as to lose confidence in every other member, there is an end of both unity and usefulness. The "glory" of such a church has "departed," and the mechanical "union" might as well be "dissolved." A church organization is of no account when its members sustain the same relation to each other as the opposite poles of a magnet. Let it go down!

PASSING EVENTS.

Within the space of a year, who can tell all that has taken place in the world? Some of the leading events are noted, such as the fall of the infallible (?) Pope, and the Italian occupation of Rome; the fall of Napoleon, and the conquest of France by the Germans; the apparent readiness of Rrussia to fall with overwhelming force upon Turkey; these and a few other prominent features of general interest have occupied the minds of the people; while the drift of the tide of affairs, the developement of character, the activity of the arch enemy, who knoweth that his time is short, and the corresponding progress of evil among men, seem to receive but slight notice.

Yet the tide of iniquity has risen to such a fearful height, that "evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Daily and hourly, deeds of darkness, blood and crimes of every name, are committed both openly and in secret; and these things are apparently increasing continually, and criminals are growing bolder and more desperately wicked.

As soon as Lot went out of Sodom, that place was destroyed. And as soon the "salt of the earth" is taken away, the world that is now "reserved" for that purpose will be visited with swift destruction, "fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Some are looking for these things that are coming on the earth, and are striving to be ready, watching, praying, waiting and longing for the glorious appearing of the King, whose kingdom is yet to be set up, and occupy the whole heaven and his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and of his dominion there is no end.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

"THY DEAD MEN SHALL LIVE."

All things are possible with God, except to lie; but there is no lie here, no deception. He tells us literally that it will be so. If a chemist living in the present day can take any substance, submit it to his tests, resolve that substance into its pristine elements; and if he be in pursuit of any particular element, be it arsenic, or prussic acid, or other deadly poison, he can hunt it out of all its retreats and combinations, even after it has entered into the animal tissues, and can bring the element out in all its integrity just as it was before, shall we think it impossible that the great Maker, the Architect, the Chemist, if I may use the expression reverently, of the whole universe, will be able to trace out the constituent elements of my body, and bring those elements, dust to dust, atom to atom, bone to bone, till the whole earth is covered with an army of resurrection, living, and responsible men?

He will speak to the distant streams of the earth, and each stream will send forth its dead. His voice will be heard in the silent caverns of the pyramids of Egypt, and the Pharaohs that are sleeping there will come forth. His word will sound in the remotest deserts of Africa and Asia, and they that have the sands for their winding sheet, and solitude as their only companion, shall come forth. He will call to those that are beneath the green sod, and that sod will lift itself aside and let God's prisoners of hope come forth.

The very dust on which we now tread will become instinct with vitality; and the awful fact will then be seen, as we now admit, that on the very ground on which we now tread—every inch of this great metropolis—the numbers that are below it far outnumber those that are above it; and the mighty population that shall come forth from these spots on which we now are, will prove at that day alike the truth of the resurrection from the dead, and the faithfulness and power of Him whose voice they shall hear, and come forth.—Dr. Cumming.

OVERCOMING EVIL WITH GOOD.—It is said of Mr. Dodd, one of the Puritan divines, that a person being enraged at his close and awakening doctrine, raised a quarrel with him, smote him in the face, and dashed out two of his teeth. This meek and lowly servant of Christ, without taking the least offense, held the teeth out in his hand, and said, "See here; you have knocked out two of my teeth without any just provocation; but, if I could do your soul good, I would give you leave to dash out all the rest!"—British Workman.

— It was some consolation to Naomi that, wanting a son herself, she brought up Ruth's child in her bosom. If my soul be too old to be a mother of goodness, Lord, make me but a dry nurse. Let me feed, and foster, and nourish the graces in others, honoring their persons, praising their parts, and glorifying thy name, who hath given such gifts unto them.

MEETINGS IN VALLEJO.

We commenced meetings in the Presbyterian meeting-house, in Vallejo, Monday evening, Feb. 27th, and continued them every evening through the week, and over the following Sabbath. The city of Vallejo is pleasantly located in the San Pablo bay, some twenty-five miles north from San Francisco. It was once the capital of the State. The only United States Navy Yard, on the Pacific coast, is on Mare island at this place. The ship Vanderbilt is here, which was given to the government by M. Vanderbilt. It is a very large steamer. The Kearsage is also anchored here. Vallejo is said to be the most wicked place in the State. This may be an exaggeration. It is certainly bad enough.

The meetings were a glorious success. The house was crowded every night. The aisles, gallery, and frequently the standing-room at the door were all full of very attentive listeners. It is said there has never before been so much religious interest in the place. Bro. Rich, the Methodist minister, and Bro. N. B. Klink, the pastor of the Presbyterian church, united heartily with us in the work. Several were converted, and many more have requested prayers. We have rarely seen so good a prospect for a great work. Prominent men of the city are deeply interested, and confess that the time has come when they should be ready for the coming of the Son of man. Bro. Klink is well satisfied that Jesus is coming soon; and several members of the churches are also convinced of the same, and talk it freely. The people were very anxious to hear on the prophecies. Those who have not been to meeting for years now come every night. They see the simplicity of the Bible truth as never before. It was an interesting sight to see strong men bowing meekly at the feet of Jesus, and asking pardon, and then hear their following joyful testimony.

We had meetings on Friday and Saturday at two o'clock, in the Methodist meeting-house. They were seasons of heavenly refreshing. This week, commencing March 6th, meetings are to be held by Bro. Klink and Rich every afternoon and evening, while we continue our meetings in San Francisco with Bro. Bailey. Our meeting last evening (March 6th) in the Music Hall was the best we have had in that place. Quite a number requested prayers. The work is still onward. We are invited to the city of Sacramento, which is the next in size to San Francisco, and is the capital of the State. May the Lord direct.

OCEAN SIGHTS.

When standing on the Pacific beach, witnessing its majestic waves, dashing upon the rock-bound shore with untiring perseverance, roaring in their angry foam, retreating and advancing, night and day, for thousands of years, we felt our own weakness, and had a faint idea of the power of Him who controls earth and sea, sun, moon and stars, and the entire universe; while at the same time he knows all our thoughts, all our wants; hears all our words, and sees all our deeds. In addition to this, how blessed it is to be assured that He is our best friend, who loves us more than all other friends we ever knew; and delights in guiding us in the ways of heavenly wisdom. It is well to be placed where we can feel our own weakness, for then we see the value of protection from the Almighty arm. Thus we felt while gazing upon the vast Pacific expanse of waters.

Among the objects of special interest were the flocks of seals, which crawl upon the island rocks, a few rods from the "Cliff Rock House." No one is allowed to molest these seals, some of which weigh several hundred pounds. It is often a difficult task for them to get out of the ocean upon the rocks. When just about to succeed in their undertaking, they are often washed away by the dashing waves. After repeated struggling efforts, they may finally succeed, by the aid of a lifting wave to rise beyond the reach of the surging deep, almost exhausted by their many vain attempts to secure a sunny spot upon the rocks among their companions. Sometimes a huge one appears in the crowd, causing the weaker ones to crawl one side as he approaches. These animals make awkward and slow progress on land, with their paddle feet, some like those of a large ground mole. After they get upon the rocks, they make a noise quite like barking dogs. One who is more noisy than the rest—a sort of king among them, who gets on the top-most position,—is known by the name of "Ben Butler." Mr. Barnum, of New York, is anxious to get him for his museum. It would be no very desirable job to make him a captive. We watched the movements of these animals with special interest. By means of a spy-glass at the "Cliff House," they may be quite closely inspected. The "Cliff House" is a hotel built on a bluff, rising up from the depths of the ocean waves dashing at its base. It is the resort of multitudes who wish to see the ocean foaming in its grandeur; or witness the gambols of the seals upon the "seal rocks." This position is near the "Golden Gate," through which all vessels pass into the San Francisco bay. We ran several races with the waves, which retreat and advance from forty to one hundred feet upon the beach, bringing up beautiful shells, sea weed, and sea moss; also lemons, oranges, apples, melons, and various vegetables, that have been thrown into the sea, besides a variety of other things, causing many strange thoughts and reflections.

We thought of the time when the sea shall give up "the dead" which are in it; and when they shall be "judged, every man according to their works." Rev. 20: 13. As the one to be "judged" is in the sea, and is called "man," it is certain that he is the moral, intellectual personality, who obeyed or disobeyed the Lord, and is to be rewarded or punished; and, unless it can be shown that man has two moral and intellectual natures, it follows that there is no conscious, moral part of man alive between death and the resurrection; for it is certain that the Lord is to judge the men now lying dead in the sea. It is absurd to suppose he will judge what was never a moral, intelligent agent. If there is to be no resurrection of the dead, we see no occasion for any day of judgment, or time for rewards and punishments. Paul says: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." 1 Cor. 15: 32. It appears certain that Paul placed all his hopes of a future life in the resurrection of the dead.

CALIFORNIA ENTERPRISE.

Excepting Chicago, we do not think another city can be found, where so large a proportion of the people are noted for their enterprising spirit, as in San Francisco. The early settlers here were nearly all men of great force of character, who loved to brave danger, and perform daring deeds. Only such seemed adapted for the hazardous deeds demanded on the Pacific coast twenty-one years ago. It is marvelous to see what has been done here during the last twenty years. The spirit of enterprise still abounds. The Californians are almost a nation by themselves, who feel fully competent to manage all their political and financial affairs. We think there is not another spot upon earth where a people can live as easily without foreign aid as in California. This fact gives the Californians a strong feeling of independence, and boldness in whatever they undertake. They feel quite like a boy who has bought his time of his father, and can do as he pleases, asking no questions of privilege of any one. He says, "I am my own man now, and can go ~~and come, buy and sell~~, as I think best." Thus Californians feel in relation to the United States and other nations.

As a sample of the enterprising spirit in public works, we give the following statement from the San Francisco Bulletin, relative to the new city hall, about to be erected:—

"The new Hall will be the largest and most handsome architectural pile on this coast. It will have a frontage toward Market street on Park avenue of five hundred and seventy-five feet, and will extend four hundred feet on Larkin street and 465 on McAllister. The semi-circular portico of the grand entrance with the Corinthian columns, will face an avenue 200 feet wide, leading from Market street to Park avenue, and on either side of it broad wings, adapted to the angular nature of the site, will open, presenting a picturesque variety of outline, and accessible to the broadest influences of sunlight. The cornices and towers will give the upper portion of the structure a graceful character, yet the whole pile, built of stone, will be solid and substantial.

The Commissioners are confident that the cost can be kept within the appropriation of $1,500,000. The money is to be derived from the sale of lots facing on Market street, and the projected avenues. Yerba Buena Park, originally comprising seventeen acres, has been devoted to the purposes of the new hall. The site reserved for the building measures 1,102 feet on Park avenue, 650 feet on Larkin street, and 894 feet on McAllister street. . . . A city like this, already very wealthy and metropolitan, ought to consult taste and elegance in its public buildings. Carried out in the right spirit the design for the City Hall will meet this requirement, and be an ornament and a source of pride."

WAR CLOUDS.

Although a great war has just closed in Europe, other war clouds begin to arise which threaten greater storm. Political matters throughout the world are in a very disturbed condition, and are continually becoming more and more unsettled. It is quite apparent that Turkey will soon be involved in her death-struggle with the nations of Europe. Prince Charles, of Roumania, has expressed his intention to resign. In case he does, it is thought that the Sultan will immediately take possession of his dominion. This would be a reason for war with Austria; and would probably involve all Europe. We may expect stirring events during the passing year.

SPIRITUALISM IN MEXICO.

That the anti-scriptural doctrines of Spiritualism are rapidly spreading over the world, is a fact that must be admitted when the truth is known. It is spreading its blighting influence every where. It has a very strong hold in Cal., and wears a bold front.

The following from a special correspondent of the San Francisco Daily Chronicle, shows what progress Spiritualism is making in Mexico:—

"It may be interesting to some of your readers to state that Spiritualism, as an offshoot of Protestantism, is making more rapid progress than any other sectarian creed in Mexico. A weekly journal advocating Spiritualism is published at Guadalajara, and among its prophetic utterances it has asserted that the Spiritualists in Mexico are as numerous as they are in the United States, population considered. There is something congenial in this new ism for the Mexicans, since they have a deep love and reverence for the memory of the dead, and through this means, as they believe, can converse with the friends gone over the mystic river. From Catholicism to Spiritualism is a terrible jump. Is not the jumping-off place alike to all of us?"

Notwithstanding Spiritualism is wholly unchristian, and the most deadly foe with which Christianity has now to contend, we find the popular churches manifesting more opposition against the very truths with which we meet Spiritualism, than against that great enemy of Christ. Would that their eyes might be opened to see their dangerous position, before it is too late to escape from the gilded fables of the deceiver.

☞ A FEW days since, we were conversing with a Jew in San Francisco, in relation to the "Wandering Jew," and the coming of Christ. This Jew informed us, that he believed the "Wandering Jew" was the "Elijah" who was foretold by the prophet Malachi, as the forerunner of Christ. He said his brethren, who have not departed from the original Jewish faith, believe that Christ may be born at any time now. They are expecting him immediately to appear the first time, and become their king. The Jews have two elegant synagogues in San Francisco, where they meet on Saturday for worship.

"ALARMINGLY LOW."

It appears that the preachers in Rochester, N. Y., are becoming alarmed at the low state of religious interest at the present time, as will be seen by the following, from the Rochester Democrat, of Feb. 7th, 1871:—

"A TESTIMONY."—On Sunday a circular with the above title was distributed to the congregations of fifteen churches in this city. It is signed by the following clergymen: James B. Shaw, Pastor Brick Presbyterian church; S. M. Campbell, pastor Central Presbyterian church; J. P. Sankey, pastor United Presbyterian church; R. D. Sproull, pastor Reformed Presbyterian church; H. W. Morris, pastor Calvary Presbyterian church; H. M. Morey, pastor Westminster Presbyterian church; J. L. Robertson pastor First Presbyterian church; G. L. Hamilton, pastor Memorial Presbyterian church; Henry S. Robins, pastor First Baptist church; D. W. C. Huntington, pastor Alexander street M. E. C. John Dennis, pastor Frank Street M. E. C; J. N. Brown, pastor North street M. E. C; F. G. Hibbard, pastor Asbury M. E. C; William Loyd, pastor First M. E. C; R. O. Wilson, pastor Corn Hill M. E. C.

The "Testimony" sets out by stating that the foregoing pastors are constrained to bear witness to what they "conceive to be a fact of our time, viz: That the prevailing standard of piety among the professed people of God is alarmingly low; that a tide of worldliness is setting in upon us, indicating the rapid approach of an era, such as is foretold by Paul in his second letter to Timothy, in the words, "In the last days perilous times shall come."

These conclusions are reached not by comparisons with former times, but by applying the tests found in the Scriptures. They instance as proof, "the spirit of lawlessness which prevails." The circular then explains how this lawlessness (religious) is shown. Men have the name of religion, but they obey none of its injunctions. There is also a growing disposition to practice in religious circles what is agreeable to the natural inclinations rather than the duties prescribed by the word of God. The tendency to adopt worldly amusements by professed christians is further stated in evidence.

In conclusion the pastors whose names are affixed to the "Testimony" pledge themselves to resist this mystery of lawlessness which now effects the church. At the same time, they do not deny that many are found who live pure and piously, and these are the light of the world and the salt of the earth.

The circular will excite great interest in the churches, and it is hoped have an influence for good.

This is a movement in the right direction. Thank the Lord that the eyes of ministers begin to be opened to the perils of these last days. What these ministers have expressed in their "testimony" is of general application to the whole Protestant world; and is specially applicable to the leading churches in the great cities. Fairs, festivals, carnivals, concerts, excursions, picnics, bazars, tea-meetings, surprise parties, etc., etc., occupy the chief attention of ministers and their supporters. The religion they manifest is mainly artificial,—is no more the genuine Christian religion, than the cloak is the man. It is merely an outside covering, to hide the moral nakedness, deformity and barrenness within. It is like a leper in a beautiful dress: he is a leper still; as "unclean" as before he covered his filth with "costly apparel."

Whatever can be done to arouse the people to a sense of the perils that surround us, should be done at once. There is no time for delay. Our only safety consists in entire consecration to Christ.

OMISSION.—In the report of our discussion with Mr. Loveland, published in the Crisis of Feb. 22nd, it is said, "Each disputant made twenty-four minute speeches." It should read,—twenty-four twenty-minute speeches.

ELDER MILES GRANT AND THE SECOND ADVENT.

The Rev. Miles Grant preached on Sunday, in Vallejo, in the morning and evening, at the Presbyterian church. The morning discourse did not touch on his peculiar views, but the evening sermon was devoted to the establishment of the doctrine of the Second Advent by the prophecies in the Revelation. The church was crowded to overflowing, a number being compelled to stand outside the doorway. The prophecy on which the sermon was founded is found in the seventeenth chapter of Revelations, where John "saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns; and the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand." The Elder stated that the language of symbols was frequently used in the Bible, and might be as easily understood as literal language. There were four hundred and fifteen symbols in the Bible, one hundred and forty-eight of which were explained, and from them, we could obtain the key to those unexplained.

A woman was used in the Bible as a symbol for a church. The woman in the text represented the Romish church. The purple and scarlet in which she was arrayed were the favorite colors worn by the Pope and Cardinals. She was represented as richly dressed, and decked with precious stones, etc. That signified that she represented a wealthy church. The Romish church was the wealthiest in existence; in proof of which St. Peter's Cathedral, the finest church in the world, costing $225,000,000, was instanced. Upon the woman's forehead was written "Mystery." It was well known that this word was written on the Pope's tiara at the time of the Reformation, until the pointing of the Reformers to the prophecy, caused it to be removed. She was represented as drunken with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. The Romish Church had drank the blood of fifty to seventy-five million, some say eighty, and some a hundred million, martyrs. She had committed fornication with the kings of the earth, said the text. Christ was the bridegroom of the church; and when the church was married to the state, it was unfaithful to the bridegroom. The Romish church had been allied with the state, and with kings; it had sought worldly alliances for protection and gain, hence was unfaithful. The angel explained to John that the seven heads of the beast were seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. This clearly designated Rome the "Seven-Hilled City;" which was the only city of the world, resting upon seven hills or mountains. They also represented "seven kings; five are fallen, one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh he must continue a short space." The speaker said if he had time, he could explain satisfactorily that Napoleon III., of France, was the seventh king. "The ten horns," says the text, "are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." These were "to make war with the Lamb," and be overcome by him; and they should hate the harlot, and "make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."

These ten kings were explained to mean the ten kingdoms into which Italy, which was St. Peter's patrimony, given to the church by Charlemagne, was divided. He quoted from a Catholic writer to show that these meant Illyria, Venetia, Lombard, Sardinia, Tuscany, Parma, San Marino, States of the Church, Modena, Naples, including Sicily. (This is the Elder's classification—not ours.) They "have received no kingdom as yet," applied to the fact that the ten kingdoms were not completed till the creation of the kingdom of Venetia, after the Austro-Italian war of 1859. That they should turn against the harlot had been fulfilled in the late overthrow of the power of the Pope at Rome, by these ten kingdoms. With the fulfillment of this prophecy comes the second Advent, which consequently is close at hand. The Elder stated a great many minor points, tending to support his interpretation of the prophecy; but we have been unable for want of room, to give more than a synopsis of the principal points of the sermon. The speaker's style was unpretending, but yet interesting; in some passages even eloquent. In his closing remarks, he asked his hearers if they were ready for the coming of Christ. If true Christians, they would rejoice at the coming of the Bridegroom. He might never meet them again until that day. He trusted to meet them all then, and would make an appointment to meet them at the marriage supper of the Lamb.—Daily Vallejo Recorder.

SPIRITUALISM.

Elder Miles Grant lectured last night in Platt's Hall upon "Spiritualism," and the hall was completely filled with a very attentive audience. The text which the Elder took as the foundation of his discourse was 1 Tim. 4:1 2:—"Now the Spirit expressly saith that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy."

The view which the Elder takes of spiritualism is that its phenomena are the work of the fallen angels, who are the seducing spirits or demons spoken of in the text; that they act upon men by mesmeric power in the same way as the man-mesmerist acts upon his fellow man, and that they cause the persons upon whom they exercise their power to see such imaginary forms or scenes as they (the demons) may desire, just as the mesmerizer is able to affect the mind of his subject. The Elder believes that these are "the latter times," and form, therefore, the era in which such spirits are, according to Scripture, to manifest themselves. According to

THE DOCTRINES OF THE SPIRITUALISTS THEMSELVES,

As set forth by Dr. T. L. Nichols, one of their leading men, "Spiritualism meets, neutralizes, and destroys Christianity." Mr. Grant believes this to be true, and thinks that the world is to be divided on Christianity and Spiritualism—that "the most terrible conflict will come up right on that question." He believes that Spiritualism will be the popular side—in other words, that the Christians will be in the minority when the struggle shall commence. He was, he said, prepared to join issue on the point, and hold public debate with anybody upon it; that in no single case do the spiritual manifestations proceed from departed human spirits. The reason

WHY THE DEMONS ACT

In this manner upon human beings and represent themselves to be the spirits of departed relatives, etc., is, the Elder believes, in order to bear out the lie spoken by the leader Satan, in the Garden of Eden, "Thou shalt not surely die."

IN THE DARK IN A NUDE STATE.

In the course of his address Mr. Grant said that he knew a man in this city who had dark spiritualistic "circles" in his house, the persons taking part in them being in a nude state. The man had already two wives both of whom he had abused so badly that they had not been able to live with him. He had heard that man speaking on the platform in Dashaway Hall not long since; he thought he was in the hall then (at the time Mr. Grant was saying the above,) and if he would step upon the platform he (Mr. Grant) would repeat what he had said. [Cheers.] It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Grant remained alone upon the platform as before.

QUERIES.

At the conclusion of the lecture, which was able and interesting, Mr. Grant announced himself ready to answer any questions that might be put to him by persons in the audience. A number of questions were put, and they and the answers to them created a great deal of amusement. It was very comical to see a self-confident querist rise up with a fiercely confident expression of countenance, propound what he evidently thought was "a crusher," have it easily answered by the Elder, or have it pointed out to him that he had misquoted his text; to see him struggle to maintain one position after another, each more untenable than the one preceding, and finally sit down protesting, but minus an argument.

One individual, who made an ass of himself, to the delight of everybody else, struggled fearfully to give his ideas expression, but failed most lamentably. "For the life of me," said he in conclusion, "For the life of me, I can't understand how a man can be dead and yet be alive!" "Neither can I," replied the Elder; and the questioner subsided, amid roars of laughter.

These little passages of arms seemed on the whole to be enjoyed, and the Elder seemed by the audience to be accorded the victory. To-night, at the same place, he will lecture on "The Resurrection of the Dead."—Daily (Cal.) Chronicle, Feb. 17th, 1871.

PUTTING IMMORTALITY TO SLEEP.

If the physical man can not think, and if an internal personality does all the thinking, how can a little chloroform, administered to a wide-awake man, produce utter unconsciousness? Does it really put immortality to sleep?

Not long ago, Dr. Bowman of South Carolina, wishing an operation on an eye, in order to escape the pain that he would otherwise be obliged to endure, concluded to take chloroform. The last he remembered was a sensation of sleepiness, and the next thing he knew he was waking up, inquiring, "Haven't they got ready yet?" Upon being told that it was "all over," the question at once flashed upon his mind, "What was the condition of my immortal soul during this operation, if I have such a personal thinker that lives in the body, and thinks independent of the material man?"

Can chloroform stop immortality from thinking? It certainly stops the real thinker from thinking, whether that is the man, or a personality within man. If the soul can think independent of the body, then no condition of the body can affect its thinking power. Immortality cannot be dependent upon mortality [illegible]; then why should immortality stop thinking when mortality sleeps? We again ask, Can immortality be put to sleep by chloroform? W. S.

SOUTHERN NOTES.—No. 7.

As I stated in my last, the night of Sunday, Feb. 26th, was so rainy that no meetings were held in the city; but I learn that the time was well spent in one part of the city, at a private house. A goodly number of friends residing in the country had come some distance to hear me on the prophecies, and put up with one of the deacons who had been listening to my discourses. The deacon sent for my chart, hung it up in his parlor, and occupied the time till past nine o'clock in explaining the symbols to his friends, and a few of his neighbors that came in. One of the deacon's daughters, an intelligent lady, has been soundly converted to God during my meetings, and is rejoicing in the truth, insisting she believes I have preached the truth of the Bible. So with others.

This (Feb. 27th) morning one of the leading colored men came into the shop of one of the brethren who is now rejoicing in the truth, and was inquired of how he liked my preaching over at the colored church. He said he generally went to church to sleep, but it was impossible for any one to sleep under that man's preaching; and said, "If any man can't stand that kind of preaching, he can't stand the word of God."

The old adage is, "Eaves-droppers hear no good of themselves"; but I have found that untrue; for since preaching here, the negroes to some extent have erected family altars, and I have stood out doors at night to hear them pray, and they don't forget to pray for me, and give me a higher recommendation to the Lord than I deserve. They warm up quick, and cool off quick generally.

Feb. 28, visited the Presbyterian minister, talked with him some on prophecy, and have engaged him to read some works on the topic that I am to furnish him. He appears open to conviction. I was much interested in his description of his eighteen years missionary life in China, and also in seeing a sample of the gods or idols of the Chinese, and other peculiarities from that country. I also had a visit with the Baptist minister. He thinks after he has studied the prophecies more fully he shall want a chart like mine. I am to furnish him with reading matter on every feature of our faith.

March 1. Seeing I am through preaching in this place for the present, I am scattering publications preparatory to my departure to another point. Some have promised to subscribe for the paper before I leave, but it is a task to get the warmest friends to subscribe in this land of extreme poverty. There are but few papers of any kind taken in this part of the south. Seed has been sown that will produce fruit. Truth will find some good soil.

I had arranged to return to Central Georgia, where I first preached in the State; but just a few hours before I was about to start, I received the following note from the Crisis office, written by a Methodist minister living in South Carolina, which induced me to change my programme: "If you have sent one of your preachers to the South this winter to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, do write to him, and tell him not to return till he shall give me a call. I wish to take him around on my circuit." So instead of returning to Central Georgia, I at once started for Darlington, South Carolina, in compliance with the above request from Bro. Bowman, who has been a minister in the South Methodist Conference for nearly forty years, and a believer in our faith for several years past, having twice been arraigned before the conference for preaching it. He is a man who will not wear any theological hand-cuffs, and will preach what he believes, and has done it fearlessly in South Carolina, and is listened to with deep interest, being a man of talent. I reached the place last night (Mar. 3d), and preached my first sermon to-day to a candid congregation. Bro. Bowman is destined to open a wide door for the truth in this State. He cannot be either driven or coaxed to another the truth; and if they turn him out, he has multitudes of friends who will stand by him. I am to preach for him several days longer. W. S.

THE MEETING IN CHARLESTOWN.

The brethren who have heretofore worshiped at Evening Star Hall, having hired the hall No. 70 Main St., removed the service to the latter place on last Sunday, 19th. The new hall is a much larger and more commodious place than the other, besides being much more convenient of access. It is a beautiful and well-furnished room, and was yesterday, afternoon and evening, well filled with people. Never, we presume, did a meeting in a new hall commence more favorably, or promise better results. In the morning we had a prayer-meeting, which was fully attended by the brethren and sisters, and improved by praying, singing, experience testimonies, and earnest exhortations, in a very interesting and profitable manner. How free and hearty were the exercises. Perfect harmony prevailed, and the divine presence seemed to pervade the whole to the close. There was not only pardon, but power.

In the afternoon we delivered a dedication discourse, dwelling on the position of the Advent people from the first until now. It was well received, especially by visitors, who heard upon our appreciation and improvement of the prophetic Word. Bro. Thurman assisted by prayer.

They have a Sabbath School here, and a church that will labor. It is hoped that the spirit of liberty and union, with the power of God, may still prevail with them. In the evening we spoke on the "Fall of Babylon."

BRO. H. S. MITCHELL writes:—"God is blessing the people in Bowdoin, Me. Elder H. D. Reed and myself commenced a protracted meeting, and the result is, twenty or more have resolved to live better and to be christians. The little society have been laboring for some years to keep up meetings, and sometimes it has looked discouraging to them; but now they can thank God that they ever held on by faith. To God be all of the praise."

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting at Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

AG'T.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. E. F. NETTLETON writes from Minn.: "Our eyes were opened about two years ago. We now see what we believe to be the true and tangible hope. I had held an imaginary hope, expecting to go to a sky kingdom, for fourteen years, and thought that death was the gate to endless joy; but I see now that death is an enemy. I love the appearing of my Lord better than I ever did before, for I expect immortality and eternal life when he comes. I have a desire to be one of that number that shall never die. There is a little band here looking and waiting for the return of their Master. Pray for us, that we may be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, while we may stand up for the truth, and meet the opposition from the professed church of God."

BRO. W. T. PILCHER writes:—"The Crisis is a weekly visitor which gladdens the hearts of many of its readers in Iowa. Our souls are fed from its columns. We read with believing hearts. We scarcely hear an Advent sermon in the far west, and when we do we feed upon it as of manna in the wilderness. I have heard Elder C. C. Ramsay preach three times, by going eighteen miles. He is truly a man of the gospel. I have heard Eld. P. S. W. Deyo give two sermons this winter, which were good to a thirsty soul. We went home rejoicing. We hand the Crisis to our friends to read, and they like it."

SR. S. THAYER writes from Seneca Falls: "It is with much gratitude that I read of Bro. Grant's labors and successes in Cal. My heart rejoices that God is still adding to the church some that will be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Praise his name. And I hope Bro. Sheldon will not withhold the bread of life from the poor of the Lord, on account of the prejudice of those who have oppressed them; for we must all give account of our stewardship; and I trust that some of those down-trodden ones may be Bro. S.'s crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord."

BRO. J. G. HOOK writes from North Searsport, Me.:—"We are having a glorious work of grace in this place. Sinners are being converted, backsliders coming home to the fold of Christ, and the saints are being revived and filled with the good Spirit. Thank God."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, March 16. The Journal des Debats, commenting on the result of the conference on the Eastern question, makes a bitter attack on England, and declares that she has lost every advantage gained by Crimean war. France is now helpless, her sword broken, but when it is unsheathed again its aim will not be so distant as Turkey. The other Paris journals speak of England in a similar spirit.

FRANKFORT, March 15. The Emperor of Germany, accompanied by the Grand Duke of Hesse, reached this city to-night. The entire city is illuminated, flags are flying, and triumphal arches span the principal streets. The excitement and joy of the people is unbounded. The Burgomaster presented an address of welcome and congratulation to the Emperor. At Saarbruck a laurel wreath was presented to the Emperor in the name of the Rhine Provinces.

PARIS, March 17. The Prussians have sent to the French authorities twelve thousand Chassepot guns for use in case of need here. Disorders continue, but are not of an alarming nature.

LONDON, March 17. The Empress Eugenie and the Prince Imperial are at Dover to-day to meet Napoleon, who is expected there this afternoon.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 16. The Austtelatt to-day has the following decision of the Black Sea Conference in London:

"Notwithstanding the newspaper invectives, the Powers have interpreted the letter of Prince Gortschakoff as reasonable and upright, and is not a challenge and not treachery. The result of the Conference in inviting no unjust sacrifice of stores and disturbing no rights, removes distrust and pledges peace."

PARIS, March 16. [Special to the World.] Many of the officers who served under Garibaldi have arrived and assumed command among the insurgents. A meeting of the chiefs was held yesterday, and it was determined to retain the cannon at all costs. The insurgents continue to fortify their position and mount new guns. Last night they constructed another intrenchment, and established large powder magazines.

INSURRECTION IN PARIS.

LONDON, March 19. Events of the most unfortunate character have taken place in Paris, and the situation is hourly becoming graver. The Government is following up the proclamation of M. Thiers.

PARIS, March 19. The journals this morning confirm the report of the execution of Generals Lecomte and Clement Thomas. After their capture they were taken to the Garden Reubes Rosiers, Montmartre, where the central revolutionary committee hold their sittings. After a brief trial they were condemned to death and taken and shot. All accounts say that they died bravely.

The Journal des Debats says that "yesterday will be considered one of the gloomiest hours in the history of France. A revolution under the banner of pillage is mistress of Paris. France will condemn these horrible assassinations and this odious insurrection which is without a pretext or purpose. Will the provinces come to our aid, or must the Germans re-enter the capital? This terrible day has wrought more damage to the Republic than all the Bonapartes."

PARIS, March 20. Gen. Chanzy, after being made prisoner, was conducted to the garde of the Reu de Rosiers, Montmartre, where the Central Revolutionary Committee were sitting, and after a short trial was shot. The regular troops now fraternize with the mob, and all the army discipline is gone. The city is in imminent danger of being given up to pillage.

Immense numbers of insurgents have left for Versailles intending to organize the Assembly which sits there to-morrow.

News has just been received that the Assembly at Versailles is in dismay and apprehension.

The Central Revolutionary Committee has issued a proclamation, convoking the people at Paris at a public assembly, for the purpose of holding a communal election. This decided step on the part of the revolutionists, has caused profound agitation in government circles.

Revolutionists have sent a communication to the Paris government, which demands guarantees for the establishment of the French Republic, and stating that no other form of government will be tolerated or recognized.

DOMESTIC

The Tribune's Washington correspondent this morning says that the report that the new Spanish Government is to sell Cuba and Porto Rico to the United States for $100,000,000 is true. Both the President and Secretary Fish say that Gen. Prim offered the colonies some time ago to the United States for $200,000,000.

Jackson, Miss., March 16. [Tribune special.] John F. Lacey, Mayor of Aberdeen, Miss., was abducted from his office last night by the Ku-Klux. Officers were sent in pursuit, but they failed to rescue Mr. Lacey. Much excitement prevails, and a perfect reign of terror exists in the eastern part of the State. Mayor Lacey was an ex-Federal officer.

Memphis, Tenn., March 16. Considerable excitement prevails on the northeastern border of Mississippi about Ku-Klux.

Col. Stout, Assistant Collector of Internal Revenue, has been ordered to leave Askaloosa in ten days. The superintendent of Education in Saunders county has been similarly warned, and attempts have been made to kidnap him.

TROUBLOUS TIMES IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—A correspondent writing from South Carolina under date of March 13th, says:

"Affairs in this State are at present in a very unsettled condition. In the upper portions of the State, persons, property and the public peace are wholly unprotected, owing to the outrages of the Ku-Klux-Klan. Such is the condition of affairs that members of the Legislature, which has just adjourned, dare not return to their homes should they be unfortunate enough to live in the upper portions of the State. Persons are taken from the county jails, in numbers from two to twelve, and murdered because of their political opinions. Innocent and inoffensive men, women and children are whipped because of their adherence to the principles of Republicanism. The extent of the outrages of this organized band of demons in human shape is only equaled by the atrociousness of their deeds. Murder and arson are their watchwords, and unless stopped in their operations, naught but desolation must follow. None but those resident of the State have any idea of the operations of this band of disguised men.

A REIGN OF TERROR IN THE SOUTH.—The Supervisors of Revenue in the Carolinas, Mississippi and Georgia report that in many districts a perfect reign of terror exists, the enforcement of the revenue laws being totally impossible, and the officers in some cases have been compelled to flee for their lives.

Religious Intelligence.

—— Mr. Frothingham preached a sermon during the recent session of the National Unitarian Convention in New York. He said: "A refined age rejects the coarseness of the Bible. A knowing age rejects the ignorance of it. A moral age discards its immoralities. A spiritual age turns away from them altogether."——As the result of a revival at Olathe, Kansas, the receipts of the dram-shops have fallen from sixty dollars to five per day.——The churches neglecting singing and music are the poorest and less frequented. Music is one of the first essentials of ecclesiastical prosperity.——Prayer meetings are held in an engine house in Brighton, one evening each week.——The Christian Union is credited with having said of denominational fences, that true christians "find means to shake hands over the pick-a-pales, and to kiss through the knot-holes."——"The streams of religion run deeper or shallower," says Calcott, "as the banks of the Sabbath are kept up or neglected." A preacher in Holland called the Sabbath God's dyke shutting out an ocean of evils.——Boston has appropriated $32,000 for music in her public schools.

In Brief.

—— It is a curious fact that the name of Napoleon was never known until borne by the first Emperor. It does not appear in any written history, neither has it been found in the baptismal records of the Catholic Church. It is not known from whence Carlo and Lettie Bonaparte obtained it.——The Count of Paris renounces any intention on his part to compete with the other Princes of the royal house of France for the throne.——The Roman Catholic schools of Cincinnati contain over 26,000 children.——The late Prince Imperial is said to be in very delicate health at Chiselhurst, and his mother, Eugenie, is much troubled about him.

A CLERGYMAN observing a poor man by the road breaking stones, and kneeling to get at his work better, made the remark, "Ah! John, I wish I could break the stony hearts of my hearers as easily as you are breaking those stones." "Perhaps, master, you do not work on your knees," was the reply.

Mass. Conference.

The Advent Mass. Conference will hold their annual meeting for the choice of officers at Worcester, Mass., at the Advent Chapel, commencing Tuesday evening, April 4th, and continuing through the week, and over the following Sunday. There will be preaching afternoons and evenings, upon the subjects of our faith and the prophecies relative to our Lord's coming, as we hope to have a general gathering of the defenders of Bible truth. The business will be held Thursday morning, at nine o'clock A. M. We hope to be represented from every part of the State. Come, brethren, make up your minds to be at this meeting. Send delegates. Let them be chosen immediately. Come in the name of the Lord to this feast, ready for the Master's work.

Geo. A. Streeter, Secretary.

Conference.

The Lord will, the third quarterly session of the N. H. State Conference will be held at Farmington, commencing Thursday, April 20th, at 7 o'clock P. M., to continue over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is extended to all to come to the feast. It is hoped that the Lord will send such of his servants to administer the word as shall most glorify him, and benefit the church.

T. W. Piper,
A. W. Sibley, } Committee.
C. H. Fletcher,

R. I. and East. Ct.

The R. I. and East. Ct. Conference will hold its next quarterly session with the church at North Scituate, R. I., commencing Wednesday, April 5th, at two o'clock P. M. We hope that all who can, especially our preachers, will attend this meeting, and labor for the advancement of the cause of truth. C. H. Sweet, Secretary.

Notice.

I have a variety of old Diaglott pamphlets, so that I could make out one volume, all except the last number. Any of our Bible students wanting, can have them very cheap; or if any one has the last number on Rev., and appendix, I will purchase of them. B. H. Couch, Concord, N. H., Box 902.

Notice.

Having closed my labors for the present in West Thornton, N. H., I would say I am at liberty to go and labor where the door may be open and God in his providence shall call. My P. O. address, for a few weeks, will be Castleton, Vt., care of Eld. S. G. Matthewson. A. W. Sibley.

Notice.

As I have considerable money to make out on my Hymn Book between this and April 1st, I hope that those owing me will remember my necessities, and send to me, if possible, between March 1st and 20th, at South Exeter, Me. If at any other time, address me at Machiasport, Me., my home.

If any brethren have sent me letters in the last six or eight weeks containing money, which I have not acknowledged, or calling for books or Admonitions, which they have not received, I wish they would inform me directly, stating all the facts, as I fear that some letters may be lost in this time. I. K. Lombard.

Notice.

As Bro. C. W. Rathburn, of Washington Village, R. I., formerly of the Methodist E. church, has received the light of the gospel of Christ's soon coming kingdom, and kindred truths, and feels called of God to preach the gospel, I cheerfully commend him to all the churches of God.

John G. Hook.

"WHILE THE DAYS ARE GOING BY."

There are lonely hearts to cherish
While the days are going by;
There are weary souls who perish
While the days are going by.
If a smile we can renew,
As our journey we pursue,
Oh! the good we all may do
While the days are going by!

There's no time for idle scorning
While the days are going by;
Let our face be like the morning
While the days are going by.
Oh! the world is full of sighs—
Full of sad and weeping eyes.
Help your fallen brother rise
While the days are going by.

All the loving links that bind us
While the days are going by,
One by one we leave behind us,
While the days are going by;
But the seeds of good we sow,
Both in shade and shine will grow,
And will keep our hearts aglow
While the days are going by.

LETTER FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

TO THE CRISIS:—Last evening Rev. Dr. Scott, the leading Presbyterian clergyman of this city, delivered a discourse on the destiny of the ungodly, or as the advertisement had it, "The Modern Revival of the Doctrine of the Annihilation of the Wicked."

The Elder departed this evening for Vallejo, where he is to preach during the week; and I promised to send you the Examiner's report of Dr. Scott's sermon—the paper not having been issued at the time the Vallejo boat left. I am glad it so happened that I am to see the report; for I attended Dr. Scott's church last evening, and can make some corrections of the record given by the Examiner's reporter. I see nothing in the rapid glance I have given it—in the report, which credits the Rev. Dr. with saying what he did not say, except this: the Dr. never uttered the words "Second Adventist" once. But the Dr. said, of course, much which is not reported; though all his "points" perhaps are given. Indeed, his discourse was a river of words for a few drops of argument. It begged the question from beginning to end. The Dr. spent at least half an hour in telling what the ancient Greek philosophers thought on the question of immortal-soulism, and at one time I was in hopes he would confess the revelation according to Herodotus concerning the origin of the dogma. He then expatiated on Lord Bacon's declarations and reasoning concerning the indestructibility of matter, and put an a fortiori argument, thus: If matter is indestructible, how much more indestructible is the spirit, or soul, that animates matter, and without which matter is dead? All the while jumping the contest respecting the question, What is the soul? and, of course, seeming to utter great things before an audience unenlightened on the controversy that begins on Gen. 1.

But he made some strong assertions, which have slipped the memory or jottings of the Examiner reporter. I remember some of the missing beauties. But before I mention any of them, let the Examiner's report—pretty faithful so far as it goes—be copied. It reads as follows:

(From the San Francisco Evening Examiner, Feb. 27th.)

The Destiny of the Ungodly.

DISCOURSE BY REV. DR. SCOTT.

Rev. Dr. Scott preached a powerful sermon last night at his church St. John's, (Presbyterian), on the theme upon which Elder Grant's discourses of late have created considerable religious speculation and excitement in this city.

Dr. Scott announced his text as being—

> "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows. Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven; but whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven."—MATT. 10: 28.

Dr. Scott said he believed the first of these verses is very confidently relied upon by the Second Adventists as supporting their views. He had concluded to offer the results of his investigation into the doctrine held by this sect. As to the propriety of doing this he at first had some doubts. Whether it would do his hearers any good, or if it was necessary to discuss the matter, were questions which he had to settle in his own mind. Besides such a discussion was very unpleasant to him; and he had concluded to address his congregation upon this subject, because it was his duty to declare unto them "the full counsel of God."

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

The subject involves most important questions: Is there life beyond the grave? If yes, is the soul happy or miserable in the future state? Is there life for all, or only for the godly? Will those who die in infancy live hereafter? Will the wicked cease to exist, or will their transgressions be followed by eternal torment? These and other questions involved are of such magnitude that they cannot be properly treated in one discourse. The reverend speaker announced his intention of continuing his consideration of the subject next Sunday.

THE DEAD.

When we think of the dead we are often filled with fear and trembling. We cannot suppress a feeling of great interest in the departed, for all of us have friends and loved ones in the land beyond the grave. Moreover, we ourselves, we know, are hastening to follow them out of earthly existence. Whatever theories may obtain as to the future of the soul, we know that our bodies will soon be crumbling to dust. It is, therefore, of absorbing interest to us to know whether the ungodly who have preceded us who transgress the law, will be annihilated, or punished with eternal torments.

The speaker said that in this and subsequent discourses he would show, he thought, to the satisfaction of his hearers, that the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked, now being revived, could not be true. Such destruction is a philosophical impossibility. The doctrine is worm-eaten, and revived in a new dress. It is inconsistent with reason and common sense. There is no text in the Bible which, when correctly read, favors such a thing. I believe in free thought, free speech, free schools, free trade, free religion, and that no man should be persecuted for his opinions. God is the author of the mind, and no man has the right to enslave it. But some men are bad logicians, poor reasoners, and do not see the consequences of their declarations. The doctrine now being considered has oftentimes, in past ages, been proclaimed, but until its modern revival, its defenders, I think, never claimed that it was a Bible doctrine. Now they plant themselves upon the Scriptures. What does God say? That must settle the matter.

EVERY AGE HAS ITS REVIVAL

of popular doctrines; or, as Carlyle says, every age has its distempers. It is hard to discover a new heresy, or a new theological idea; all the objections to the Christian religion have been fully met and answered a thousand times; yet, every now and then some fiery champion arises and boldly proclaims a doctrine the unsoundness of which has been repeatedly demonstrated. We are now told the Bible is to be made simple—its mysteries unraveled. The result of all this unraveling is, that we have no souls. Who says this? If the Bible teaches this, it teaches, to my mind, nonsense. The existence of God and spirits, that there is a connection between spirits and men, and that there is an eternal existence for all, are Bible truths, and are recognized by heathens as well as Christians.

This doctrine of destruction was held by philosophers 3,000 years ago, who based their opinion upon the theory that existence is abnormal, and that living things are struggling to get back to nothing. The great mass of people, however, have always believed in a future state. The doctrine of the Second Adventists was unknown to Moses and the patriarchs, or the early Christian writers. Bacon said nothing in nature is destroyed.

Dr. Scott then dwelt on the difference in meaning between the words

"ANNIHILATED" AND "DESTROYED."

The forest is destroyed, as forest, when it is cut down, but the matter is not annihilated. A log of wood is destroyed when it is burned, but the matter is not annihilated; the component parts still exist. The Second Empire of France is destroyed, but the Emperor, Empress, and Prince Imperial exist. Destruction of a thing is the breaking up of its parts—a cessation of the thing's existence in its original form or condition; annihilation—the utter destruction of things, and the matter or component parts of things—cannot be. Science teaches us there is no such thing as the annihilation of matter. Then, if it be true that matter is so safely secured from destruction, how reasonable it is to believe that the soul is "secured in its existence."

DEATH.

is a general term, but in no single sense does it signify destruction of elemental parts. Our friend is dead in the casket. We see his form. It lies motionless, and is going back to dust. Why? Because something has gone out of it. Because that something has left the body, is it to be presumed that that something has ceased to exist? The very matter composing that form once instinct with life cannot be annihilated, then why should we not believe that the something which has gone out of it cannot be annihilated? This matter of death is not more mysterious than life. How do you know you live? What is it that knows? But for that intelligent something you would not care whether you lived or not!

THREE KINDS OF DEATH.

Civil death is the separation of one from society, its rights and privileges. Spiritual death is the separation of the soul from God its Creator. Physical, or temporal, death is the separation of the soul from the body. There is nothing in the Bible justifying the belief that this physical death is the reducing of the soul to non-existence. The wicked of this world are already dead in trespasses and sin, and the second, or eternal death, or torment, or perdition, is the intensifying of the previous death. The agony goes on forever, and lives upon what it feeds upon.

The speaker then dwelt at length upon the Greek words for "body," "kill" and "destroy," and an examination of their meaning and application in the Scriptures, and concluded that it was impossible to make the word "kill," as used in the text, apply to the soul in the sense of ceasing to exist. He referred to the expressions concerning the "lost sheep," "prodigal son," etc. Where the word "lost" was forbidden by the context from meaning non-existence. He compared the soul to a bird in the cage—as the bird is entirely disconnected from, though imprisoned by the cage, so is the soul with reference to the body, when the door is opened the prisoner flies to its native air.

He concluded by asking his hearers if they did not feel that they had souls which death would liberate or separate from the body, but not destroy, or annihilate. The soul, when thus released from earthly shackles, will continue to exist with all the feelings and passions with which it grows up here. It will be rewarded with eternal life or punished with eternal misery. He earnestly appealed to them to be mindful of the future of their souls, and to embrace the offer of eternal life so freely extended to all.

The Reverend speaker announced that on next Sunday night he would continue the consideration of this subject, by a discourse upon the future of those who die in infancy, paying particular attention to the question as to whether the infants of the ungodly received eternal life or not.

It will be observed that while volunteering a plea for religious liberty—of which the Dr. has always been a sincere and ardent advocate—the Rev. preacher does not fail to throw into his discourse several sneers at the men who prominently champion the apostolic doctrines of life and death. "Bad logicians," "fiery champions"; and, according to my notes, he spoke of the leading advocates of "destruction" views as "ignorant" and "obscure," (hence) "misguided" men. The Dr. said at the outset that one reason why he hesitated to preach on the themes he now proposes for a series—getting a swell-tide from the crowd of listeners who attend at Platt's Hall, and are there "waked up" to the great issue—was because "such awful themes themselves are not pleasing to me." It will be observed that it was quietly intimated that those who preached the destruction of the wicked in "modern times," taught the destruction of the children of ungodly parents. Of course the Elder has taught no such thing here. And then the long hurrah about annihilation, "impossible," etc., had no legitimate replying reference to the Elder's discourses; for he has not raised any such issue as the Dr. indicates.

He contended that the first verse of his text proved the separate entity-existence of soul and body. Whether the soul was material or immaterial he would not discuss at present. He did n't think it was material whether it was material or immaterial. This was his language. The doctrine of the destruction, extinction, annihilation, of the wicked, had been asserted by ignorant and obscure men at different periods—was strenuously asserted and argued at one time, and then laid away among other old fossil theories—to be revived at this day by some who thought they proclaimed a new discovery when they heralded this ancient and oft-exploded heresy. He said (as reported) that this doctrine was unknown to Moses; that it "never entered the mind of the patriarchs"; never was entertained in the ancient church; and never was known as a doctrine among any respectable body of christians in the early times. (I am giving nearly his exact words.) He said that the first hint of it was in Justin Martin's dialogue with Trypho. It was not found among the writings of the christian Fathers of the first century.

The doctrine was founded on a misunderstanding of terms and words and facts; was utterly unphilosophical, utterly impossible,—utterly opposed to right reason, common sense, and the highest and holiest traditions of mankind. Then Lord Bacon again, on the indestructibility of matter. Then the illustration about the forest and the log of wood. "Death" was a dissolution of parts; not a ceasing to exist; not an extinction of elemental parts. Again and again, thus: Matter cannot be annihilated (Lord Bacon); much more is it impossible to annihilate soul.

He would show that "there is not a single text of Scripture from the beginning to the end of the Bible which supports this doctrine" of the destruction of the wicked. He had only time to examine the texts quoted. More at future lectures. Then a rambling, confused, and to nine-tenths of his audience utterly incomprehensible (and to one-tenth, utterly illogical!) statement of definitions of original words for "to kill," etc. "These passages teach that the soul and body are distinct entities, after the body is killed." "Whatever the soul may be, it is independent of the body." These are verbatim, from among the last repetitions of dogmatic statement. Then came the cage and bird comparison; which was original. From death the sinner is continued in wretched existence; his wretchedness aggravated—his agony living on what it feeds upon.

From all this I think you will get a pretty full idea of the best the best Presbyterian minister in this city can do, by way of brushing aside the fossil heresy, the worm-eaten doctrine, with which the fiery champion of the east has disturbed the complacency of the respectable body of elect, who read the Bible through the Westminster Catechism. The Elder will reply to the Dr., or, rather, give some additional evidence for the truth on the life and death question next week, at Platt's Hall.

Infidels are attending the Minna St. church meetings in large numbers. Two of the officers of the Infidel Lyceum in this city rose last night for prayers, and the scenes throughout at the conference meeting after the sermon last night, were deeply impressive and thrilling.

The tracts and books were joyfully received. A good and helpful disposition can be made of all similar favors. There should be an abundance of Grant's smaller tracts—"What is the Soul," etc., for distribution. The city is alive on the main questions. The interest is rising. Judges, lawyers, physicians, as well as the "common people," come, and apparently hear the truth gladly. People come out of the church with a choking utterance of joy for one another: "O, it's so plain. I always thought the Bible was such a puzzle."

I overheard the speech of two rough lads, as I was walking up Montgomery street last Sunday week: "Let's go and hear Scudder, if he preaches to-night; it's as good as the theatre. He get's off a heap of fun." "No," responded the other, "I'm going down to Minna St. church, to get a square meal."

REMARKABLE WORK OF GOD IN MINNA-STREET CHURCH.

DEAR SPECTATOR:—The kingdom of God cometh not with observation. How true it is, that God's ways are not as our ways! The great work of God in the Minna-street Church is a remarkable illustration of this truth. An apparently accidental meeting of Bro. Bailey with Elder Grant led to a protracted meeting under their joint leadership. The thing was curious, was it not?—the union of these two men in such a work in such a place. It was a remarkable beginning. The work began, and as it progressed other extraordinary features were developed, such as the absence of all formality; the commingling of believers of different churches; the melting away of prejudices; the surrender of non essentials, and the exaltation of the truth as it is in Jesus. Freedom, power, and a tender, loving spirit, pervaded the congregations.

But the one great feature of these meetings was the exaltation of Jesus. This was the rallying word all the time. Jesus the Savior; Jesus the King; Jesus the Almighty; Jesus the slain Sacrifice; Jesus the risen and interceding Redeemer; Jesus coming to set up his everlasting kingdom; Jesus our victorious Captain, now leading his followers to glorious victory;—Jesus was preached as I scarcely ever heard him preached before. Why, sir, it was sometimes like the proclamation of a new gospel, such was the vividness and power with which Jesus was presented to those crowded congregations in Minna-street. How often did a stanza from the "Coronation" hymn burst spontaneously from the joyful hearts of the people! "All hail the power of Jesus name!" was the key-note of the whole revival.

And, Mr. Editor, it was a genuine revival, a work of God. Jesus, preached and exalted a Prince and Savior, was present to save. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, infidels confounded and convinced, and hundreds impressed with the power of God. The preaching was remarkable for its simplicity, its directness, and Bro. Bailey's snatches of song in the experience meetings seemed to present the very evangelical essence of our excellant Hymn Book. I never realised so fully what a powerful adjunct is the singing to the preaching.

There was less of speculative theology in the preaching than is usual on such occasions. Elder Grant, while in Minna-street, seemed only anxious to present Jesus to dying men as their Savior, and to exhort them to be "ready" for his coming. There was no hobby-riding, nothing that made the most distant approach to fanaticism in his teaching or manner. He preached Jesus with earnestness, simplicity, and evangelical power. He never touched on experimental religion without warming my heart. Is there any better test of a preacher than this? The work in Minna-street is a gracious work of God, and it still goes on. By its fruits shall it be known. No man can do the works of God except God be with him. Let all Christian readers of the Spectator pray for the work in the Minna-street congregation, and let the name of Jesus be exalted above every name. GRATITUDE.

WHOSE BUSINESS IS IT?—No. 5.

AFFLICTIONS OF THE TOBACCO-USER'S WIFE.

Men may become so accustomed to hardships, calamities, inclement weather, change of climates, handling of goods and chemicals of bad odor, working in bogs, swamps, drains, sewers, and vaults, that the olfactory nerves and the stomachs of the more hardy become enabled to endure the stench of the most offensive odor, even of an atmosphere poisoned with the effluvia of tobacco. But very many men are not strong enough to endure such, and sicken and die in the attempt. What, then, must be the difficulties of women, with less physical strength, greater nervous sensitiveness, and unaccustomed to the associations above mentioned, when doomed to be companions of men who use tobacco, especially those who smoke it?

We now touch a point which calls up the experiences of thousands of wives who have suffered indescribable afflictions by living in an atmosphere literally poisoned with tobacco. We cannot describe these sufferings. Loving and faithful wives, who have taken their choice of husbands "for better or for worse," will seldom attempt to do it, but, true to woman's nature, suffer it in silent sorrow. Yet some do not have physical ability to endure it; they break down, sicken, and pine away. Some resort to the use of tobacco themselves, to be able the sooner to conquer their sensitiveness to poison. Some cannot do this, and are obliged to occupy rooms by themselves, away from the stench of tobacco, or be constantly sick. They have good husbands in all respects, except in the use of tobacco; they respect their husbands, but God has given them noses and stomachs which will not and cannot become reconciled to tobacco. These wives live in hope that their husbands will yet reform; they do all they can to please them; many do without the luxuries of life, the associations and pleasures of life; others suffer for the necessities of life, together with a family of suffering children, while husbands are spending their earnings for the luxury of tobacco. Whose business is it?

We have arrived at a stage of "progression" where many of the girls of this generation are trained up in a "tobacco atmosphere," and those whose physical constitutions are strong enough to overcome the poison and "become acclimated," must endure life with a tobacco husband with much less difficulty than those not accustomed to it in youth. The smoking young men of former times have lost many a fair bride, who could not decide to marry a "tobacco man," however good in every other respect.

Will not tobacco-using christians carefully consider in their secret prayers the calamities tobacco brings to their wives?

WHOM WILL YE CHOOSE?

"Release to us Barabbas,
Away with Christ the Lord;
We care not for his mandate,
We will not hear his word."

These fatal words were spoken
In ages long ago;
They killed the Lord of glory,
As all the world doth know.

And all the world doth wonder
That such a thing could be;
So perfect in their blindness,
The light they could not see!

"The world is more enlightened,"
I heard a sweet voice say,
"I'm sure it would not happen,
If he were here to-day."

Then listen, I will tell you
He's here in word and deed,
As when he made the promise
To Abraham and his seed.

And does the world receive him,
The holy One and just,
The Lord of life and glory,
The loveliest and the best?

It is the self-same story,
Repeated as of old;
They sell the Lord for pleasure,
They barter him for gold.

They see no beauty in him,
The slain of Calvary;
They cannot share his glory
When they that glory see.

Every eye shall soon behold him
Seated on his jasper throne,
Every knee shall bow before him
While he reigns from zone to zone.

"Fall on us, O rocks and mountains,"
Now is heard the mournful cry;
"We have slain the Lord of glory,
Hide us from his searching eye."

The heavenly allelulas
Rise joyfully and long,
While earth's rejoicing millions
Join the redemption song.

REPORT.

NEW YORK ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

Brockport, Mar. 2nd to 5th, 1871. Thursday evening. The first meeting of the third and last quarterly session of this conference, for the current year, was called to order by the president at seven o'clock this evening, in Brockport, and some time well spent in prayer and social intercourse; after which, in the opening address, Bro. J. H. Whitmore paid a beautiful tribute to the christian religion as a system, founded upon that grandest of all laws—love, or, in Scripture phrase, Charity; and as being incomparably superior in nature, results, and all respects, to every other system, human, of ethics, philosophy, or government, ever yet devised. There were present at this first meeting, Brn. Stevens, Vreeland, Miles, Sweet, and Whitmore, of the ministers, together with an encouraging number of delegates and brethren and sisters of the laity, all with pleasant faces, warm hearts and earnest voices for the truth, which, a stranger reporting this religious market, would not be unlikely to "quote" as considerably above par, with a firm upward tendency.

Friday, A. M. Met again for prayer and conference, and rejoiced greatly together in "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." P. M. Services were introduced by singing—"Come, let us anew our journey pursue." Prayer by Bro. D. Cogswell, when Bro. B. F. Stevens gave an excellent sermon from Rev. 21: 7—"He that overcometh shall inherit all these things." After this meeting the first business session was held, the president in the chair. Secretary's report read and approved.

Committees appointed: On business—C. F. Sweet, J. H. Whitmore, M. B. Miles, B. C. Brown, and B. C. Simonds. On devotional exercises—D. Cogswell, A. Riggs, and B. F. Brownell. Delegates and conference funds.—Henry Hey, W. Barre, $5. G. Strong, Darien, (pledges not yet received). Paul Grinnell, E. Shelby (pledges for tent, $16). B. C. Brown, South Butler, $3.50. L. Davis, Brockport, $3.75. A. Burghduff, Wolcott. E. D. Hanson, Honeoye (pledges for tent, $50) $2.75. W. M. Steele, Alton. A. Riggs, Lockport, $5. J. E. Wells, N. McCulloch, Rochester, $5. D. Cogswell, Dansville, $11.50. Total cash receipts, $36.50.

TREASURER'S REPORT.—Paid W. A. Fenn to procure baptismal pants for use of tent, $16.00. Paid E. A. Bowe for tracts for free distribution, $10. On hand for summer campaign, $65.16.—B. C. SIMONDS. Report accepted. The remaining time was occupied with hearing preachers' reports. Listened to Brn. D. Cogswell, J. Blain, C. F. Sweet, W. J. Hobbs, C. P. Greenman, and M. B. Miles. Bro. Miles' report related mostly to his labors as one of the "Visiting Committee." He had traveled three hundred miles, preached eighteen sermons, seen ten conversions, and found nearly all in favor of the proposed system of circuit preaching. Adjourned further business to Saturday A. M. At half past six o'clock convened again for prayer and social meeting; had a spirited and encouraging season, followed by the song—

"Forever with the Lord";

prayer by B. F. Stevens, and an interesting discourse from Bro. D. Cogswell, on the ministration of angels, to an intelligent and attentive audience.

Saturday A. M. President called the meeting to order at half past nine for business. Prayer by Bro. C. F. Sweet. Reports were then resumed from ministers and delegates. Listened to Brn. A. C. Newell, J. E. Wells, E. F. Sergisson, W. Vreeland, ministers; E. A. Bowe, colporteur; A. Riggs, P. Grinnell, B. C. Simonds, L. Davis, B. C. Brown, N. McCulloch, Wm. M. Steele, delegates.

Here the reports were suspended for other business. The tent matter was disposed of by the following resolution by Bro. J. H. Whitmore:

Resolved, That Brn. B. F. Stevens, M. B. Miles, and D. Cogswell, constitute an executive committee to act for this conference in the purchase of a new State tent; being instructed to take into consideration the most suitable size, form, and fabric, and order and purchase the same before the first of May next.

Bro. Cogswell asked for a rising vote expressive of the mind of the meeting as regards supporting heartily the tent enterprise, and received an encouraging response. A subscription was now raised (the names to which are here suppressed, as it is supposed most, if not all of them, are recorded by the angel-secretary in the life book, to which you are referred), the amount to complete the tent fund, all the pledges of which were to be sent to the treasurer, B. C. Simonds, Darien, N. Y., by the first of May. $221 were pledged, and it is hoped all will be prompt in the payment, as the committee are arranging to have the tent on hand betimes. $158.39 cash were paid down, besides $40 taken in a subsequent collection to pay in part the expenses of the preachers. Total for new tent, $379.39. This was most noble action on the part of those assembled in conference. The Lord willing and blessing, the State Tent will still be an institution to his praise, and we trust to the salvation of many. (It ought to be said here, in parenthesis, that several of our poor ministers paid or pledged $5 each, in raising the above fund, which ought not so to be! Will not some of the brethren or sisters, who were not at conference, and whose duty or privilege it may be, correspond with the treasurer or secretary immediately, stating what sums they will pledge towards relieving the ministry of this unjust burden?)

2 o'clock P. M. At this hour Dr. N. H. Barbour, late of New York, gave a very interesting discourse on the parable of the ten virgins, showing a beautiful harmony between it and the movements of the Advent people since 1843, and looking to 1873 for the return of the Bridegroom. After this meeting, met again for business. The following preamble and resolutions, offered by Bro. Whitmore, passed quite unanimously, viz:—

Whereas, the experience of other State conferences has shown the great advantages of holding a State campmeeting in connection with the annual conferences; and whereas it is desirable that every part of our State should be represented in our annual meetings; therefore,

Resolved (1), That a committee of seven be appointed, whose business it shall be to consider and decide upon the advisability of holding such a meeting, in connection with the annual conference; to locate, and make such other arrangements for the same, as they may deem necessary.

(2), That said committee be as follows: Wm. E. Brown, South Butler; A. C. Bishop, Honeoye; N. McCulloch, Rochester; Lawrence Grinnell, East Shelby; A. Riggs, Lockport; N. Withington, Springwater; and Wm. Morrell, New London.

The other members of the committee on circuit preaching were now called upon to report. Bro. Whitmore had visited several places, but sickness had prevented him from fully discharging his duties in this capacity. He read letters from Abraham Hennekey, Clymer, N. Y.; Orman Spicer, Kendall, N. Y.; John Thorp, Northeast, Pa.; A. H. Briggs, Spring Mills, N. Y., and others; which calls he had been unable to attend to. Bro. Fenn next reported. His late sickness had also almost wholly prevented his taking any steps in the direction indicated in the instructions given the visiting committee.

A letter was here received and read from Bro. A. P. Moore, of Boston, Mass., recommending the proposed campmeeting, etc. Bro. Cogswell moved that Bro. J. F. Wells of Rochester, and S. Gove of Fairport, receive from this conference certificates of license and recommendation to the confidence of the various churches and communities where they may be called to labor in the gospel. Adjourned to the call of the chair. Saturday evening.—A large audience assembled at an early hour, and after a spirited prayer and social season, the more public services were introduced by singing—

"I love thee, I love thee," etc.

Prayer by Bro. C. P. Greenman. Bro. C. F. Sweet then discoursed on the resurrection, from Phil. 3: 10, 11.

Sunday, A. M. Another large audience assembled at nine o'clock, and we enjoyed a very rich season; truly it was a heavenly place, where one might well desire to build three or more tabernacles. Besides the many prayers and rich songs of praise, over fifty testimonies were given of love for Jesus and his appearing, and avowing a fixed purpose to serve him until death should paralyze their powers, or that blessed hope obtain, bring the welcome words, "Well done!" and crown their labors with the long-sought rest. After which one rose in the congregation in first confession of the Savior. The regular morning services were then introduced by the whole congregation (as usual) singing—to the tune, "Sweet by and by," and prayer by Bro. J. E. Wells, when Bro. W. A. Fenn spoke, giving a characteristic discourse from Prov. 23: 23. At the close of this meeting, it was found necessary to have a short business session—although it was the Lord's day, it was thought not an inappropriate time to transact the Lord's business—and the delegates therefore tarried. The visiting committee desired to be discharged, which was accordingly done. But as the subject which had been father to the committee could not be so easily disposed of, a little discussion resulted in passing a new resolution, as follows:—Resolved, That Wm. E. Brown be, and is hereby constituted a committee to visit isolated brethren and churches within the limits of this conference, to advise with them relative to the propriety of organizing a system of circuit preaching. (2) That the expenses thus incurred, and not met by the churches visited, voluntarily, shall be borne by this conference. A quorum of the campmeeting committee also met and appointed to meet in body in Rochester, at Bro. W. McCulloch's, on the first day of May next (D. V.).

Sunday, P. M. The services were introduced with the old-time song—

"How long, O Lord, our Savior!"

Prayer by Bro. Warren Vreeland. Sermon by Bro. W. J. Hobbs, in which he made the six points, viz.: the literal birth, death, resurrection, ascension, future coming, and eternal reign, of "this same Jesus." Text, Luke 1: 32, 33. The audience was large, more than half of which tarried after the general dismissal, through the communion service. It was a solemn and impressive scene, and there was a rich thought connected with it: that we should not long be called upon thus to "show forth the death of the Lord"—looking sadly upon his vacant seat—"till he come."

Evening—at six o'clock, another large company came together for prayer and conference, and we listened to a perfect flood of testimonies and songs of praise, all breathing the one central and all-absorbing thought—loving Jesus and his coming. Then, after prayer by Bro. E. F. Sergisson, a very large audience united in singing—and we think there were many who felt the spirit of the song; and others, we trust, were aroused to it by the sermon that followed, by Bro. C. H. Williams, who resumed, in a different line of thought, the consideration of the morning's text, Prov. 23: 23.

"I'm a pilgrim, and I'm a stranger,"

The Brockport Republic says: "We heard this last sermon, and can say that from the Adventists' standpoint it was excellent. He argued that, as the world was nigh to an end, the people should be prepared to meet their God, and should give their attention to that work. They should not occupy their minds with chignons, braids, curls, jewelry, ribbons, flounces, and other furbelows; these things should be discarded; and christians should dress plainly, neatly, and with a simplicity becoming the christian character. The sermon evidently had a powerful effect, for one clergyman explained how he came to wear a glittering watch-chain, and a lady said that she would dispose of her chains for the sake of Jesus. The clergyman directed the special attention of his hearers to the third chapter of Isaiah."

Seventeen ministers were present at this conference, and there was the most perfect harmony throughout the meeting. A vote of thanks was tendered the kind friends of Brockport for generous entertainment.

Gems.

— I see there is no such way to have a large harvest as to have a large heart. The free giving of the branches of our present estate to God, is the readiest means to have the roots increased for the future.

— Affections are harder to suppress, than enemies to subdue.

Ye who think the truth grows slow,
Lost beneath the winter snow,
Doubt not—time's unerring law
Yet shall bring the genial thaw.

— To fly from peace, which we should earnestly pursue, is to follow discord and our own destruction.

— Truth is a virtue that scaleth the heavens, illuminateth the earth, maintaineth justice, governeth common weals, killeth hate, nourisheth love, and discovereth secrets.

— Faith joined with prayer maketh it more forcible, but humility coupled with it maketh it beneficial and effectual.

— Learn to have not one life for God and another for the world, but let your life be divinely devoted and divinely quickened. Let every footstep be a walk with God.

Hold the light up higher, higher,
Thousands need our aid;
Throw its flashes higher, nigher,
Urge, constrain, persuade;
Borrow torches from the altar,
Blazing like the sun,
Hold them up, nor flag, nor falter,
Till thy work is done.

— In the bank of England is a curious machine, into which sovereigns are poured, like grain into a mill. As they pass on one by one, all that are of light weight are thrown to one side, those of full weight to another; so that the distinction is made with unerring certainty. So will it be at the last day.

— The answer which truth gives a man depend very much upon the questions which he puts to truth; the manner in which he puts his questions depends very much upon the principles which rule his life.

— No prayer can change the will of God unto us, except first of all we renounce and conquer our own wills.

Every hour that flits so slowly,
Has its task to do or bear;
Luminous the crown and holy,
When each gem is set with care.

— True love is never idle, but worketh to serve him whom it loveth.

— There is not a star of all the heavenly hosts that responds to the feelings of the skeptic and the deist, not one insect, not the petal of one flower, that does not contradict their feelings and rebuke the spirit with which they look on the works of God.

USE YOUR EYES.

How many of our little readers know how the birds sleep? They are shy of taking their naps in public, and are not often caught nodding by daylight, but any one whose eyes are sharp enough to peer under the shadows of leaves and into the quietest nooks of the great sheltering trees, may sometimes see one there in the summer evening, or very, very early of a summer morning, his feathers shaken out, and his feet curled up out of sight, and his head tucked away under his wings, until the lithe little creature looks like nothing but a bunch of fluffy feathers. Hold your breath as you watch him, for with the smallest sound the head starts out, the round eyes are wide open and alert, the wings quiver, and with a sudden flutter the bird is gone. Or you may sometimes see the mother bird in brooding-time, watching you warily over the edge of her nest, the head so drawn down into the feathers that the beak seems to spring directly from between the wings—perhaps she sleeps, but her vigilance seems unremitting. Or, if you live in the city where you know little of the bird-time and blossom-time of the country, you may still have watched your pet in his gilded cage, make himself into a funny little ball of yellow feathers, and settle down to sleep in his swinging cradle. Yes, I am sure you all know about this, and so I should like to have heard the shout that would have gone up, if some scores of black eyes and blue could have looked over my shoulder at a picture I saw lately—a picture by an artist too, and in some of its features very charming.

But there were two sleeping birdies, and how do you think they took their naps? Why, the mother hung her head over the edge of the nest in a position no bird ever assumed, unless it was a chicken, after its neck had been wrung by the cook, while her mate stood up on a neighboring twig at the utmost hight of his very long legs, and leaned against the trees sidewise, like a drunken loafer against a lamp-post. It was so funny THE CORPORAL laughed until the tears came into his eyes, and wondered what the birds that sleep in the oak trees of summer nights would say to the picture; and I thought I would advise the boys and girls to keep their eyes open, and find out just how all these little creatures live and move and have their being—it may be worth while sometime to know just how a bird sleeps.—Little Corporal.

HAPPY WITHOUT IT.

A little boy had broken his handsome arrow and came to mamma to have it mended. His lip quivered a little and tears came into his eyes, as he saw his toy so damaged.

"I will try to fix it, darling," said his mamma, "but I am afraid I cannot do it."

He watched her anxiously for a few minutes, and then said cheerfully,

"Never mind, mamma; if you can't fix it, I will be just as happy without it."

This is the great secret of being happy in this world. If we can be happy without things, we are sure to be happy with them. The "happy" must be inside. It does not depend upon what we have, or what we can do. If we knew this truth we should not envy others as we do. Would we [illegible] what many a rich man is, to have what he has?—Ex.

NEATNESS, NOT FINE THINGS.

Little boys and girls,—Are you neat and tidy in your person, dress, furniture and household duties everywhere and at all times? No matter about fine, butterfly things, artificials and gew-gaws.—Study neatness, modesty, virtue, purity, love—what things soever are true, honest, just, and of good report.

Some little ignorant children delight
In wearing fine ribbons and curls!
But it's a very ridiculous sight,
Though they do not know it, perhaps.
Cleanliness and clean faces, and neatly combed hair,
And garments made decent and plain,
Are better than all the fine things they can wear,
Which make them look vulgar and vain.
The girl who will keep herself tidy and clean,
(As every child easily may),
Need not be afraid or ashamed to be seen,
Whoever may come in her way.
Then children, attend to the words you repeat,
And always remember this line,—
'Tis a credit to any good child to be neat,
But quite a disgrace to be fine.

THERE is no worse robber than a bad book. Other robbers may spoil us of our money, but a bad book robs us of our faith, our truth, our purity of heart—of all we value most. Young reader, beware of bad books.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

PHYSICAL CAPITAL FOR CHILDREN.—Every hour that a child sleeps is just so much investment of physical capital for years to come. Every hour after dark that a child is awake is so much capital withdrawn. Every hour that a child lives a quiet, tranquil, joyous life of such sort as kittens live on hearths, squirrels in sunshine, is just so much investment in strength and steadiness and growth of the nervous system. Every hour that a child lives a life of excited brain-working, either in a school-room or in a ball-room, is just so much taken away from the reserved force which enables nerves to triumph through the sorrows, through the labors, through the diseases of later life. Every mouthful of wholesome food that a child eats, at reasonable hours, may be said to tell on every moment of his whole life, no matter how long it may be. Victor Hugo, the benevolent exile, has found out that to be well fed once in seven days for one meal has been enough to transform the apparent health of all the poor children in Guernsey. Who shall say that to take once in seven days, or even once in thirty days, an unwholesome supper of chicken salad and champagne may not leave as lasting effects on the constitution of a child?—Independent.

WEAK LUNGS.—POSITION DURING SLEEP.—"When quite young I had a severe attack of bilious fever, which affected one of my lungs. Since then I have enjoyed perfect health, yet the least over-exertion or excitement causes me to puff like a steam-engine, and partially lose self-control. Does this indicate any unsoundness of the lungs? Is it more healthy to sleep on the side than on the back? Is it not injurious to the ear to have the side of the head pressed down on a pillow?"

Your lungs may not be diseased, but they are weak. They need strengthening and expanding. Take all the out-door exercise you are able to, but avoid over-exertion and excitement. A course of gymnastic training would be a most excellent thing for you. If that is not practicable, practice rowing, exercise with Indian clubs or upon a "Home Gymnasium."

For healthy persons the position for sleep is upon the back, for the reason that it allows freer motion of the lungs. It is not so good if one takes late suppers. There are certain diseased conditions of the body in which lying upon the side is the best position. It may or may not be injurious to the ear to have the side of the head pressed down upon a pillow. If the pillow is a feather one it is most assuredly injurious, but if made of some good heat-conducting material, the injury, if any, is very slight indeed.—Ex.

ACTIVITY AND HEALTH.—All observation attests that the healthiest persons in the world are those most actively employed. The same is true with regard to women as well as men, and in respect of mental as well as physical labor. The adage, "It is better to wear out than to rust out," is true in the ordinary sense in which it is quoted, but it should also be remembered that rusting out is a more rapid process than wearing out. The ghastly goddess of ill health and disease delights in sluggish blood and indolent muscles.—Health and Home.

EATING.—Great eaters never live long. A voracious appetite, so far from being the sign of good health, is a certain indication of disease. Some dyspeptics are always hungry, and feel best when eating; but as soon as they have finished eating they endure torments so distressing in their nature as to make the poor victim wish for death.—Ibid.

— VENTILATE well, according to the season, every apartment of your dwelling, from the garret to the cellar, keeping your premises clear of all noxious or infectious substances, thus securing a pure atmosphere to be breathed by all the members of your family.

— THERE is no better remedy for cold feet than to slap the leg briskly, just above the knee, after raising the foot. The increased circulation induces immediate relief.

— LEAVE utterly untouched tobacco, opium, and all alcoholic liquors.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth: especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

ETERNITY.

Days come and go
In joy or woe;
Days go and come
In endless sum.
Only the eternal day
Shall come but never go;
Only the eternal tide
Shall never ebb, but flow.
O long eternity,
My soul goes forth to thee!

Suns set and rise
In these dull skies;
Suns rise and set,
Till men forget
The day is at the door,
When they shall rise no more.
O everlasting Sun,
Whose race is never run,
Be Thou my endless light!
Then I shall fear no night!

THIEF ON THE CROSS.

"And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke 23: 42, 43.

As this passage is generally understood, it is supposed to teach that our Savior and the dying thief went to Heaven, or Paradise, when they died; thus, of course, a precedent, teaching that all who die forgiven immediately enter into glory. Now it is stoutly maintained by many that the invariable teachings of the Scriptures are to the effect that the righteous shall be recompensed at the resurrection; that every man shall be rewarded when Christ comes again; that the final judgment is a pre-requisite to an introduction into the kingdom of God.

Both of these positions cannot be correct, from the fact that they positively clash. One must yield. Which? All will answer—The one that is incorrect. How shall it be determined which is correct? By the consistency of all parts, and the general harmony of the Scriptures related to that point. It might be asked, then, if we admit in any degree a contradiction in the word of God? We answer emphatically, No. It is only apparent, and a proper investigation and interpretation will bring all into perfect harmony.

As the above text is a stumbling-block in the way of many who are seeking the truth, we propose by the divine aid to analyze the subject, and present it in its true features.

There is a natural division of the subject.

(1.) The prayer of the thief.

(2.) The reply of the Lord.

What was the prayer of the thief? "Lord, remember me, when thou comest into thy kingdom." When did he ask to be remembered? "When thou comest into thy kingdom." Did the thief pray understandingly? We think he did. Then he believed that Christ was destined to be a king, and possess a kingdom; otherwise, there was no consistency or propriety in his petition. Then follows the legitimate and important question: When and where did the thief learn anything concerning Christ as the destined king of a coming kingdom? As he was a convicted criminal, he either learned it before or after his apprehension. (For the apostle says "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.") We think it highly improbable that he heard Christ preach prior to his apprehension, from the fact that he was not led sooner to repentance and reformation, as he gave evidence of being honest when convinced.

But even supposing that he sat under the teaching of Jesus during his ministry, did he ever hear any sentence fall from the lips of the Savior, indicating that his kingdom was to be enjoyed at death? Certainly not. He might have heard him say—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. 25: 31. He might have heard him in the same discourse and connection declare (ver. 34)—"Then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." If he ever heard any conflicting declaration from the lips of the Master, it has certainly never been placed upon the sacred record. By far the most probable theory is, that all the thief learned concerning our Lord, he learned at his (the Lord's) examination before the chief priests and Pilate, and at the Cross. And when we compare what transpired there with the thief's petition, we discover a wonderful harmony. "And the whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate; and they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ, a king. And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the king of the Jews? And he answered him and said, Thou sayest it." Luke 23: 1–3. See also Matt. 27: 11.

A spectator of the above scene would have learned therefrom two things. First, that Christ was accused by his enemies of calling himself a king. Second, that he denied it not when summoned directly on that point. "Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the king of the Jews? . . . . Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world [or age]; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence. Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born; and for this cause came I into the world; that I should bear witness unto the [this] truth." John 18: 33, 36, 37.

From the above the spectator would learn two important facts. First, that Christ was born to be a king. Second, that his kingdom was not yet inaugurated. "My kingdom is not from hence,"—does not begin at this point,—"is not of this world"; is neither cotemporaneous with nor partaker of the character of this world's kingdoms; else he would have maintained his right by force of arms.

But again, in Matt. 26: 63, 64, we find the same truth abundantly corroborated: "And the high priest answered and said unto him [Jesus], I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said; nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven."

Let us now recapitulate what the Savior affirmed concerning his kingdom during his examination before Pilate and the high priest.

1. I was born to be a King.

2. My kingdom is not of this world (or age,—is not cotemporary with earthly kingdoms), "is not from hence"; that is, not yet commenced.

3. My kingdom is to come hereafter, when I appear in the clouds of heaven.

Nor is there an intimation during the whole examination, of going into the kingdom at death. Hence, supposing the thief to be present, he could never have conceived such an idea. Taking these facts in connection with the inscription on the cross of Jesus,—"Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews,"—we can very readily conclude that the thief prayed understandingly when he said—"Lord, remember me when thou COMEST INTO THY KINGDOM."

We shall now examine the Savior's reply to this petition; and just here let me inquire, Would it be unreasonable to expect a correspondence or harmony existing between the petition and [illegible] his son ask bread, will he [illegible] 9. I am awan[illegible] that the thief requested [illegible] the Savior granted another. But this is mere assumption, as our exposition will show. The first word our Savior utters in reply to the thief's petition, is "Amen," rendered "verily" in the common translation. In about seventy-five places in the New Testament it is thus translated, while in about fifty places it is merely transferred; as for instance (Rev. 22: 20)—"He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. [John responds] Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus." Also (1 Cor. 14: 16)—"Else when thou shalt bless with the Spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?" The obvious and admitted meaning of the word is—"So let it be." There is, therefore, a harmony between the petition and the answer—"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." "Amen [or, so be it] I say to thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in the paradise."

But it is objected that we have no right to change the punctuation mark; the changing of which, it is admitted, alters the sense of the passage under consideration. To which we reply that those points were no part of Inspiration, not having been introduced until several hundred years after the New Testament was written and compiled, and that there are other instances in our common version of the Scriptures, where the changing of the comma, in different editions, entirely alters the sense of the passage. The following are samples: Heb. 10: 12 is pointed as follows in some editions—"But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God." Now this conveys the idea that Christ sat down at the right hand of God to remain there forever; when it is known that this idea positively clashes with the whole tenor of Scripture teaching on this point; that the heavens are to retain him only "until the restitution of all things." Now place the comma after the word "ever," as it is in most editions, and all is harmonious.

Another instance (Matt. 19: 28)—"And Jesus said unto them [the twelve apostles], Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." It will be observed in the above that the comma is placed after the word "regeneration," as it is thus found in some editions of the common version. Now this pointing confines the work of "regeneration" (whatever it may be) exclusively to the days of our Savior's ministry. None would be willing to take this position. Let the comma be placed after the word "me," and all is plain and consistent. The "regeneration" is to take place when He sits upon his throne. To generate, is to create; to regenerate, is to re-create. When the Savior comes he will regenerate the race, by making the obedient immortal; and will regenerate the earth, by making it new. "Behold, I make all things new." Rev. 21: 5. And so when we change the punctuation mark in the passage under consideration, it makes all the parts in the transaction harmonies, and exonerates the word of God from the charge of being contradictory in its teachings.

But it is objected again, that the form of expression—"I say unto thee to-day"—is both unusual and improper. That it is neither, we are prepared to show by scriptural and other examples. In Deut. 8: 19 we read—"And it shall be if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them and worship them, I testify against you this day, that ye shall surely perish." Again (Deut. 30: 18)—"I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish.' Again (Prov. 22: 19)—"I have made known unto thee this day." The great statesman, Webster, in one of his orations says—"I speak to-day for the preservation of the Union."

In all the instances cited above, the adverb to-day, or this day, qualifies the time of uttering the sentences. And in the case of the dying thief, there was a powerful significance in the use of the word "to-day" by the Savior. He had publicly avowed himself as king of the Jews; had discoursed at large concerning his kingdom; but now he was placed in the position of a common malefactor; all his former claims were regarded now as mere pretensions. This was the day of his humiliation. Even his own disciples had forsaken him; yea, more, even his Father had forsaken him,—all alone, and "numbered with the transgressors." Yet he could assure the penitent thief that his petition should be granted. "I say unto thee today—notwithstanding it is a day of darkness, discouragement and gloom; notwithstanding I am apparently subdued and powerless—yet "I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise."

In the further investigation of this subject, the question naturally arises—Where is Paradise? By the great majority of professing Christians it is located in heaven above, the abode of the Father. If this is correct, Christ did not go to paradise the day he died; for three days subsequently, when Mary was about to embrace her resurrected Lord, he said—"Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father." But there is another theory concerning paradise, namely, that it is located in hades, which hades, according to (not the Bible) Grecian mythology and Josephus, is located somewhere in the bowels of the earth; that it is divided into two compartments, one [illegible] spirits of the good, the other for the [illegible]. It is contended that Christ and the thief went to [illegible] when they died; but the Bible hades [illegible] ction of the [illegible] edge, nor wisdom [illegible] quently if there is no knowledge there, it is a place of unconsciousness. Furthermore, the invariable testimony of the inspired writers is to the effect, that Christ arose three days after (not from paradise, but) from the dead. Then we must seek further for the location of the Bible paradise.

The word "paradise" is said to be of Persian origin, and signifies a garden. The Septuagint renders Gen. 2: 8 as follows—"God planted a paradise in Eden." The word only occurs in two other places in the Scriptures. An examination will doubtless aid us in discovering the true location. In 2 Cor. 12: 1–4, Paul is speaking about visions and revelations which he had fourteen years previously, and states that he was "caught up to the third heaven," and "caught up into paradise." Of course, the inference is clearly deducible here, that paradise is located in the "third heaven"; but this passage needs analyzing, in order to get the truth. The words here rendered "caught up," in other passages are rendered "caught away," as follows (Matt. 13: 19)—"When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart." Also Acts 8: 39, when Philip baptized the eunuch—"And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip." Thus we see that Paul was not necessarily caught up, but was caught away in vision.

But what about the "third heaven"? It seems very clear that paradise is located there. Let us continue our investigation. We can find but one other place in the Scriptures where any reference is made to a third heaven, either directly or indirectly; and that is 2 Pet. 3: 5–7,13. Referring to the antediluvian world, Peter says—"The heavens were of old, and the earth, standing out of the water and in the water . . . . being overflowed with water, perished." Here we find heaven number one. "But the heavens and the earth which are now, ... reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Here is heaven number two. "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Here is heaven number three; of which you will find a description in Rev. 21. Now we can see how Paul was caught away in vision to the New Earth state, as John was subsequently on the isle of Patmos.

The other passage where the word paradise occurs, is in Rev. 2: 7—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." If we do not learn from the above passage the location of paradise, we do learn one of its features, namely, "the tree of life" is there. Now if we can find the "tree of life," we shall be able to locate paradise. The first place we find is in the garden of Eden, at the beginning. Gen. 2: 8; 3: 22–24. When Adam sinned God expelled him from the garden, and placed a cherubim with flaming sword to guard the way to the tree of life, lest Adam should take of the fruit, and eat, and [illegible]. Again we find it beyond the [illegible] in the New Earth state recorded in Rev. 22: 2, 14. As we have found the "tree of life" located in the new earth, and as the "tree of life" is to be "in the midst of the paradise of God," therefore, paradise is to be located in the new earth. "Thou shalt be with me in paradise."

It must be borne in mind that the Savior promised the thief that he should be with him in paradise. "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am." John 17: 24. But a little while previous he had comforted his disciples with the following cheering promise (John 14: 1–3)—"Let not your heart be troubled. . . . . . I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."

From the above we learn three things:

1. The Savior prayed that his disciples might be with him.

2. The manner in which this association is formed—"I will receive you."

3. The time when this association is formed—when he comes again.

The question now arises, Would the Savior make an exception in favor of this thief, to the exclusion of his own immediate disciples? We think he had no such design. Then the thief must await the appointed time; and when the King himself comes into his kingdom, then will the penitent thief be remembered. But has not Christ come into his kingdom yet? Let the inspired word answer. Subsequent to the resurrection and ascension of our Savior, he speaks as follows: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. 3: 21. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. 25: 31. "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him, and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom." Dan. 7: 13, 14. "And the seventh angel sounded [the judgment trump], and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever." Rev. 11: 15.

From these quotations, which might be multiplied, it is abundantly evident that the kingdom of Christ is still future; that it is [illegible] his Son [illegible] shall sit [illegible] raise [illegible] sleeping saints; at which time [illegible] forget the penitent thief, but will fulfill his promise, in strict harmony with the dying thief's request—"Lord, remember me WHEN THOU COMEST INTO THY KINGDOM."

Dear reader, may you and I, by a life of obedience and faith in the Son of God, secure a home in that blessed kingdom. The signs of the times indicate that the saints of God will soon have fulfilled to them their oft-repeated petition, "Thy kingdom come!" Repent ye, believe the gospel, and with the saints of all ages, the penitent thief included, you shall have a home in the Paradise of God. Amen. GEO. THOMSON.

For the World's Crisis.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

So said Jesus to his disciples, more than eighteen hundred years ago. The promise is sure, "I will come again." John 14: 3. Jesus will come "in like manner as" he ascended. We read—"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11. Blessed thought! For then the "dead bodies" of the saints will be raised, and the living righteous will "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," and both "caught up together in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; so shall we ever be with the Lord." Seeing we look for such things, let us be diligent, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless, unto the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

He is coming speedily to take vengeance on them that know not God, and that call not upon his name.

"Behold he cometh with clouds! and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him" (Rev. 1: 7; "when they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" (Isa. 24: 30); "for the day will come that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall, and ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I do this, saith the Lord of hosts." Mal 4: 1, 2, 3.

He is coming to set up his kingdom on the earth. Christ says—

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. 25: 31. Again we read—"The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and the government shall be upon his shoulder. . . . Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Luke 1: 32; Isa. 9: 6, 7.

The time of his coming [illegible] signs given by our Savior in Matt. 24 [illegible] answer to the question—"What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" are in the past, except "the sign of the Son of man in heaven." This, then, is what we are waiting for; and the fact that we do not know the exact time when Jesus will come, renders it very needful that we should "watch," lest, coming suddenly, he find us sleeping. If we are his children, watching and praying, we shall be found of him in peace when he comes. Let us, therefore, "watch" and pray, the battle never give over till Christ appears to take us home. G. E. MERRILL.

MORE LIKE JESUS.

Let my Savior dwell in me,
Fill my soul with peace and love,
Make me gentle as a dove;
More like Jesus while I go
Pilgrim in this world below,
Poor in spirit would I be,
Let my Savior dwell in me.

If he hears the ravens cry,
If his ever watchful eye
Marks the sparrows when they fall,
Surely he will hear my call.
He will teach me how to live;
All my sinful thoughts forgive;
Pure in heart I still would be,
Let my Savior dwell in me.

More like Jesus when I pray;
More like Jesus day by day;
May I rest me by his side,
Where the tranquil waters glide.
Born of him, through grace redeemed,
By his love my will subdued,
Rich in faith I still would be,
Let my Savior dwell in me.

"LITERAL INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE."

A PARTIAL REVIEW OF "THE END OF ALL THINGS."

No. 3.

"Let us now allude," says the author of the above work, "to a few instances, out of which many might be given, in which the language used by the apostles in the Epistles and the Revelation cannot, without an evident opposition to fact, be construed in a literal sense, in accordance with the millenarian view of the subject. Paul in the fourteenth and fifteenth verses of the fifth chapter of his second Epistle to the Corinthians, makes use of these expressions: 'For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead, and that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.' Here we have it twice stated that Christ died for all. If the phrase be rendered literally, it then follows that all must be saved; for no one for whom our Lord died in a literal sense, can now by any possibility perish. But millenarians, without a single exception—at least I know of none—repudiate this doctrine of ultimate universal salvation, which [illegible] literally rendered, certainly [illegible] Scripture. Now while we differ from [illegible] in many respects, we certainly agree with them in taking this passage just as St. Paul gave it; and we find no possible objection to thus taking it. Indeed, we should be very much at a loss to know what it does mean, if it does not mean just what it says. We know that Christ did die literally, and that all men die the same. In fact, our blessed Lord had to die the same kind of death that men die, or else he could not have saved them. He could not die spiritually, for spiritual death is sin; nor could he die eternally, for that would have precluded any resurrection from the dead. Therefore he died physically, and was for three days literally dead. He died for all men, else all were not dead; i. e., subject to death. If he did not die for all men—knowing as we do that all men were subject to death—then those for whom he did not die, could not by any possible means obtain eternal life, however much they might desire and strive to attain it. Says St. Paul: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." This gift is free to every son and daughter of Adam. They can all have it if they choose. If they do not choose to take it, God does not force it on them.

The elective franchise is free to every man in the United States who is a citizen, and not otherwise disqualified; but every man is free to use that privilege or not, just as he chooses. The government does not force him to vote. If it did, that very moment he would cease to be a free man. Just so precisely with our heavenly Father. He says, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Life and death are set before you; decide for yourselves. If you accede to the terms which by the death of my only begotten Son you are entitled to accept, well and good. Eternal life is your reward. But if you do not want to accept those generous conditions, it is still well and good. You will only have to give place to those who will, and to accept the consequences of your rejection, which is eternal death. Could anything be fairer? Could anything be more just? Could anything be more simple?

If men used one half the ingenuity to find out what God's plan really was, and used one half of the faith to believe his word as he has given it, that they do to find out what his plan is not, and to believe what he has not said, the number of christians would be instantly doubled. But they wriggle and twist, and squirm and rack their brains, and crawl out of the most miserably small holes, to find some other way than the plain wide open door which the Bible reveals to them; and then because half of them cannot get out, they obstinately and blindly declare that there is no door at all, and that the whole thing is a myth.

These remarks do not at all apply to our author, for I believe him to be an honest, though mistaken, christian; but they do apply to a very large majority of those who [illegible]—at least they seem to—tradition to truth.

We come now to [illegible] given by Mr. G. He says:—"The same apostle Paul, in the fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth verses of the fourth chapter of his first Epistle to the Thessalonians, expresses himself in these words:—

'For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord [very good authority, Paul, we accept it], that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.'

"This passage (continues Mr. G.) is one of the principal foundations on which the millenarian edifice rests. But how do they reconcile with their system the affirmation of Paul, that when Christ shall descend visibly from heaven to this world to establish his personal reign on it, he and those Thessalonians who constituted the church at Thessalonica, would be 'alive at the coming of the Lord'? If the apostle meant his words to be understood literally, and believed them himself in that sense, we are driven to the conclusion, that when he penned this passage, he was not inspired by the Spirit of God; for subsequent events proved that the fact did not accord with his words. Instead of Paul and those Thessalonians of whom he here speaks continuing in existence until the coming of the Lord a second time to this earth, he and they went the way of all flesh, nearly eighteen hundred years ago. They all died, just like other men."

Upon first reading the comments made on this passage in Mr. G.'s book, I was sorely tempted to pass them by as too absurd for serious notice, but, upon reflection, I concluded that they were no more so than the thousand and one other absurdities which are daily presented to us for belief. But the boldness of this attack, and the exceedingly slender grounds for maintaining it, so stupefy me with astonishment, that my charity, for the moment, is chilled. If this christian brother is honest in thus (as it appears to me) trifling with God's word, I pray God to speedily open his eyes to see the truth.

But to return to the closing remark, viz., "that they all died just like other men." Of course they did, as individuals. But did the church, or all the believers, die? Are they all dead now? i. e., all the "we" who believe the same as Paul did? Are all the christians to be dead when Jesus comes? And if not, will not those who are "alive and remain," form a very decided part of the "we"? That first personal pronoun "we," does not refer at all to Paul and the few individuals assembled with him, or to whom he was writing, as individuals. Neither does it at all apply to them as a body; for there were thousands of other christians to whom Paul was not then speaking.

I may be met here with the question, "Why did not Paul say, "you who are alive, or those who are alive," instead of we? I answer, [illegible] "you" would have been no [illegible] would have included [illegible] he was speaking of a [illegible] sons, who, if "alive," would receive certain benefits, and from which another class, the rest of the living, would be excluded. Therefore he said "we." Why? Because that "we" stood for or represented that favored class, to wit: the saints; not only Paul and the Thessalonians, but all of God's elect, from righteous Abel down to the last saint who escapes from death before Jesus comes. Not that all of the "we" shall be alive previously to the resurrection, but that that portion of the "we," who shall be living at that time, shall be changed and not see death.

This latter was the point Paul was trying to make. The Thessalonians did not know but that all of the saints might have to die, in order to be changed, or that the living saints might interfere with the dead saints in some way. Therefore Paul briefly and concisely tells them that "we shall not all die, and that those who are alive shall not interfere with, or "prevent them which are asleep." Then he gives the reason why, and tells them how it is to be accomplished. We conclude, therefore, that Paul did mean his words to be taken just as he spoke them, and that he believed them himself. And we also conclude that he was inspired by the Spirit of God when he uttered them.

We come now to the next Scripture given by the author, with antecedent and subsequent remarks, as follows:—

"Paul says, in the second verse of the sixth chapter of his first Epistle to the Corinthians, 'Do you not know that the saints shall judge the world?'" And in the succeeding verse he says, 'Do you not know that we—that is, the saints—[there occurs that little word "we" in a case parallel with the directions last noticed, followed, it will be observed, by Mr. G.'s own definition. Why could he not have given it in the other case as honestly and fairly as in this?] shall judge angels?' "Now," continues he, "if these two verses were to have a literal construction put upon them, both God and Christ would be excluded from the judgment seat on that day when all mankind are to be tried in relation to matters which will involve their eternal destiny. It would, indeed, be a gloomy anticipation for any of God's people, if they had to look forward to the judgment which a fellow man, equally erring with themselves, should pronounce upon them on the day of the great and final audit."

So indeed it would. And one of our greatest comforts is, that we know such will not be the case. But saints will judge the world nevertheless. The only question is when they will judge it. We think it more in accordance with christian regard for the Bible to find out, if possible, whether or not there is some time when they will "judge the world," rather than to deny that they will judge it at all, simply because we think they cannot and will not judge at a certain time. Do the Scriptures say that they will judge at the day of judgment? They do not. Very good. Then we will not say that the saints will. Let us hear what the Scriptures do say, and let them decide. Daniel, what do you say?

"I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the ancient of days came, and judgment was given unto the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Dan. 9: 22."

Matthew tells us the words of Jesus himself—"And Jesus said unto them, 'Verily I say unto you [his disciples], that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory [not before he sits in the throne of his glory, for that would be during the great judgment, for he does not sit down until all things are subdued unto himself], ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones [one each] judging [not having judged] the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19: 29. Very good. Now, Luke, you tell us about it: "And I [Jesus] appoint unto you [disciples] a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me: that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit upon thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke 22: 29, 30.

In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established; and here we find Paul has two, one of whom is the Lord Jesus himself, whose words are made sure also by the testimony of Matthew and Luke. Is not this enough? But some one may object that it is only the "twelve tribes of [illegible] that will be judged. Very good. [illegible] But this objection loses its for[illegible] know that Abraham's seed ([illegible] tribes of Israel) embraces not [illegible] lineal descendants, but also [illegible] every other nation, who by [illegible] Christ become "joint heirs [illegible] adopted into the great family of th[illegible]

We know very well that saints [illegible] judge at the day of judgment, for they [illegible] themselves among those who are to be judg[illegible] and how could they occupy both positions at the same time? It might as well be said that because the Bible says there shall be "kings and priests," therefore those who are kings would exclude both God and Christ from the throne of heaven! Therefore this must be figurative also. But when we know that it has pleased the great Ruler of the universe to appoint "judges," "priests," "kings," "rulers," "principalities," and "powers" to do His will, and take part in his government, there is no trouble. The Bible is full of instances where His mighty representatives have visited our world, and we know that there are beings now before the throne whose exalted rank and titles are second only to the Son of God himself.

So far as the saints judging angels is concerned, if Paul says they will, I believe it! That is all the evidence I want, every man to the contrary notwithstanding. There is one thing greatly in Paul's favor, at least. There [illegible] a good many angels who [illegible] judgment [illegible] are "reserved" for that [illegible] will be also a good [illegible] elect [illegible] ment will be [illegible] will, and I believe it. SOWING AMONG THORNS.

There is a work to be done in preparing the heart for receiving the truth. As the ground must be plowed and prepared for the sowing of the seed, so there is also needed a "preparation of the heart," a breaking up of the fallow ground," a putting away of evil practices, a "clearing of yourselves," as the apostle calls it, that the truth may be received into good and honest hearts.

The man who is loaded with "the cares of this life, and the deceitfulness of riches [illegible] the lusts of other things," if he chance [illegible] the word of truth, he straightway [illegible] attend to secular affairs, and the [illegible] chance to bring forth fruit among [illegible] which surround it. "For thus [illegible] . . . Break up your fallow [illegible] not among thorns." Jer. [illegible] yourselves in righteousness [illegible] . . . for it is time to seek [illegible] come and rain righteousness [illegible] 10: 12.

Oil and water will not unite; [illegible] truth and salvation abide and flourish [illegible] heart filled with covetousness, deceit, passion, evil thoughts, unholy ambition, lust of power and place, pride, hatred, and all the works of the flesh. But these evil things do show themselves to be in the hearts of some who have heard the word of truth; and is it strange that these things "choke the word," so that it becometh unfruitful?

"But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds. And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Col. 3: 8, 10. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Webster, Mass.

ARGUMENT IN PREACHING.—Argument forms the basis of interest with the popular mind and it is the staple method of dealing with and influencing mind. Appeals to the feelings and all kinds of "sensational preaching" soon wear out; but plain, sensible comprehensive reasoning, without the pedantry or the hardness of the metaphysician, always has power with the great mass of common-sense, intelligent hearers. A sermon which has nothing of this element of thoughtful argumentation in it, rarely makes an enduring impression, because it does not reach the depths of the subject or the depths of the mind. It ruffles the top waves; it does not go down into the springs of thought or motive. No amount of fine writing, dazzling declamation, or even pathetic appeal, can atone for the absence of sound reasoning, in a sermon. It need not, and should not, be technically theological, nor be continued wearisomely; but there can be little true eloquence without it. Truth, which is the converting agency, is not honored if it is not carefully developed, and if this thoughtful, orderly setting forth of truth do not form the basis of the sermon. This forms the positive element in preaching.—Hoppin.

SAN FRANCISCO.

We are glad to be able to say to our readers that the interest in our San Francisco meetings continues to increase. Since our last communication from this coast, we have had better and more powerful meetings than any of the preceding. The Spirit of the Lord is doing great things in this city. It is a very rich treat to a friend of Jesus to hear those speak in our meetings who have lately embraced the glorious truths of the Bible in relation to the second coming of Christ, the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, the saints' inheritance, holiness of heart, the atonement, and other things intimately connected with the plan of salvation. For the first time in their lives, they now see the harmony of the sacred Scriptures. They are as joyful over this discovery as any covetous man when he inherits a fortune. They now see they have been believing a theology composed largely of human traditions and fables, instead of the simple truth of the Bible. They have been like one sailing past beautiful scenery, which was entirely eclipsed by a dense fog; but now the sunlight of God's pure testimony has dispelled the fog of fables; and for the first time they behold, by the eye of faith, the land of promise; Jesus a personal King in the presence of a personal heavenly Father, who is soon coming in glory to our planet to establish an everlasting "kingdom under the whole heaven." There are six who think of going out to spread the glad tidings far and near.

Dr. Scott an eminent Presbyterian minister, learning that many were believing what we are preaching, and that scores of church members were included in the company, thought best to give a series of sermons in review of what we have said. He preached his first sermon on the subject, Sabbath evening, Feb. 26th, and has now (March 15th) given two more, on the succeeding Sabbath evenings, and intends to continue the review next Sabbath evening. Last Monday evening, in the Music Hall, we commenced a review of the Reviewer. A very large audience was present, and listened with great attention. The Lord gave us special help in the defence of his truth. We reviewed his first two discourses. During the progress of the meeting, we asked those to raise their hands who believed we were preaching the truth of the Bible, when we declared that the wicked will be destroyed. When this question was proposed, hundreds of hands went up with much earnestness, to the astonishment of those who still hold on to the doctrine of eternal torment. There was a large representation present from the various churches. We heard an intelligent gentleman remark, who does not sympathize with us on the doctrine, that he thought there must have been five hundred hands raised. He confessed his astonishment at the sight.

A member of one of the churches, where the minister is opposing what we preach, was heard to say, "If Elder Grant remains here six months, he will have the largest church in the city." A minister was heard to say, "It will take us two years to undo what Eld. Grant has done." Of course this last remark caused us no sorrow. We think two years will hardly be sufficient to accomplish what the minister proposed. The truth has taken deep root in many hearts, and produced most happy results. It has led wicked men to confess and forsake their sins, quit their intoxicating drinks, the use of tobacco and other bad habits; and they are now new creatures in Christ, with a blessed hope of eternal life established in their hearts. Truly the Lord is doing a great work on this coast. Five were baptized in San Francisco Bay last Sabbath, and several others are ready to improve the next opportunity.

Bro. Bailey is faithful and true as ever. He says this year, thus far, has been the best of his life. His whole heart is in the work, and we feel just like pressing the battle to the very gates of the enemy. Last Sabbath evening we gave the right hand of fellowship to between thirty and forty who wished to unite with us in church fellowship. Many more purpose to make "Minna street church" their place of worship. Already some have been turned out from their church connection for believing what we preach, and others have requested to have their names dropped, in order that they may be free in Christ, and be allowed to mingle with those who love the "blessed hope." This, of course, causes the ministers to rise up against us, in all their dignity. But none of these things move us. The work goes on with increased power. Praise the Lord. Brethren and Srs., keep on praying for us. Love to you all.

OUR COVENANT.

We, whose names are subjoined, do hereby covenant and agree, by the help of the Lord, to walk together as a Church of Christ; faithfully maintaining its ordinances, taking the BIBLE as our only rule of faith and practice, church order and discipline; making Christian character the only test of fellowship and communion.

We further agree, with Christian fidelity and meekness, to exercise mutual watch-care, to counsel, admonish or reprove, as duty may require, and to receive the same from each other as becometh the household of faith.

☞ YOUR attention is called to Bro. Phelps' series of articles on "Church Divisions."

THE POWER OF FASHION.—It is evident that many, who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Savior, are governed more fully by the law of fashion than the law of Christ. They are more anxious to be in the favor of fashion than in the favor of God. The laws of health, comfort, convenience, economy, and christianity, are all trampled under foot by obedience to the law of fashion; thus showing that Satan, and not the Lord, leads the fashions, in order to secure men and women as his victims for eternal perdition. Says the Providence Journal:

> "It is no use, we long ago discovered, to utter any warnings or to preach any sermons on a subject like this. Fashion has done away with economy, and has subjugated morality and even Christianity to itself."

When secular papers take up the subject, is it not time for professors of religion to look about themselves, and inquire, Where are we? are we traveling the broad road, or the narrow path?

SPIRIT INDIVIDUALITY.—It has been claimed that man has a spirit which at death passes away as a spirit personality, and that it can return and make communications. We can find no proof in the Bible of such a theory, neither in nature. In the "Banner of Light," Feb. 4th, 1871, we find some questions put to the spirits, and their answers. Among others are the following:—

> "Q.—Can spirit at any time be independent of matter?
> A.—Yes, but it can have no distinctive individuality apart from matter. It can be spirit, but it is without form, an individualized essence or power."

Here we find it admitted that the spirit "is without form," simply an "essence or power"; therefore it is not a "distinctive individuality," and cannot return as such.

☞ WE have received the following "earnest request" from one who subscribes himself a "miserable backslider":—

> "Dear Christians:—A man who has once preached and followed Jesus, but now has sunk down into sin and unbelief, asks your most earnest prayer in his behalf. Will every minister who reads this, make it a special subject for prayer? May I meet you all as a saved sinner in eternity."

IN our report of "meetings in California," as published March 1st, instead of saying, "We commenced meetings in the Minna St. church, Jan. 30th," it should read Dec. 30th.

☞ A correspondent asks the meaning of "D. V.," so often used by the brethren. It is an abbreviation of the Latin words—Deo volente, which means, "God willing."

RECEIVED.—For April, Good Health, Laws of Life, Herald of Health, Christian World, Health and Home, Phrenological Journal, Health Reformer, Home Magazine, Children's Hour, Little Corporal, Young Folks, etc., etc.

BIBLE NECROLOGY.

Let us spend a little time in examining the Scripture records relating to the death of men mentioned in the Bible, and see if they afford any evidence to support the doctrine that man is naturally immortal.

We will begin with Abel, the first who died of the human race. The account of his death is found in Gen. 4: 8–10. The name "Abel" represents the intelligent person with whom Cain conversed, and the one whom he killed. Were there two intelligent Abels, one of whom he did not kill? When the Lord talked with Cain he did not say, Thy Bro. Abel came to me in heaven with the alarming news that you had murdered him, but says, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." When his blood was shed, his life was gone. In Lev. 17: 11, 14, we read: "The life of the flesh is in the blood. . . . It is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof; therefore, I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh, for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof."

The Hebrew word rendered "life in this Scripture, is nephesh, the word translated "soul." It would be proper to read this text: "The soul of all flesh is the blood thereof." Hence when the blood is taken from a man, or animal, his life or soul is destroyed. When referring to the faith, sacrifice, and death of Abel, Paul says:—"By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he, being dead, yet speaketh." Here the word Abel represents the one who exercised faith, offered the sacrifice, obtained the witness that he was righteous, was murdered by Cain, and while he is now dead, his recorded faith is yet speaking; or, as in the margin, "is yet spoken of." If the apostle had believed that Abel was alive, we think he would have so expressed himself; but instead of that, he says he was then "dead."

The next recorded death is that of Adam. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." Gen. 5: 5. The Adam that was created in the image of God, that was placed in the garden of Eden, as an intelligent, moral being, who received commandments from his Creator, disobeyed them, and thus became a sinner, was Adam that died. There is not the least hint that any part of him continued to live as a conscious personality.

The record of the next death reads as follows: "And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years, and he died." Gen. 5: 8. The death of Enos (Gen. 5: 11), Cainan (Gen. 5: 14), Mahalaleel (Gen. 5: 17), and Jared (Gen. 5: 20), which follow next, are recorded in the same manner. There is not the slightest intimation that any portion of those men remained alive. Neither can we find a single record of the death of any one in the whole Bible, where it is said that the soul, spirit, or any other portion of the man was alive and conscious, when the body was dead. The simple fact is, the physical organism, or the body, is the real man, who thinks, wills, and reasons; who is the one to be saved or lost; and all the Bible records of death are in harmony with this position.

After the deaths already noticed, we come next to Enoch, of whom Paul says: "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death." Heb. 11: 5. The record in Gen. 5: 23, 24 reads: "And all the days of Enoch were three hundred sixty and five years; and Enoch walked with God; and he was not, for God took him." The name Enoch, like that of Adam, Abel, Cain, or the name of any other man, includes the entire man, without the least exception. When it is said: "Enoch was translated," no one would understand the statement to imply that the soul or spirit of Enoch was taken out of him, and carried to heaven, while his body remained dead upon the earth. Without the body, or material organism, there could be no Enoch to die, nor to be translated, and "not see death." The continued existence of Enoch, as a conscious, intelligent man, in this world, or in any other, depended upon preserving the life of the physical constitution made of the "dust of the ground." Consequently, when the Lord would keep Enoch and Elijah alive, he took them away bodily; because without their bodies they would be nobody. The Scriptures inform us that in the same way the living saints will be taken up at the second coming of Christ, in connection with those who will at the same time be raised from the dead as literally as was Jesus from the tomb of Joseph. Inasmuch as the name included the whole man, when it is said, "Enoch was translated that he should not see death;" so, if it read, Enoch "died and was buried," it would include the same that was translated in the other case. If this be not true, we see no other way to understand the Scriptures, and must confess we do not know what they mean.

CALIFORNIA FRUITS AND VEGETABLES grow very large. For example, a single cauliflower measured fifteen inches in diameter, which would make it forty-five inches in circumference, or nearly four feet. It weighed, with its accompanying leaves, about twenty pounds. This variety is known as the "Boarding House."

The following extract from a lecture of Hon. Marshall P. Wilder, the noted New England agriculturist, will give the reader some idea of California productions:

California is a wonder; wonderful alike for the wildness and grandeur of her scenery, for the number and richness of her mines, for the fertility of her soil and the salubrity of her climate. Why the resources of such a magnificent country were not earlier developed seems to us a mystery, but the marvelous workings of God's providence are clearly seen now. When the balance of trade against our country became large, and we periodically suffered thereby, then the gold began to glisten in the mines of the Pacific slope; when the forests became denuded of wood, then came the discovery of her mines; when the oil of the whale began to lessen in quantity, then wonderful wells of oil began to appear; and when the Western wheat fields became impoverished, then California came to our aid.

THE CROPS OF CALIFORNIA.

Wheat is the great crop of California; barley and oats are to be found in great abundance there, but the Indian corn is rarely seen. The yield of grain is about 25 bushels to the acre, the greater portion of it being, as I have already stated, devoted to wheat. As there is no rain in the summer months, the grain crops are left standing in the fields for weeks after they are ripe. Most of the crops are cut by a machine called the "Header," which cuts them at a tremendous rate; they are threshed in the field by a steam machine, and we were told that this machine threshed 800 to 1,000 bushels of wheat per day, and put it into bags, the latter being allowed to remain in the field. We saw acres of these bags piled up five high in the fields, waiting for shipment. Machinery is brought into general use there. The plowing is done by gang plows, to which are attached feeders, so that large portions of ground can be cut up and sown in a short time. Have you ever thought of these labor-saving machines as applied to the arts of industry? Without these modern inventions the crops could not be harvested and a partial famine must ensue. Nothing surprises the traveller more than the immense fields of wheat everywhere seen on the sides of the railroad. Think of riding for hours through fields of wheat, whose breadth extends miles beyond your vision, and you will have some idea of the harvest of these ocean-like plateaus of wheat that abound in California, and which already equal in value the product of her mines. The supply of vegetables, as seen in the markets of her principal cities, is very abundant and of excellent quality. With irrigation, crop after crop can be obtained in rapid succession, so that you can get anything you desire at almost any season of the year. Asparagus can be obtained from February to June; the size to which it attains is almost incredible. So, also, is the size of other vegetables. Pumpkins weigh 150 pounds; squashes, 150; beets, 50; carrots, 30. It is easy to understand how these results are attained, when we remember that growth there never ceases. Although our attention was mainly given to the vineyard and the garden, yet we were everywhere impressed with the immense size of the farms. We were told of one in Sacramento that contained 18,000 acres, of another, in another county, that contained 3,500 acres and 800 milch cows, and others in proportion.

THE LUSCIOUS GRAPE.

Next to the cereals of California, no other production of her soil is so important as the grape. In the State there are about thirty million vines, two thirds at least of which are in full bearing. California seems to be the home of the vine. I do not intend here to discuss the expediency of crushing the purple cluster for the purpose of producing the sweet, poisoned wine, but I do say that it is certain that no other region has such advantages as that State for grape growing and the manufacture of wine. In my opinion she is destined to be one of the greatest grape growing and wine-producing territories on the face of the earth. With regard to the culture of this and other fruit, I remark that in the several sections we visited fruit that could be produced at much less cost than with us. It is very large and handsome, and nearly exempt from disease and insect. The atmosphere there is so dry that it may remain long on the vines after it is ripe, thus enhancing the opportunities for gathering. And then labor there is quite as cheap as with us. In the Alhambra Gardens, situated in the Alhambra valley, we saw bunches of grapes that measured eighteen inches in length, though they were only half grown.

OTHER FRUITS.

We saw cherries that measured three and three-quarter inches in circumference; we also saw almonds of great size, and one tree was pointed out to us that had yielded three bushels in one year; we saw pears measuring 21¼ inches by 18¼. In 1855, peaches were first sent to the market, and sold for $5 per dozen; last year they were selling from fifty cents to $1 per bushel. Until last year the fruit was confined to home use, and much of it was lost for want of a market. Now, however, the railroads are brought into requisition, and last fall the orders from the East could not be filled. As a general rule the fruits are superior to ours in size and beauty, far sweeter than ours, but not of such excellent flavor. The large Autumn pears are more fibrous and mealy than ours. With the exception of the currant, none of the small fruits are as good as ours. The grapes, two hundred varieties of which are now on trial, are all foreign. With regard to flowers, allow me to say that I know not what flowers bloomed in Eden, but I did not think, whatever they were, that they could have exceeded in stately height, gorgeous hues, or fragrance, those that we saw on Angel Island.

SOUTHERN NOTES.—No. 8.

In my last I spoke of having come to South Carolina by the invitation of Bro. Bowman, who, by the way, is a Methodist divine, a minister of talent ranging high above the ordinary, either north or south, having been connected with the South Carolina Methodist Conference some thirty-eight years, during which time he has been elevated to posts of honor, and is everywhere known in the State, and extensively known out of the State. The name of "Dr. Bowman" is familiar to all South Carolina Methodists, and his character as a bold advocate of what he believes to be truth, even though it may be unpopular, is well understood. His personal appearance is both impressive and commanding, being a man of an intellectual countenance, six feet high, and weighing two hundred pounds; and at first sight one is naturally impressed with the thought that he must be a governor, a general, or a bishop; and indeed I wonder why they have not made him a bishop before now.

Dr. Bowman is a man sixty-two years old, though he looks scarcely over forty-five, and is an impressive speaker. This year he has nine churches under his supervision, in all of which he has faithfully preached all our views, including the state of the dead, and the destiny of the wicked; and the most intellectual part of his membership, including the officials, embrace the faith, and are wondering what they must do when the Dr.'s time expires, insisting they "can no longer drink down that old immortal-soul and endless torment doctrine, after hearing such preaching."

Sunday, March 5th, Bro. Bowman took me to the Snow-hill meeting-house, where I preached in the forenoon, throwing to the breeze the flag of unpopular truth, my positions being all heartily and publicly endorsed by the Dr. at the close of the sermon. After meeting, one of the stewards told me—"The Dr. has preached these same truths to us, but some call them Dr. Bowman's doctrines, and think he is the only man in the world who preaches such views; but now, after hearing your sermon, I reckon they will think there is more than one Dr. Bowman in the world."

Some efforts have been made to prevent Dr. B.'s success in disseminating these truths, such as denouncing them as infidelity, predicting the ruin of the churches under his supervision, and twice arraigning him before the Conference for preaching our views; where he boldly avowed his full faith in these unpopular doctrines, expecting to be excommunicated for heresy; but he has rode over every thing of this kind in triumph, and even three of the bishops befriended him, though not claiming to believe his sentiments; though many of the clergy strongly suspect one of these bishops of secretly entertaining the same views. A large number of southern ministers already agree with the Dr., either wholly or in part, who do not yet take a public stand; but he lets his light shine in its clearness everywhere, constantly pressing it upon the attention of the ministry, as well as membership.

Sunday afternoon, March 5th, Bro. B. took me to the Damascus meeting-house, where I preached on the kingdom, cutting off all claim to a sky kingdom; and the Dr. followed me, strongly endorsing the sermon, and repudiating the popular view in the strongest terms. He is not one of those fresh-water Adventists, but has launched out into the briny deep of truth, having spent several years of closest study on these topics, knowing what he believes, and why he believes, and will yet turn out to be a southern Luther in the promulgation of these great truths.

Bro. B. was formerly a man of wealth, but lost one hundred thousand dollars, more or less, in the late war, and is now, in common with many once wealthy southerners, in greatly reduced circumstances. But his influence among the people is as good as ever, and his disposition to spread the truth is strong and sincere.

On my way from Georgia to this place, I came through the cities of Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S. C., and feel that it is our positive duty as a people to make an opening in these places, and also in Atlanta, the capital of Georgia, a city of thirty-five thousand population. But we should not think of spending less than six week's time in each place, and this would involve a bill of over $300 for rent, board, and advertising, for each city, unless we wait till providence opens the church doors for us, as I have hitherto done, to obviate expense; for I have not yet been to one cent's expense, except for traveling fees and publications; and though I have already preached in eight different churches, there are eight more doors standing open for me to enter. But it may not be wisdom to wait till these great cities open their church doors for us, but rather hire a hall and proceed at once; but this will require money—shall it be furnished? Shall we put several able and cautious missionaries into the southern field early the ensuing autumn?

When I came south it was with the express understanding that I should remain but a few weeks at this time; and as the time draws near when I must leave the south, I feel a great reluctance in doing so; especially since discovering that God has raised up Bro. Bowman in the wilderness of John the Baptist to help introduce the great truths into this State. If it were not for my family, I should be strongly tempted to settle in some part of the South, and make a permanent stand. Some one ought to do it; and in order to success, it must be the right kind of a man.

My judgment after having felt of the pulse of the South is that in spite of the fact that a northerner is watched with suspicion, a great and important missionary field can be opened for the spread of the gospel of the kingdom here. People are ease to hear. I have no doubt that more than a hundred meeting-houses would be opened to me faster than I could occupy them, if I were to remain long enough. A meeting cannot be finished in one locality before an invitation will come from another quarter—"Bring the light here." Bro. Bowman is receiving calls to preach these truths in other regions, and has just got a letter from a Presbyterian theological school asking for light on these topics. In meddling with Bro. Bowman, the fire has been scattered by the conference. Some have been roused up to preach against him, but it is such a sickly effort that it falls powerless.

Bro. Bowman pronounces the "Crisis" the most spiritual paper he knows of, besides being an advocate of truth, and has the promise of some subscribers for it among his members so soon as the money can be obtained. Some time ago, when in Boston, he called at the "Crisis" office, in the absence of the Editor, since which time the Crisis has been sent to him, greatly to his encouragement, this being his only acquaintance with our people previous to my arrival.

One of two things is true: either the Methodists must turn Bro. Bowman out of their conference, or half of their preachers will take a stand with him soon; and if they do turn him out, many will cling to him, having already got tinctured with the truth. While he loves his brethren much, he loves God and the truth more, and he will not smother truth to please those who do not know its value.

Monday night, Mar. 6th, I preached again at the Snow-Hill church, on prophecy, to an increased congregation, having profound attention to the close; and was followed by Bro. Bowman, who heartily endorsed the truth of the immediate close of earth's mortal history, and the introduction of Messiah's kingdom on earth. The people listen to these truths with eagerness.

In this part of South Carolina, the Ku Klux are not operating, the entire community being as yet in quietude, except the excitement produced now and then by negro depredations; but I learn that in other parts of the State the K. K.'s are beginning operations, recently appearing at one point from five hundred to seven hundred strong. Here, as elsewhere, they succeed to a great extent in making the negroes believe that they are the ghosts of wicked men just out of hell. In various localities they repeat the practice of ordering the negroes to bring them water to drink, which, by the aid of some india-rubber apparatus worn under their clothes, they succeed in storing away by the pail full, greatly to the astonishment of the negroes, and then tell them the cause of their being so thirsty is because they have been so long in hell where they could get no water to drink.

Tuesday night, Mar. 7th, I again preached on prophecy at the Snow-Hill church, the congregation being larger than on the previous night, and listening with almost breathless attention. Dr. Bowman followed, endorsing the positions taken in the discourse, and telling the people that he could sit all night long under such preaching. On the previous evening two or three negroes were out to hear me discourse on the metallic image, from the chart, and carried the news among the colored people that I was exhibiting the devil; that he was an awful looking fellow, having a gold head, silver arms, brass belly, and iron legs, and looked like a great man—it was the devil sure. So to-night twenty or thirty negroes came out, but some feared the devil might get away from me and catch them on their way home, and feared to come. I told Dr. Bowman that the negroes were not so far wrong about the matter after all, for although that metallic man was not the devil in person, he had been full of the devil all his life, having already lived nearly three thousand years, and having always been devilish. But though he has lived so long, he will not live always, for by and by God will throw a big stone at him that will kill him, crushing him from foot to head, and plunging him into dark oblivion.

I am more and more satisfied that we ought to make a permanent stand in the south on the right principle. Cautious men, free from politics, though liable to suspicion for a time, will be listened to with candor, and the truth will be gladly received by many.

GOSPEL SPECULATIONS.—An eagerness to be the originator and primary advocate of some new feature of theology, has prompted many inexperienced men, with defective judgment, to launch upon the public a sentiment that cannot pass an ordinary examination, before submitting it to competent brethren for a critical examination; and thus one after another present their undigested speculations for truth, to the detriment of the general cause. While we claim liberty of thought, that principle should not be perverted to signify a right to flood the church with undigested sentiments, soon to burst like bubbles under the touch of truth; for our time should not be all spent either in making or bursting new theological bubbles; nor should we be so unwise as to conclude because we have no "masters" in theology, that we have no helpers in that department. Paul's advice, "That ye all speak the same thing" (1 Cor. 1: 10), involves the maturing of our sentiments, by investigation, before giving them to the public. Luther was so tried with some restless spirits that aided him in the Reformation, who finally claimed the right, each man to act on "his own hook," to the great injury of the cause, that he said, "They are deviled, bedeviled, par-deviled, super-deviled." Again he said:

> "All men now presume to criticise the gospel. Almost every old doting fool or prating sophist must, forsooth, be a Doctor in Divinity. All other arts and sciences have masters, of whom people must learn, and rules and regulations which must be observed and obeyed; the Holy Scriptures only, God's word, must be subject to each man's pride and presumption; hence so many sects, seducers, and offences."

Luther's zeal for the cause, which was being distracted by gospel speculators, led him to indulge in unjustifiable severity; but they doubtless attributed it to his thirst for leadership. Let none be in too much haste to get new ideas before the public—take time to reexamine, and submit them to competent critics, and thus avoid speculations.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. A PROCLAMATION.

An intelligent lover of truth in San Francisco, has prepared the following, and given it a wide circulation in the city:—

A Great Mistake Respectfully Corrected, OR,
A REMARKABLE ROLL-CALL OF "IGNORANT AND OBSCURE MEN."
[TWENTY-FOUR MEN PUT IN THE BOX.]

Whereas, It has been recently asserted, in a public discourse, by a prominent Orthodox clergyman of San Francisco, that the doctrines that "the dead are unconscious," and "the wicked are destroyed at the day of judgment" (instead of being preserved eternally in torment), are "fossil heresies," occasionally revived by "some fiery champion" [fanatic], but held by no "respectable church," and never promulgated by any good men," except such as may be properly described by the terms "ignorant and obscure;" and

Whereas, Some good [sincere] men are undoubtedly restrained from examining, in a free and candid spirit, the Bible authorities bearing on the doctrines named, because of such sweeping assertions as we have quoted—setting up a condemnation as proceeding from all "good men" who have obtained and enjoyed any reputation for intelligence; now, therefore, it is hereby made known by this PROCLAMATION, to all unto whom it may come, greeting:

Among those who have emphatically announced their belief in the Bible doctrines of man's unconsciousness in death, and rejected "eternal misery," the following named may be summoned on the record:

The greatest religious reformer of the Christian era—MARTIN LUTHER. [Says Martin Luther in his "Defence" (Prop. 27): "I permit the pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as that he is emperor of the world, king of heaven, and God upon earth—that the soul is immortal,—with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals." Again, he says: "All souls lie and sleep until doomsday." Duke George, in writing to Duke John, Oct. 15, 1521, says: "Some deny the immortality of the soul. All this comes of Luther's teachings." The reformers were also charged with stating: "All which had been said about the immortality of the soul was invented by anti-christ for the purpose of making the pope's pot boil." In the celebrated Historical Review, published in London in 1772 (p. 3416), it is recorded that Luther taught that souls "lay in a profound sleep, in which opinion he followed many Fathers of the ancient church." It adds: "The doctrine was held by the first reformers."]

2d. The greatest religious poet of the Christian era, and the ablest essay-advocate of religious and political freedom—JOHN MILTON. [Says John Milton, author of Paradise Lost, in advocating the unconscious state of the dead: "It is evident that the saints and believers of old, the patriarchs, prophets and apostles, without exception, held this doctrine."]

3d. The most renowned natural philosopher—SIR ISAAC NEWTON.

4th. The first translator of the Scriptures into the English language—WM. TYNDAL. He wrote: "If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be?" "And ye, in putting them in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection." "The heathen philosophers did put that the souls did ever live."]

5th. The greatest mental philosopher since the days of Lord Bacon—JOHN LOCKE.

6th. Dr. Wm. Paley, author of the celebrated work entitled "Paley's Natural Theology."

7th. THOMAS DICK, author of the "Christian Philosopher."

8th. JOS. PRIESTLY, one of the most able and profound of theological writers, and the greatest discoverer in the realms of chemistry. [Priestly said in one of his lectures—dedicated to his friend John Adams—speaking of the doctrine of a conscious intermediate state: "The doctrine of an intermediate state between death and the resurrection, has been the foundation of the worship of dead men and women, the doctrine of purgatory, and other popish doctrines. These and almost every other corruption of genuine Christianity came from the same heathen source."]

9th. ARCHBISHOP WHATELY, one of the ablest scholars and most acute theologians and popular religious authors of the English church. [Says Whately, in his "Revelations of a Future State:" "To the christian, indeed, all this doubt would be instantly removed, if he found that the immortality of the soul as a disembodied spirit, were revealed in the word of God. In fact, however, no such doctrine is revealed to us; the christians' hope, as founded on the promises contained in the gospel, is the resurrection of the body."]

10th. Bishops Newton, Tillotson, Warburton, Hurd, and Bishop Law, author of the "Serious Call"—all eminent men in the Episcopal church—rejected the doctrine of "endless misery," as unwarranted by and repugnant to Holy Scripture.

In this catalogue a long roll might be printed; but we have space only to mention the following additional names: John Foster, Henry Melville, B. D., Hon. James Stephen, K. C. B., Alfred Addis, B. A., Rev. Drs. Henry More, T. Burnet, Samuel Clark, Wm. Whiston, James Brown, and F. Leicester. The eminence of these last named men, as scholars and authors, may be ascertained, with descriptive definitions, by reference to any standard biographical dictionary. Never before, we will venture to affirm, have they been brought under a general indictment which stigmatized them as ignorant men. Not to be well acquainted with the life and works of many of the men named above has, up to the time, been thought to "argue one's self unknown!"

The fact is, "good" and "intelligent," and "eminent" men in all christian years have proclaimed the Bible truth in regard to the nature and destiny of man: that he is by nature mortal; that he sleeps in unconsciousness in the grave; that all men are raised to consciousness [life] from the dead; that the righteous only receive the gift of immortality; that the wicked are destroyed, instead of being preserved eternally in torments, as Calvin and other Orthodox creed manufacturers assert.

[The horrible doctrine (commonly called Presbyterian doctrine), that "hell is paved with infants not a span long," is discarded generally by the sect that preached it in former times.]

Dear friend, be not deterred from searching the Bible and reading arguments offered on the subject we have referred to. Let no man be your master in this business to which you are urged. Let not the foolish cry of "fanaticism," though it proceed from the mouths of your most esteemed preachers, hinder you from making a full and fair inquiry in the direction indicated.

If you will only examine the subject in the proper, independent spirit, you will find that "ignorant and obscure (?)" Luther, Milton Isaac Newton, Wm. Paley, John Locke, Joseph Priestly, Archbishop Whately, and other catalogued "fiery champions"—alias fanatics—were right in believing and maintaining the "fossil heresy" which the distinguished author of "Daniel, a model for Young Men," so severely denounces. We may not all believe alike in every respect; but we are bound to study for the truth,—avoiding all prejudice so far as we can. Now, as calling men like Luther and Milton "ignorant and obscure," so you may conclude there is a chance for theological error on the part of those who thus (unwittingly) indict great as well as good men."

For the World's Crisis.

A CHANGE.

For over three and a half years I have been in the Crisis office, laboring diligently with my hands, head, and heart, and have gone and preached the gospel of the kingdom Sundays as the way has opened, until I find my strength failing, and must give up my position in the office, or give up preaching; and feeling the "woe" upon me if I preach not, and verily believing the kingdom is at the door, and that many are unwarned, I shall spend my time, and the strength that the Lord may give me, in laboring as the way shall open in Western New York.

Have formed many pleasant acquaintances in my associations with the brethren and sisters of New England, and it would be gratifying to heed some of the many invitations to settle among them; but there are so many preachers running around on a beaten track, that I feel it to be my duty to go elsewhere.

A great many say "the doors are opening in new places in every direction," yet who is willing to enter those doors and preach without the pledge of any one but the Lord? Very few. The Lord helping me, I will try and practice myself what I have preached to others. Have tried to fulfill my duties in the office to the best of my ability; and must say my experience for the past three and a half years has been just what I needed to school me for the Lord's work.

Have had some trials and perplexities; yet the Lord has given me grace, so that I feel I have done the best I could. Have tried to be kind to all. Wherein I have failed or come short, I ask all to forgive. Have ever been against any spirit of envy, jealousy, or strife, knowing that these things were contrary to the spirit of Christ. O how much need there is of long-suffering, forbearance, and brotherly love! Without these graces we are as sounding brass.

And now I must say farewell to Boston and Chelsea, and the dear brethren and sisters in New England, where I have labored. God bless you all with steadfastness and overcoming grace. As I go to my new field of labor, I ask you to pray that I may not only have better health, but that I may be strong in God, and that He may make me instrumental in winning souls, that I may be "wise," and "shine" by and by in the kingdom. Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course.

Until I get settled, my P. O. address will be Bethany, Genesee Co., N. Y., where I shall be glad to hear from any. A. P. MOORE.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. B. SPAULDING writes:—"Age and infirmities keep me close at home, and letters to me are like cold water to a thirsty soul. The ill health of my wife takes up all my mind, yet I do not forget God, nor my blessed Jesus. I do not forget the cause in which I have labored, and which is still near my heart. Infirmity and the effects of age only prevent me from being out in the vineyard of God. But I do try, by the way of writing, to stir up my friends to diligence, zeal and activity in the blessed cause. I am trying to hold up the light of truth to the people around me. But I have to work alone; yet not alone, for Jesus is with me.

Chelmsford is a dark place. I have tried in vain to get the light of God's word before the people here. But I trust the seed will not be wholly lost. I have seen in several instances the light springing up; several have acknowledged their belief in a literal resurrection, and that the earth will be the place of the saints' rest. But the greatest difficulty I meet is, the natural immortality of man. The people seem to think that is a self-evident truth, and needs no argument. I circulate tracts, but they will not read them, and sometimes I give up in discouragement. But I know the Lord is on the side of Bible truth, and will one day make his power known.

I rejoice to hear of the prosperity of the cause in other places. Hold on, brethren; work while the day lasts. What is done must be done quickly, and he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathers fruit unto eternal life."

BRO. J. H. HARDING writes:—"I am still striving for the kingdom, notwithstanding the trials of this present perilous time. It is not through a smooth sea that we are to enter the port of rest, but through much tribulation, according to the testimony of Paul. Let us gird on the armor, that we may be enabled to withstand the wiles of the adversary; for our Prince is to stand up for us soon, and give us an inheritance among the saints, an incorruptible one. And I feel that it is almost due, as we look at the state of the nations of earth.

The Lord has wrought a great work here in Ely, and at West Fairlee, Vt. Some are young in the faith, but strong in the Lord, and they are exerting an influence that is seen and felt, and the circle is widening and deepening. The enemy is busy as well, but we feel that the Lord is mighty to save, and that he will save all that put their trust in him, and at last give them the crown of life. Some have tried to hinder the work. We expected it. Pray for us, that the work may go on, for it is the Lord's work, and to him be the glory."

SR. H. CURTIS writes:—"Christians are God's representatives in the world, and his honor is entrusted to their keeping. God has [illegible] a peculiar people, of [illegible]

They are lights, cities on a hill; they bear his image, and are spectacles to men and angels. They are Christ's agents and ambassadors. He is never so honored as by those who do most good. The piety of the heart is not enough for his purpose. It cannot be seen if it proceed not to good works. Men who see our good works glorify God. The infidel must admit that this is religion, pure and undefiled, to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction; to clothe the naked; feed the hungry; teach the ignorant; train the rising generation to knowledge and holiness. We will have us abound in this work. God certainly leads his people through a varied experience. But all the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth, unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies. Let him at all times give us such an experience as he pleases. It will be the very best for us, and happy shall we be if we cease from our own ways so that we can give him all the praise, and rejoice in him, because we have trusted in his holy name."

BRO. J. MOORE writes from Bear River, N. S.:—"We are still striving to keep the light burning, and the cry 'Behold He cometh' sounding through this Province, though there seem to be many opposing influences to hinder. Bro. Nelson Reed has devoted himself and all he had, for three or four years, to the spreading of books, tracts, and papers, through the length and breadth of the Province, and it seems to be removing the prejudice from the minds of many, and in many places the people are willing to give a candid hearing.

We have had the New Brunswick Tent for a few weeks the last two summers, with Brn. Tozier and Hall from that place, with very satisfactory results; but Bro. Tozier's health failing, Bro. Hall could not run the tent alone, and so the work has been suspended; but I hope, if we should live to see another summer, we shall see the tent pitched in every central place through the Annapolis Valley."

BRO. J. H. LOUCKS writes:—"We are living far away in heathendom. There are many professors, and many ways marked out to gain heaven; but few have found the way that Jesus marked out. There is but little and gospel preaching here, but little of the gospel of the kingdom. We need some good man, who is able to meet the enemy in all forms, to come here and preach. I am poor, but would be glad to help sustain preaching if I were able. If any of the brethren feel able to come, I doubt not they will be rewarded in this life, and in that which is to come. My address is Carson City, Montcalm City, Mich."

BRO. J. H. BROWN writes:—"I feel that the gospel of the kingdom ought to be preached in this place. Some seem to have an ear to hear. Will some preaching brother come and help? Intend to have meetings in future, if the Lord so directs. Please correspond with James H. Brown, Littleton Common, Mass."

BRO. W. A. SHEFFIELD writes:—"I have watched with the warmest solicitude your successful progress in San Francisco, and earnestly pray Almighty God to abundantly bless."

Obituaries.

GAMMON. Died, in Gilead, Me., Feb. 10th, 1871, of consumption, Laura Angelia, daughter of Andrew C. and Louisa P. Gammon, aged twenty-two years and three months.

By Sister Laura's request, we visited her, and preached in her sick room to a few of her friends and neighbors that came in. As we spoke of Jesus and his love, and the rest prepared for those that love him, the theme touched a chord in Laura's heart never reached before. In a day or two she called her mother and said to her, "I love Jesus because he first loved me. I have never known what religion was before." She said the fear of eternal torment had caused her to try to serve Him whom she could not love, while she believed him so cruel; but from this time her peace was undisturbed.

We mourn, but not without hope; and are looking for the resurrection morning, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and live. J. GAY.

CARRUTH. Died, in Rutland, Vt., March 9th, 1871, of consumption, Charles Edward Carruth, only son of Jerusha Carruth, aged nineteen years and two months.

Charles was young, and life pictured to him many charms in glowing colors, which he was ambitious to attain. But disease put his palsying hand upon him, and brought him down in spite of medical treatment. Life was sweet to him, and he desired its continuance, but by the assistance and grace of Christ he yielded, and became reconciled to the divine Hand, and fell asleep in Jesus to await life at the coming of Jesus and the resurrection of the dead. The funeral services were attended in the Christian Advent Chapel, Sunday, March 12th, by the writer, assisted by the Congregational minister. L. BOUTELL.

GARDNER. Died, in Somersville, Ct., Feb. 3d, 1871, Julia A., wife of Francis Gardner, aged thirty-seven years.

She sought and found the Savior about five years ago, and was baptized by Eld. I. B. Potter; since then her life has been that of a consistent christian. Her end was peace. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. H. H. Dickinson, from Job 14: 14.

"She sleeps, but not forever;
There will be a glorious dawn."

R. L. PARKER.

LOUCKS. Died, March 1st, 1871, Mrs. Mary, wife of Daniel Loucks, aged seventy years and twenty-one days.

Although she suffered much, she died in faith of soon being made like Jesus. We deeply feel her loss, but we sorrow not as others which have no hope. We hope to meet her when she shall come again from the land of the enemy.

The funeral sermon was preached from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14. J. H. LOUCKS.

PAGE. Died, in Knowlesville, N. Y., Jan. 21st, 1871, of consumption, Katie A., wife of A. J. Page, aged thirty-eight years.

She was a true-hearted, christian woman.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

VERSAILLES, March 23. It is reported that the mob in Paris have assassinated Gen. Raphael.

A PROCLAMATION TO THE PEOPLE OF FRANCE. Approved by the Assembly and issued by President Thiers yesterday, after reciting the occurrences in Paris and calmly reviewing the situation, closes as follows: "France repudiates this movement. Do not fear our weakness; we, your sole representatives, shall maintain our trust and make no compromise with the guilty."

ALL QUIET AT LYONS.

All remains quiet at Lyons, but precautions have been taken against an outbreak. The Prefect of Lyons has issued a proclamation, which was well received, declaring his adherence to the Assembly.

The Debats contains a bold article bearing the signature of La Moinne, attacking the National Government in scathing language for its apathy toward the insurrection.

A TERRIBLE STATE OF AFFAIRS.

The Rue de la Paix is a pool of blood, and no man's life is safe in Paris.

VERSAILLES, March 22. Several Paris newspapers have removed to Versailles. The Paris insurgents have obtained from the Bank of France a million francs against a deposit of formal Treasury bonds. A requisition made by them upon the Rothschilds was refused payment.

BERLIN, March 22. Orders have been issued to stop the return home of French prisoners for the present. The French Government has as yet appointed no commissioners to arrange for the return of the prisoners in Germany.

PARIS, March 23. The insurgents still continue to hold Gen. Chanzy as a prisoner. Their leaders declare that they retain the General as a hostage, and will immediately shoot him if they are attacked by the troops of the Government.

BERLIN, March 23. Bismarck has been elevated to the rank of Prince of the German Empire, and Von Moltke President, with the grand cross of the Order of the Iron Cross.

AN EMPIRE PROBABLE.

PARIS, March 24. [New York World special.] The reaction in favor of the Empire gains strength hourly, and unless Thiers speedily restores order the French may endeavor to find their way to Chiselhurst.

PARIS, March 24. The city is in a terrible state of excitement this morning. The insurgents still continue to excite the wildest terror and alarm by their outrages, and no one's life is considered safe.

The insurgents are preparing for a desperate encounter, and armed bodies of men are everywhere seen in the streets. The citizens fly at their approach and in every way endeavor to avoid an encounter with the infuriated and bloodthirsty revolutionists.

Numbers of peaceable citizens have already been sacrificed to their ferocity. A great many citizens are flying from the city, taking with them their families and such articles only as could be rendered portable in flight.

THE GERMAN WARNING TO PARIS.

LONDON, March 24. Dispatches from Berlin alter the terms of the warning given by the Germans to Paris. The announcement, as officially reported, is that if any attempt is made by the Parisians to rearm the enceinte the Germans will reopen the fire upon the city. No time for such action is specified.

THE UNEMPLOYED WORKMEN OF PARIS

Were to hold a public meeting yesterday. The call for a meeting was of the most inflammatory character.

A CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS.

The Mayor of Lille has issued a proclamation inviting volunteers to march on Paris.

VERSAILLES, March, 24. In accordance with the notification of Bismarck, presented to the Assembly yesterday, the German troops are now preparing to occupy the forts surrounding Paris. A German detachment has already occupied Fort St. Denis. Guns of heavy calibre have been mounted on the fort, and now point toward Paris. The German troops will, however, maintain a peaceful attitude, unless the hostility toward Germany, manifested by the insurgents on peace preliminaries are carried out, or the conditions of peace are in any manner infringed on or violated; in either of which events the German artillery will open a furious and devastating cannonade on the city from the batteries in the surrounding forts, which will speedily have the effect of reducing the insurgents to obedience and subjection.

PARIS, March 24. The insurgents' rule in Paris is hourly becoming productive of crimes of the most inhuman and appalling description. Deliberate murder is not unfrequent, many respectable citizens having in this manner met their fate at the hands of the lawless mob. George Hannah Tennel, an American, was killed by a stray shot during the fight at the Place Vendome on Wednesday afternoon.

VERSAILLES, March 24. An event has just transpired which has created the greatest agitation and excitement in this city. A train filled with released prisoners, who had been returned by the Germans, has been captured in the neighborhood of Versailles by a powerful body of insurgents. A part of the revolutionary force in the capital, the 69th Regiment, were also in the train.

LONDON, March 25. Advices from Paris state that Admiral Saisset, being empowered by the Versailles Government to negotiate with the insurgents, has at last succeeded in concluding an amicable understanding with the Revolutionists. A meeting took place between Admiral Saisset and several of the insurgent leaders, at which the agreement was concluded. The nature and particulars of the arrangement have not yet been telegraphed. Much satisfaction is felt by all in the city at this new and promising phase of affairs. This agreement on the part of the Revolutionists is held to indicate an inclination and desire for peace.

LYONS, March 26. The disturbances which lately agitated the city have ceased, and perfect order has again been restored. The Prefect who was held as a prisoner by the revolutionists has been released. No further demonstrations have been attempted by the "reds," and the disturbances which agitated the city previous to the establishment of the Commune have not been renewed.

PARIS, March 26. Sunday morning.—The elections are progressing quietly and the most perfect order and decorum are observed by the citizens. The work of removing the barricades commenced this morning. A number have been already removed and the work still progresses.

HAVRE, March 26. The revolutionary emissaries sent to this city by the Paris insurgents for the purpose of creating disaffection among the people and influencing a rising, have been arrested and imprisoned by the government.

LONDON, March 26. All the mayors of the various arrondissements and the deputies in Paris, issued a proclamation to the people last evening, setting forth that to save the Republic without the further effusion of blood, they, the said mayors and deputies ordered the Communal elections to take place to-day, (Sunday), when ninety members were to be elected to the Commune.

A dispatch from Marseilles states that the commune has been publicly proclaimed in that city. The citizens are quiet and orderly and no disturbance has arisen in consequence of the proclamation of the new government.

LONDON, March 27. The Central Committee of the Paris insurgents publish a denial of the report that they contemplate the suppression of the Commune.

Despatches from Lyons are of a very contradictory character regarding the status of affairs.

The latest telegrams represent the revolutionary movement as entirely successful, and although perfect order prevails, the "Reds" have complete possession of the city.

Napoleon visits Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle to-day.

VERSAILLES, March 27. Chancellor von Bismarck, in a communication to M. Jules Favre, announced that as long as the provisions of preliminaries of peace are observed, and instalments of the indemnity fund are regularly paid, Germany will not interfere in the internal affairs of France.

Five hundred of the National Guard have been disarmed.

M. Thiers was to-day denounced in the Assembly for his inactivity in dealing with the present troubles.

SNOW IN THE SIERRA.—On account of the heavy fall of snow in the mountains the express mails have been delayed as much as two weeks between this city and points in Plumas County (says the Marysville Express.) About Quincy the roads are so blockaded that the letter express is carried by men on snow shoes to the neighboring towns. Staging has been almost suspended beyond the foothills. It is thought that the present fall of snow on the mountains has not been equalled for many years past. Notwithstanding the blockaded condition of the mountain roads, the [illegible] express matter are put through to their destination by pack trains and snow-shoe messengers.

TO BE WITH CHRIST, FAR BETTER.

Oh, I long to be with thee, my Savior! my friend,
Away from earth's trials that never will end,
While pilgrims and strangers we wander below,—
Oh! come, blessed Jesus, thy glory to show.

Oh, come, for thy people are waiting for thee,
When thou from corruption shall set us all free,
And crown us with glory, eternal and bright,
In that beautiful land, that shall be without night.

Oh, come in thy glory and majesty high,
That our eyes may behold up in heaven's blue sky
The King in his beauty, with angels his friends,
To gather his loved ones before he descends.

Oh! I long to behold thee, when thou shalt command
All the loved ones that sleep in the enemy's land,
To come forth in thy beauty, eternal and pure,
The reward which is promised to all that endure.

Then we shall repose on thy bosom in peace,
Where life's stormy billows forever shall cease;
And we'll sing the new song then to us shall be given,
Of thy mercies, God! and the glories of heaven.

CHURCH DIVISIONS.

THE CAUSES.

5. Pride is a great divider of human hearts. Solomon affirms that "by pride cometh contention." Again he says: "He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife." There must be some real philosophy underlying these statements. Pride is inordinate self-esteem. It leads one to "think of himself more highly than he ought to think." When a man thus lapse the grace of humility, and becomes inflated with a pride of opinion, he very naturally depreciates the good qualities of others, and is too ready to reject their proposals with scornful haste. Aristocracy is generated, and classes are created as a natural consequence. Egotism is always unfavorable to "the unity of the Spirit." Humility melts, draws, and unites; but high-headedness is repellant in its own nature.

This inordinate self-esteem leads many to aspire after offices for which they are not qualified, and honors to which they are not entitled. Pride thus degenerates into unholy ambition, and sometimes into unscrupulous rivalry. There is a strife for position and power; and the strife often involves such wire-pulling and elbowing as ought never to be tolerated in a Christian church. When persons have such exalted notions of their own abilities that they are always seeking official honors, and never content unless they stand at the helm of power, the best thing for God's cause is to snub their unsanctified ambition before it grows into irrepressible tyranny. It can hardly be otherwise than that preachers or people, who are heavily stocked with pride of position, will prove a source of continual trouble. If ambitious aspirants are humored to all they demand, the more pious and sensible portion of the church will certainly feel aggrieved to have the sacred interests of God's house committed to such unworthy hands. If they are not thus humored, their sensitive natures are touched, and their disappointment is manifested in unreasonable railings or mulish moroseness. Many churches are kept in hot water by the ambitious pride of a few would-be leaders and dictators. Those who are best qualified to lead, have such a sense of responsibility as to keep them from office-seeking. If all the members of a given church possessed humility enough to sit at each other's feet—"in honor preferring one another"—bearing each other's burdens—"esteeming others better than themselves"—willing to fill any position or perform any service which the providence of God might assign them, there would be little danger of such distraction as often goes through a religious society like a deluge of destruction. O for grace to be little!

Pride often takes the form of vanity. It crops out in the shape of splendid equipage and artificial tinselry. It creates high heads and lofty looks. It lays great stress on style, and deals largely in ostentatious display. It substitutes parade for piety, and looks disdainfully upon simplicity of manners and plainness of attire. It revels in rustling silks and glittering gold. It builds extravagant church edifices, and thinks to attract the multitudes by gorgeousness rather than godliness. This leads to vain rivalry, in constructing temples of worship, and in procuring such fashionable accompaniments as are likely to charm the giddy throng. Where a part of the church is in favor of running the gospel machinery on a basis of policy and show, and another part is utterly opposed to such glitter and parade, Christian unity is at an end. How many of God's poor have been practically excluded from fashionable churches by the power of pride! Aristocracy appropriates the best seats, and poverty is crowded into the galleries and corners. Penitents have sometimes been driven from the altar of prayer because of their color, their dress, or their former reputation. Where such senseless caste is cultivated, hearts are alienated and brotherly love destroyed.

It is in the very nature of pride to produce division of feeling. As pride exalts self above its true level, it erects artificial barriers and creates unauthorised distinctions between those who might otherwise be one in Christ. The only place where true Christian union can be enjoyed is down at the feet of Jesus, where self is crucified, pride is slain, and humility sweetens and unifies the hearts of God's people. A. A. PHELPS.

RUTLAND, VT.

BRO. GRANT:—I am still here doing what I can for the cause. We have good healthy meetings, with good congregations. The people seem interested to hear our presentation of the plan of redemption, and some with joy receive it. Death is still doing his wicked work here, as well as elsewhere. Our chapel was crowded Sunday afternoon (12th) at the funeral services of Charles E. Carruth. We were assisted by the Cong. minister. We preached the resurrection of the dead and coming of Jesus as the blessed and only hope of the church.

Last Sunday, at intermission we went to the river, and with one happy convert went down into the water, baptized her, and left her rejoicing on her way to the kingdom. The Lord keep her amid the perils. Last week by invitation I went to Middletown, Vt., fifteen miles west of this place, and preached Wednesday and Thursday evenings on the peculiarities (as they would term it) of our faith, in the Methodist [illegible]; and although the weather was unpropitious, yet the turnout showed an interest to hear, especially [illegible]. Many wanted me to [illegible], and I wish they might. Brother, there is a loud call for missionary work in the highways and hedges. I responded to a call to this place. The writer I had never seen; he had never seen me. Knew no one when I got there, but after preaching found two or three of our faith; and I am thankful the seed is scattered all over the country, and the few are exerting an influence for the truth that is felt, and if the few were as faithful as they ought to be, the fire of truth would be spread more effectually, and its influence could not be resisted.

Study the Bible; believe the Bible; and then, cost what it may, speak the truth and word of God; and, above all, live it out in daily life, and you will make your mark. There is no hiding it, dearly beloved. Our kind, outspoken truth relative to the end and death of the wicked, has neutralized the preaching of eternal misery, and it is a rare thing to hear in any evangelical denomination the doctrine of eternal suffering in hell torments. The inference is, that they begin to doubt its truthfulness, and will soon begin to express those doubts, and come into the consistent Bible belief, that "the wages of sin is death."

Then let us be greatly encouraged and doubly active in this godlike reformatory work. Always be about the Master's business.

ELDER GRANT IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The coming of Elder Grant to this city has been, and still is, to us who live here, the most remarkable event of the year. The liveliest earthquake we have ever had in these parts, did not cause half the stir and talk among the people as the advent and labors of Elder Grant.

The common inquiry now is, "Have you seen Elder Grant?" "Have you heard Elder Grant?" "What do you think of Elder Grant?" Of course these questions are answered according to the predilections, prejudices, or candor of the persons to whom they are addressed. The Spiritualists can see no good in the man, and set him down as an infidel. "Does he not deny that the soul lives on after death?" say they. Some ministers of the gospel have also shown an antagonistic spirit; but the people generally have welcomed him warmly, and are enthusiastic in their admiration of the ability, boldness, and honesty of Eld. Grant. Platt's immense hall and the Minna St. church have alternately, night after night for over two months, been filled to repletion by eager and attentive listeners to the able, clear, and convincing expositions of the truths of God's word by Elder Grant.

These truths I feel assured have reached the hearts of thousands in this city; many of whom have already confessed Jesus and joined the swelling ranks of God's people in California.

The interest in things eternal is growing and spreading, not only in this city, but all around it; and I anticipate a glorious revival of religion over the entire State, through the labors of Elder Grant. The work has only begun that shall shake Satan's kingdom on this Coast, and prepare the hearts of men for the coming of the Lord. H. F. R.

TO NEW YORK ADVENTISTS.

Dear brethren of like precious faith: You will see by the report of the last conference, lately held in Brockport, that there is yet some interest felt in conference in the matter of circuit preaching. Not, let me explain, that that body desires to exercise any authority over the churches, or set itself up in power. No, the strongest term it has ever used in this connection is "advise with." But we all know that the dear cause we love so well suffers greatly from the apathy and lukewarmness of the masses, even of those who give assent to our views of the exhausted state of prophecy, and the consequent nearness of that great event which gives us a denominational name.

Really, it seems quite paradoxical to me, that people can believe Jesus is coming, that he probably will come, or that he possibly may come, and not bestir themselves into some sort of action, either for themselves or for their fellows. Nevertheless, ever since the first Advent, some have held the truth in unrighteousness, while it is equally true that all along the way some have let their light shine—have proved themselves thus to be the salt of the earth. God will have his witnesses. Of which class are we?—I ask the reader—"THOU art the man."

Now, is not the exhortation of "our beloved brother Paul" especially in point here when he says—"Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Do we not need, brethren, to arouse ourselves to earnest, united action in these last times, that, the grace of God assisting us, we may be able to accomplish as great a work as possible, "to make ready a people prepared for the Lord"? In union there is strength!

It was made the duty of the writer, as you understand by the resolution passed in conference, to visit the Advent churches and isolated brethren within the limits of the N. Y. A. C. Conference, to advise with you relative to the establishment of a better system of securing preaching and holding meeting. The idea is to secure regular meetings, and regular preaching services, at intervals such as your varying circumstances may permit.

Now in order to bring the thought to a practical result, and to answer the requirement of conference, I desire to visit or correspond with some earnestly interested person, residing in every place in the State where there is already an interest, or the elements and opportunity to produce a more active interest in the advancement of the living issues of the age, as we understand them, in these last days. If we gather not with Jesus we scatter abroad.

Now who will commence to-day to do something more than they have been doing for the cause of their Master? Let every church that will thus co-operate with conference in lengthening and enlarging our borders, and all isolated, but living, faithful brethren, who desire a visit or the advice of conference, write me immediately and inform me of your desires.

Cannot every large or established church reach out and help some adjacent sister band, just struggling into life, perhaps; and cannot [illegible] or three only, establish themselves and have at least [illegible]? "Come, let us reason together." If I am to visit you, I shall need to know where you are, and how to reach you. And when I hear from you, I will arrange to economize time and travel, and meet you as early as possible. I am, dear brethren, your humble servant, waiting for Jesus,

WM. E. BROWN.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

A very large audience assembled at Platt's Hall last evening, to hear Elder Grant's views on "Future punishment." The Elder chose for his text a part of the 17th verse of the 4th chapter of the first Epistle of Peter: "What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" In commencing, the Elder stated that he liked to talk to an intelligent audience, like the present. He liked to have thinking people about him—people who would think on what he said and investigate it. Anything that cannot bear investigation cannot be true. Every doctrine in the Bible is founded on eternal truths. He quoted from Isaac Taylor who says: "The doctrine of future punishment, as drawn from the Scripture, will spread a salutary alarm." That was what he wanted to do, then; spread an alarm, arouse the people and present to them the fact for them to investigate.

This subject of future punishment could be divided and spoken on under four heads. First, Will the wicked be punished at all? Second, Where? Third, When? and fourth, How?

No one, said the Elder, disputes or doubts but that the wicked will be punished in some way, and at some time. That decides the first point. Now, as to where. The Bible distinctly states it will come on the earth, and there is no proof in the Scriptures that it will be anywhere else. Thirdly, we read in 2 Peter 2: 9, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Here, he said, was the point. On the day of judgment; they were not punished before. If a man died to day, he did not go directly to his judgment, but would be judged on the judgment-day. It would be found in 2 Timothy 4: 1—"And the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;" also, in Revelations 11: 15—"And the seventh angel sounded." This, said the Elder, looked reasonable, that after death

COMES THE JUDGMENT.

Therefore it was found that the wicked were not punished now. In regard to the fourth point—"How?"—on that there were various opinions, some thinking that they get the punishment as they go along; others, that the wicked will suffer torture in a lake of flame, which would increase and increase, grow hotter and hotter, while the victims confined therein struggled to the surface and cried aloud, "How long! how long!" and the unceasing ticking of the clock replied, "Eternity, eternity!" Did God's Book teach that? Few ministers preached that doctrine now, though some years ago it was the most popular doctrine. Others, again, held the idea that the wicked would be taken, judged and,

BLOTTED OUT OF EXISTENCE,

Or condemned to eternal destruction. What did the Bible sustain? The first means the remorse of conscience. The Bible did not teach that. If this doctrine were true, only the more wicked a man became the less punishment he would get, because his conscience would become seared and numb, insensible to feeling. The Elder here cited some cases of murderers, who said that they had no compunctions or qualms of conscience, slept well, and were not at all troubled in their minds; where was their punishment?—not remorse in this life, certainly. The Bible said nothing about the conscience being a punishment.

Others believed that the wicked were punished for awhile in the world to come, and then taken into the favor of God. A question had arisen: Will the wicked live in eternal misery or be totally exterminated? If, as some claimed, man was immortal and was to be judged, then he would have to be eternally miserable; but the Bible said that man was mortal. The Bible said nothing of happy immortality, but spoke of "eternal life" promised to all by patient continuance in well doing. The Elder here quoted from Psalms, 145, 20, 37, 38; Isaiah 57, 15, as to the way in which the word destroy was used. He said that if he should break the lamp it would be destroyed. The wicked were destroyed the same. The word destroy occurred 379 times in the Bible, and in no one case did it mean eternal torment. He also spoke at considerable length on the meaning of the words "unquenchable fire," as frequently used in the Scriptures, holding that they did not mean eternal burning, but that the fire was unquenchable at the time and until all had been consumed. He also spoke of the word "forever," which he stated was used in the Bible in a limited sense some two hundred times.

He quoted from Romans 6: 23—"For the wages of sin is death." If God designed to destroy the wicked, how could they be tormented or punished? could a man be punished if he was dead? This was a salutary alarm. Many infidels had been made by the doctrine of eternal torture. He could not believe in any such thing, and certainly they were not to be blamed for it. Did such a thing look at all reasonable? He thought not. At the conclusion of the lecture a number of persons availed themselves of the privilege of asking questions.—San Francisco Daily Chronicle.

THE ERA OF JOY.

Last Christmas H. W. Beecher preached a sermon on "the era of joy," from which we make the following extract:—

"I believe I have not used it for four or five years, though I often used it before that time—the figure that Agassiz uses; namely, that the growth of a plant is in three stages: first, by the root, which is invisible, and is the slowest and longest; second, by the stem, which is accelerated, and perhaps not half as long; and third, by maturation or ripening, which is the quickest of all. The root takes a great while to grow; the stem takes a little less time; and when these two have become developed, they rush to the blossom, and through the blossom to the fruit. And the last of the three periods is the shortest. So it is in history. The earliest stages are very slow; the intermediate stages are far faster; and the final or ripening stages are very rapid.

Now, as the world has been largely occupied by root-growth in moral things, and as the present may be considered the period of growth by the stem, so I think we are standing on the eve of the period of growth by maturation and ripening. . . .

While, then, to-day, we celebrate the coming of Christ, and give thanks to God for the advent of our Savior; while we also recount the blessings which in our several experiences, and in our happy families, have come from our adhesion to Christ, or from our birth and education in a Christian land, and under Christian influences, let us lift up our eyes, and, if we can, enter into sympathy with God, who, sitting upon the circle of the earth, looks at all the races, and has in his sympathy and in his heart the welfare of the lowest savage as well as the highest philosopher. And let us with him rejoice that the time past is nearly sufficient in which the world has wrought the will of the Gentiles, that the days of the flesh are fast passing, that the days of the understanding and the day of [illegible] sentiment are coming quick, and that the whole earth is nearing the period of its final deliverance, when the new heavens and the new earth in which dwell righteousness shall come, and Christ shall dwell with men, and they shall be his people."

BEGINNING AT JERUSALEM.

The Examiner very aptly says: "In this whole matter of Christian work, we should follow the indications of God's providence, which will, pretty uniformly, be found to say: Begin now—here—with the person that is nearest." How natural it would have been for the apostles to have chosen any other field in which to begin their work than the city which they were most familiar with! Undoubtedly the Master knew that this universal human weakness, the desire to attempt great things before experience has been gained in little, would be their first great mistake.

The poor man whose curses may be heard in the next street is more accessible than the heathen in a distant city. He is both nearer in space, and much nearer in point of influence. He has some opportunity to observe us in our unprofessional garb; has, perhaps, occasion to know that our Christianity is not an affair of mere preaching, and our charity not a simple giving of money and food. If so, we have an advantage in working to save him. And if not, if he knows us to be more pretentious than genuine, and our zeal more partisan than spiritual, it is still well for us to learn this fact before venturing upon the more hazardous enterprise of laboring amid greater temptations.

Not until we have traded with our five talents, and added to them other five, ought we to think of the five cities. Even then, we had better wait for the Lord's bidding before we try to exercise so broad a dominion.—Christian at Work.

WALK BY FAITH.

I saw the young moon walking through the sky,
Nor heeded she the many stars that smiled,
And glowed, and sparkled, as she passed them by,
As if to woo her to their side the while.

Serenely on she moved, though o'er her head
Lowering its gathered blackness, a huge cloud
Far o'er the sky its murky shadow spread,
And wrapped her future pathway in a shroud.

Yet pressed she on; hid, lost, the fair young moon,
Her lone attendant one pale, glistening star;
When suddenly she burst from out the gloom,
And flung her radiance o'er the night afar.

And thus would I pursue my christian course,
Undeviating from the heavenly way,
Unheeding all the beauteous things of earth,
My feet press onward to the realms of day.

And when around my heart dark trials come,
And tempest-like would shake my hope of bliss,
And earthly sorrows' thick clouds gather round,
Enfolding me as in a dark abyss;

Oh! then I'd falter not, or fear, with faith,
The fiercest tempest or dark cloud to dare,
Knowing that He who bade me tread the path,
Will bring me out where all is bright and fair;
And when life's heavy conflicts all are o'er,
I shall be glorious on the other shore.

Lynn, Mass. L. M. PROCTOR.

"IT IS WRITTEN."

Our blessed Savior, whenever he was tempted, chose in his defence some word of God. In this he is an example to us. A Scotch pastor found an aged christian looking downcast. "Well, Betty, what is wrong with you to-day?" "Ah!" replied the good old woman, "he's been at me." "And what has he been saying to you?" inquired the minister. "He's been saying to me," replied Betty, "that it's a' delusion—that the Bible's a lie—that there's nae heaven—nae hell—nae Savior; that I'm not saved—that it's a' a delusion." "And what did you say to him?" asked the minister. "Say to him!" quoth Betty, "I kent better than that; I kent there was nae use o' arguin' wi' him; I jist referred him to the Lord."

"What's wrang wi' ye noo? I thocht ye were a' richt," said a ragged boy, himself rejoicing in the Savior, to another, who a few nights before professed to be able to trust Jesus, but who has again begun to doubt. "What's wrang wi' ye noo?" "Man, I'm no' richt yet," replied the other, "for Satan's aye tempting me." "And what dae ye then?" asked his friend. "I try," said he, "to sing a hymn." "And does that no' send him awa'?" "No; I am as bad as ever." "Weel," said the other, "when he tempts you again, try him wi' a text; he canna stand that."—S. S. Workman.

EVERY DAY RELIGION.—We would not urge all of you to give yourselves up to mission work, but to serve God more and more in connection with your daily calling. I have heard that a woman who has a mission makes a poor wife and a bad mother; this is very possible, and at the same time very lamentable; but the mission I would urge is not of this sort. Dirty rooms, slatternly gowns, and children with unwashed faces, are swift witnesses against the sincerity of those who keep others' vineyards and neglect their own. I have no faith in that woman who talks of grace and glory abroad, and uses no soap and water at home. Let the buttons be on the shirts, let the children's socks be mended, let the roast mutton be done to a turn, let the house be as neat as a new pin, and the home be happy as home can be. Serve God by doing common actions in a heavenly spirit, and then, if your daily calling only leaves you cracks and crevices of time, fill these up with holy service.—Spurgeon.

LOVE OF THE WORLD.—They take very unprofitable pains who endeavor to persuade men that they are obliged wholly to despise this world and all that is in it, even whilst they themselves live here. God hath not taken all that pains in forming and framing and furnishing and adorning this world, that they who were made by him to live in it should despise it. It will be well enough if they do not love it so immoderately as to prefer it before Him who made it.

REMARKABLE SAGACITY OF A DOG.—A most striking illustration of that wonderful sagacity sometimes exhibited by dogs, often almost equaling human intelligence, was related to us a day or two since by a gentleman of our acquaintance, living on Main street. He is the owner of a valuable, well-trained setter dog, which sleeps at night in a kennel near the back part of the house. On Thursday night last, about ten o'clock, as the gentleman went to his room in the second story, on the front side of the building (the lights below being extinguished), he heard his dog come beneath the window and set up a most earnest and constant barking, and it seemed to him that there was an unusual tone in the animal's voice. Supposing, however, that there were intruders on the premises, he opened the window and called out to "Nig" to "catch 'em." The dog, instead of starting off under the order, continued to bark, jumping up against the wall of the house beneath the window, evidently desiring that his master should come down. The gentleman went down, and as soon as he reached the outer door, was met by the dog, who, still barking, ran toward the rear of the dwelling.

His master following, found his hired man lying on the ground, helpless and unconscious. He had, as he afterward stated, and as the marks upon the ice indicated, in stepping out from the kitchen, slipped and fallen upon the ice, his head striking a stone and cutting a fearful gash in his scalp. He had to be carried into the house, and it was some hours before he recovered his senses; in fact, he is still suffering from the effects of the wounds.

The man remembers nothing from the moment he fell; but the dog, who either saw him fall, or found him lying there afterward, knew of his condition, and but for this display of what can hardly be called less than human intelligence, the man unquestionably would have lain stunned all night, and probably either frozen to death or died from loss of blood before morning.—Quincy Ill. Whig.

DYING WORDS OF JOHN RANDOLPH.

"He suddenly roused himself and exclaimed, 'Remorse! remorse!' It was thrice repeated, the last time at the top of his voice, with great agitation. He cried out—'Let me see the word.' 'There is none in the room, sir.' 'Write it down, then—let me see the word.' The doctor picked up one of his cards—'Randolph of Roanoke'—'Shall I write it on the cards?' 'Yes, nothing more proper.' The word remorse was then written in pencil. He took the card in a hurried manner, and fastened his eyes on it with great intensity. 'Write it on the back,' he exclaimed. It was so done and handed him again. He was extremely agitated,—'Remorse! you have no idea what it is; you can form no idea of it whatever.'"—Life of John Randolph of Roanoke. pp. 373–4.

Such were the feelings of a distinguished politician when the whole was summed up in one word—"REMORSE!" How different the christian's dying language, who sums up all his feelings in one word, and says—"GLORY." Let us all be christians instead of politicians.

A GOOD ILLUSTRATION.

I once saw a preacher trying to teach children that their souls would live after they were dead. They listened, but evidently did not understand. He was too abstruse. Snatching his watch from his pocket, he said:

"James, what is this I hold in my hand?"

"A watch, sir."—"A little clock," says another.

"Do you all see it?"

"Yes, sir."

"How do you know it is a watch?"

"It ticks, sir."

"Very well; can any of you hear it tick? All listen now." After a pause—"Yes, sir, we hear it." He then took off the case, and held the case in one hand, and the watch in the other.

"Now, children, which is the watch?—you see there are two which look like watches."

"The littlest one, in your right hand, sir."

"Very well; but how do you know that this is the watch?"

"Because it ticks."

"Very well again; now I will lay the case aside—put it away there down in my hat. Now let us try if you can hear the watch tick."

"Yes, sir, we hear it," exclaimed several voices.

"Well, the watch can tick and go, and keep time when the case is taken off and put away in my hat. The watch goes just as well. So it is with you, children. Your body is nothing but the case, the soul is inside. The case—the body, may be taken off and buried in the ground, and the soul will live and think just as well as this watch can go, as you find when the case is off."

This made it plain, and even the youngest went home and told his mother that his little thought would tick after he was dead.—Good Words.

DIALOGUE

ON THE ABOVE "ILLUSTRATION."

(Imagined by O. R. Fassett.)

Pete Simple. "Don't you think, Paul Bright, that the illustration in Good Words about the watch ticking with the case off, a clear one to show that a boy's 'little thought would tick after he was dead'?"

Paul Bright. "'Clear as mud'! as the saying is. Are you so simple, Pete, as to take every man's sayings or illustrations as true, without thinking for yourself? If you do, you will take up with every thing that comes along, and then how much nonsense you will believe. The apostle says: 'Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good.'"

Pete. "When a good man tells me a thing in earnest, I believe him, for he is old enough, and ought to know; and I don't think a christian man means to tell a lie to children when he is in earnest and sincere. Why should I not believe such a one?"

Paul. "A good man may be wrong when he thinks he is right. And I have learned that some men don't read or study much, especially the Bible; and some 'make void the word of God by their tradition,' as Jesus said. All men are fallible, even the pope, who has proclaimed himself 'infallible,' to the ridicule of the whole world, except his dupes. I must have proof and facts on all important and vital statements, and I have learned to think, and read, and inform myself, without taking every thing on trust because even good men say it."

Pete. "Well, now, I see; a man told me the other day a thing which he thought was verily true, and he did not intend to deceive me, and I believed him; but I have found out since that it was not true. But, Paul, why don't you think that illustration a good one? It is called 'A Good Illustration.'"

Paul. "If that 'preacher' had likened 'the watch case' to a man's clothes, and the watch itself to the man, the illustration would have been sensible and to the point. The 'watch case' don't constitute the watch; it is its covering to protect the watch, and it could keep time without it, of course. So a man's clothes don't constitute the man, but is his covering to protect his person; and a man can think as well with his clothes off, as on."

Pete. "Well, that is bright indeed! I think, as the man said, 'the body nothing but the case,' and 'the soul' is 'inside.' This appears to me more reasonable."

Paul. "No! Pete, the whole man is called in the Bible 'a living soul,' and before he had any clothes on, for Adam was 'naked' when God said this (Gen. 2.) And the watch in the illustration is called 'the watch,' whether it has its case on or off. Besides, I should like to have that preacher find inside of a boy or a man another boy or man, and pull him out of his body, as he did the watch out of its case, and show him to us. Or prove, that such a 'soul inside' of a boy or man escapes after one dies; or still further, that his 'thought ticks after he is dead.' I am studying anatomy as well as the Bible, and nowhere in either can I find such a soul within a man's body as people tell about, and the wisest professors in anatomy confess this. The Bible sometimes speaks of 'the life' being 'the soul,' and so do wise philosophers. Jesus so taught: 'Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul'? (This word soul should be translated life as above, for it is the same word in Greek as I have seen in my Greek Testament.) It's the brain that thinks; and do you think, Pete, that would 'tick thought' if it was taken out of the skull, and the skull laid one side, and the brain held in the hand, as the man held the watch?"

Pete. "I never thought of that before. But don't you suppose we could think without a brain? and that there is a soul somewhere in us that does think, brain or no brain, and when the body dies keeps on thinking?"

Paul. "If there is a soul of such a nature in man, it is strange that we have to carry about such a big head on our shoulders, and such an amount of brain in it. We could get along without a head as big as a fly, or even as much brain as a musquito, and in fact without any head at all, or body either! Why did not our Maker create us without a body, head, or brains? Did he not know we could think and live without? Or did he make a mistake in creating man? What did our Creator give us a body for if it is not of some use? What did he give us a head and brains in it for, if the brain is not to think with?"

Pete. "Your reasoning seems to be good. But was not that watch dead when the preacher took off the case?"

Paul. "Dead! Are you in earnest, Pete? You are joking."

Pete. "No, I am not. The man's illustration was to prove that a man was dead when God took off his body from his soul, as he did the case from the watch."

Paul. "Dead, when the watch kept on ticking! That man ought to go through college again, and learn something before he preaches. I guess he 'went in at one door, and out at the other end,' as I have heard of some students doing when they have been to college. 'Was the watch dead when the preacher took the case off?' Why not ask, is a man dead when he takes his clothes off? A man when he undresses, is just as much dead as that watch was, and no more.

Pete. "What would you call a dead watch?"

Paul. "One that did not tick, nor could not be made to tick, or keep time at all; and I have seen watches 'as dead as a hammer,' as the saying is."

Pete. What would you consider a dead man? One that could not think, or move, like a dead watch?"

Paul. "Yes. One who ceases to live, and, with his life expired, cannot think, or act at all. 'His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.' 'The dead know not any thing.' So say the Scriptures; and they are true."

Pete. "A watch may run down, and stop ticking. Would that be a dead watch?"

Paul. "Not at all. It is apparently dead. All that it wants is to be wound up again, and it will go, for it is in good condition. It is suspended action, that's all. And a man may be apparently dead, and yet there is only suspended animation, as in a fainting fit, or drowning when one is recovered or restored. For the time being they are as if dead, for there is a cessation of the vital functions, and in such cases thought ceases, and they 'know not any thing.' And if it had proved to be death, or they could not have been 'brought to,' do you suppose that their 'thought would tick after they were dead'?"

Pete. "They say that the thought or thinking part escapes, as a bird out of a cage, in such cases, and 'thought ticks' the harder."

Paul. "Does it look reasonable that a man loses his power to think when the vital functions are suspended for an hour or longer, or when the brain is injured in any way; and yet if the vital functions are not restored at all, or the brain destroyed altogether, the 'thought ticks' as never before? It does not stand to reason; it is unphilosophical and unscriptural."

Pete. "I now see what death is in case of a watch. It is not simply the removal of the case, but it is when a watch is all out of repair, and can't be made to go at all, not even 'tick,' unless it is taken to the jewelers and made over new. It is a watch that has been harmed by a fall or some disaster which has completely spoiled it; and such is the case of a man who is dead. You are right, Paul Bright. I have learned something this morning I shall never forget, I hope."

Paul. "Yes, Pete, you will be a wise boy if you will study, and think for yourself, and not let others do all the thinking for you hereafter. 'If the blind lead the blind, they shall both fall into the ditch.' When you go home, take Webster's Dictionary and find the word death, and see how he defines it, and you will not mistake again the signification of the word. When a watch or clock has its mainspring broken, its wheels broken and all out of place, and the whole of it by some severe shock it has received—as a fall, or violent blow—been shattered, so that it is ready to fall to pieces, that is the death of that watch. It can't 'tick,' I'll warrant you. And such is the illustration a better "preacher" has given to the youth in the Bible of a dead man. He goes on to say—'Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth. . . . . Because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets; or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit [this is the breath of the spirit of life] shall return to God who gave it.' Eccl. 12. 'The breath of the spirit of life' is not dust, but that which gives life to man. This God takes; and if man lives again, he must impart it to the dead when he repairs the man, or raises him from the dead."

Pete. "Can a watch, dead, dead as can be, as you have described, ever be made to 'tick' and keep good time again? I don't see how it can."

Paul. "Yes. A skillful chemist, smith, and jeweler, could take that watch and melt it to dust, and yet gather all its particles and make a new watch out of them, which would be a better watch and keep better time than the old one did."

Pete. "That is amazing! And can a man dead, as dead as he can be, and dissolved into dust, and the dust scattered everywhere, be made a live man again, and be a better man and more beautiful than before?"

Paul. "Certainly. God can raise the dead, and give life to the dead. 'Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?' And now I must leave you, Pete; but let us be good, and love God, who, if we die before he sends his Son to raise the dead, will raise us up at the last day by Jesus; and if we are alive at that day will not suffer us to die at all, but give us eternal life.' Good bye."

Pete. "Good bye."

And Pete Simple went home and told his mother that his little thought would not tick after he was dead; but that it would when Jesus comes to raise the dead, and restore his little brain (if he should die while a little boy), with which to think, and henceforth could say with king David—"I have more understanding than all my teachers; for thy testimonies are my meditation." He was ever afterward to be, not Pete Simple, but a wiser boy, and a good boy; he had "faith in God" and "the resurrection," instead of the heathen Plato and his doctrine.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

CLEANLINESS.

Perhaps there is no part of the health reform more plain and obvious than that relating to cleanliness. We cannot see how a filthy man can be a healthy person. Filth itself breeds disease. Hence plagues and epidemics generally originate in the low and filthy parts of cities, and make the most fearful havoc there. We think he is a very poor health reformer who allows filth and uncleanness to accumulate around his house and premises. Look around the well, the back door, the wood pile, and also in the cellar. Are they all kept clean and healthy? Disease and death, which carry off our loved ones, often originate in these impurities. Then we piously lay it all to the Lord: It is a false accusation; and the sooner we learn this and remove the cause, the better.

When the Israelites dwelt in tents, the Lord gave them a special command on this point; namely, that they should keep their tents and all around them pure and clean from filthiness. Deut. 23: 14: "The Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy camp be holy: that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee." The previous verses show that this means, not spiritual, but literal or physical, filth. The Lord does not love filth now any more than then. Christian families, then, have a double reason why they should be clean and pure in all their dwellings. A slack, untidy, filthy Christian! How would he appear amidst the purity of Heaven! I am glad to find the good old Bible in such harmony with the principles of the health reform.

Garments, especially those worn next the person, should often be aired and washed. The skin is constantly throwing off waste, impure matter, especially when sweating. This soon fills the clothes with impurity; hence they should be often purified. It is a good plan to change all our clothing every evening when we retire to rest, and lay out each article by itself where it may thoroughly air. This can be easily done, and should be. Then in the morning, air the garment we have slept in during the night. This I have done for years, and believe I derive much benefit from it. The whole person, but especially the feet, should often be washed in water to remove the impurities of the skin, open its pores, and thus allow the used-up matter of the body to be thrown off. Where this is not done, this impure matter goes to the lungs and other organs, and often produces disease and death. Hence, cleanliness of the person is an important thing to be attended to. Here, again, we are in harmony with the Bible. 2 Cor. 7: 9.—Health Reformer.

CURE FOR LOCKJAW.—A correspondent of the Scientific American recommends turpentine as a certain cure for lockjaw. He says: "Let any one who has an attack of lockjaw take a small quantity of turpentine, warm it and pour it on the wound, no matter where the wound is, or what its nature is, and relief will follow in less than one minute. Nothing better can be applied to a severe cut or bruise than cold turpentine; it will give certain relief almost instantly. Turpentine is also a sovereign remedy for croup. Saturate a piece of flannel with it and place it on the throat and chest, and in a very severe case three to five drops may be taken inwardly. Every family should have a bottle on hand." This remedy is simple, and can be easily tested.

WHY WALK IN DARKNESS?

"I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—JOHN 8: 12.

Why walk in darkness? Has the clear light vanished,
That gave us joy and day?
Has the great sun departed? Has sin banished
His life-begetting ray?

Light of the world! forever, ever shining,
There is no change in Thee;
True Light of life, all joy and health enshrining
Thou can'st not fade nor flee!

Thou hast arisen; but Thou descendest never—
To-day shines as the past;
All that Thou wast, Thou art, and shalt be ever—
Brightness from first to last.

Night visits not Thy sky, nor storm, nor sadness;
Day fills up all its blue,
Unfailing beauty and unfaltering gladness,
And love, forever new.

Why walk in darkness? Our true Light still shineth;
It is not night, but day.
All healing and all peace His light enshrineth,
Why shun His loving ray?

Are night and shadows better, truer, dearer,
Than day, and joy, and love?
Do tremblings and mistrustings bring us nearer
To the great God of love!

Light of the world! undimming and unsetting,
O, shine each mist away;
Banish the fear, the falsehood, and the fretting,
By an unchanging day! —H. Bonar.

"FOR THE TRUMPET SHALL SOUND."

It is written that "Jerome used to say that it seemed to him as if the trumpet of the last day was always sounding in his ear, saying, Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment. The generality, however, think but little of this awful and important period. A christian king of Hungary, being very sad and pensive, his brother was desirous of knowing the cause of his sadness. 'Oh, brother,' said the king, 'I have been a great sinner against God, and know not how to die, or how to appear before God in judgment.' His brother, making a jest of it, said,

'These are melancholy thoughts.'

The king made no reply, but it was the custom of the country, that if the executioner came and sounded a trumpet before any man's door, he was presently led to execution. The king, in the dead of night, sent the executioner to sound the trumpet before his brother's door; who, hearing it, and seeing the messenger of death, sprang into the king's presence, beseeching to know in what he had offended.

'Alas! brother,' said the king, 'you have never offended me. And is the sight of my executioner so dreadful, and shall not I, who have greatly offended, fear to be brought before the judgment-seat of Christ?'"

Beyond a doubt we are now living in very close proximity to the sounding of the "last trump," when "we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Those who confess and forsake their sins have this precious consolation—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." But those who confess not their sins, nor forsake them, will stand condemned in that dread hour; when neither tears nor remorse can atone for neglected opportunities, nor mercies forever lost. How much better to humble ourselves now, and obtain mercy ere the sudden blast of the last trump summon us as trembling criminals to the presence of earth's soon coming Judge and King.

Dear reader, I continually feel this to be truly a solemn period in the world's history; also a very encouraging one to those who are expecting the return of their Lord. O! how transcendent the consideration that probably I shall not have to fall a victim to the monster Death, but shall be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." How supremely glorious will that atom of time appear, when the languid, emaciated, death-stricken victim, instead of falling into the jaws of the insatiable monster, will at the fiat of our returning King be translated into the full-orbed bloom of eternal youth, and mingle perpetually with the just made perfect; "where no sighs shall mingle with the songs that warble from immortal tongues."

O, ye wasting ones, helpless, and languishing on your beds of affliction, be comforted. Portents of deliverance are signally manifesting themselves. Soon "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God."

"How shall our joy and wonder rise,
When our returning King
Shall bear us upward to the sky,
On love's triumphant wing!"

"How are the dead raised up?" Stupendous thought! The Almighty's promise is pledged to accomplish it, and what his mouth has uttered shall be done. Amen and amen! Finite minds can contemplate the incomprehensible reality alone must manifest the magnitude of the soon-to-be reality.

Not long since, as I stood looking at some anatomical subjects, intently gazing upon the skulls of several that were once living souls, I thought of these words of the poet—

"Behold this ruin, it is a skull!
Once of ethereal spirit full.
This narrow cell was life's retreat;
This space was thought's mysterious seat;
What beauteous visions filled this spot,
What dreams of pleasure long forgot;
Nor love, nor joy, nor hope, nor fear,
Have left one trace of record here.

Avails it whether bare or shod
These feet the path of duty trod?
If grandeur's guilty bribe they spurned,
And home to virtue's cot returned:
If from the bowers of ease they fled
To seek affliction's humble shed:
These feet with angels' wings shall vie,
And tread the palace of the sky."

Hear the word of the Lord:—"Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones: "Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live: and I will lay sinews upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall know that I am the Lord." Ez. 37: 5, 6. Truly the saints of this day are a highly exalted generation. Blessed consolation—to view with unlimited confidence the last sands of time fast ebbing out, and the coming consummation steadily approximating, that shall swallow up death in victory. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. This generation of saints, and this only, can exclaim by faith—"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

"Faith longing, shakes its eager wings,
And burns to meet thy flying throne;
We rise away from mortal things,
To attend thy shining chariot down.
Now let our cheerful eyes survey
The blazing earth and melting hills,
And smile to see the lightnings play
And flash along before thy wheels.
Oh! for a shout of holy joy
To join the trumpet's thundering sound;
The angel herald shakes the skies,
Awakes the graves, and tears the ground.
Ye slumbering saints, a heavenly host
Stand waiting at your gaping tombs;
Let every sacred sleeping dust
Leap into life, for Jesus comes."

Since the finishing of the sixth trumpet period, we have been in the days of the seventh trumpet. We are soon to witness the crowning consummation of faith, when every sleeping saint will "leap into life." Soon in the language of Heber it will be said—

"The trumpet! the trumpet! the dead have all heard;
Lo! the depths of the stone-covered charnel are stirred:
From the sea, from the earth, from the south, from the north,
All the vast generations of men are come forth."

Dear reader, be persuaded, if not prepared, to seek an interest in the merits of a Savior's precious blood, which alone can through faith and obedience prepare you to stand unmoved amid the dissolving elements of this doomed earth; and not like the trembling brother of the king quake with guilty dread.

The end of all things hasteth greatly. Soon the trumpet will sound. Let us all, in the language of the beloved John, "abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

Dear saints, many I shall see no more in this world. Let us pray for each other. Soon the trumpet will call us all to the marriage feast. Peace be with you all. Amen.

OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

"This is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our righteousness."

Paul reiterated the same fact, "Who is made unto us righteousness." This assurance should be the christian's sheet anchor, a daily solace, an abiding comfort, a helmet and shield against Satan's temptations. These temptations are often intruded upon the humble believer when in the valley of self-abasement, suffering from a deep realization of coming short in all things concerning his Master's service; and that "when he would do good, evil is present with him." So low sometimes he feels himself, and faith is weak, or rather not in exercise, that he fears he has never been a partaker of the gift of God. He looks into his own heart, but finds no consolation there; into the Word, but fears to apply the promises to his present desponding case; goes to the throne of grace, but there can only say, "God be merciful to me a sinner." Oh! if he could then look at once away from self, and respond to the fact so oft repeated in God's word, and fix his mind and heart on that all-supporting, all-sustaining and comforting assurance, and apply home as his own, "The Lord my righteousness," the dark clouds that hovered over him would disperse, doubts would flee away, and then sweet peace, God's peace, would flow like a river.

Our heavenly Father does not require righteousness of our own, or the righteousness of the law, as terms of acceptance with him; for his Son is made our righteousness, and plainly so revealed. He requires us to do his will with a single eye to his glory; to prove our love to him and our Savior, who said, when about to leave his disciples, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

I would illustrate these truths by an example and fact. A christian lady had a long time walked her round of duty, still constantly dwelling on her remissness, fearing to claim the promises, because her daily life looked to her so deficient, so far short of what she thought a child of God should attain, in all spiritual graces. From day to day she lived without that peace promised to the believer. The more she sought by good works to realize it, the more painful she felt its absence. At last it came suddenly, when in meditation one evening, "The Lord my righteousness," having read and pondered it times immemorial, still it never reached her heart, so that unwavering faith could apply it to her own case before.

Is not this a similar case to that of many of the children of God? None need to walk sorrowfully (is it not a sin to do so?) without their Savior's approving smile, if they will only take God at his word. There is so much declared therein to constrain us to look at Christ's righteousness, instead of seeking for our own, which in the light of God's word we cannot attain unto, that we are shut up to the comforting truth, "In thee have I righteousness and strength." M. C. ALLEN.

THE REVOLVING LIGHT.

I remember once when I lived in Fairhaven Mass., of going out on a dark, cloudy night, and looking down the harbor, discovered in the distance a very brilliant light, which seemed to be in motion. Having never seen anything like it before (though I had seen plenty of light-houses), I inquired what it was, and learned that it was a revolving light, placed there to guide the mariners who are constantly going out and coming into the harbor. There are many rocks and dangerous places along the coast, and vessels sometimes run on to them and are wrecked.

This light, like many others along the sea-coast, is erected in an elevated position, and so arranged as to be in motion, and can be seen at a long distance, and is well known by those who are accustomed to follow the seas. Many a sailor, no doubt, owes his life to the radiance reflected on the dark waters from this light. It has been also a token of joy to many a seafaring man, when returning home after a long and perilous voyage. What a thrill of delight must be feel as he sees the well-known signal which tells him he is almost home; a few more hours, and he will set his feet on shore, and grasp the hand of loved ones, who have wept and prayed for his return. Then what touching stories will he relate concerning his narrow escapes, and the great mercy of God in preserving and bringing him safely home. I always like to hear sailors relate their experience, and express their gratitude to God for his protecting power upon the mighty deep.

But this revolving light brings to my mind another light, to which I must briefly allude. It is the light of prophecy. This world is a dark and stormy place, like the great ocean. Christians are sometimes compared to mariners, and their journey to the New Jerusalem like a voyage over the great and perilous water. They are continually surrounded with dangers, but more especially as they near the heavenly harbor. Thus it reads on the chart—"In the last days perilous times shall come." But God has hung out a revolving light, which, to the believer, is a token of safety and of joy. Let Peter describe it: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn."

It seems to me that the great events transpiring among the nations in the East are making the light of prophecy shine with greater brilliancy than ever before. Every revolution sheds a bright lustre upon the dark waters, and tells us we are almost home. Those who take heed to this light are safe, while those who pay no attention to these things are in imminent danger, and will soon go down in the whirlpool of ruin.

Pilgrim, to you it says—Lift up your head and rejoice. You will soon anchor in the celestial port. Every revolution brings clearer evidence of our nearness to the heavenly shore. Only a little longer to keep watch, and then sing the song of deliverance. We are almost there. Glory to God! Soon we shall enter yon pearly portals, and grasp the hand of those we have loved. Look yonder! The city heaves in sight. See the glittering spires. Hark! hear the music of the angel throng. How melodious. How sweet the breezes from the immortal hills. Glory to God! Rejoice! rejoice! we are entering the harbor. All steady now. Every man on deck. Watch!

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

The coming of the Lord has been the hope of the church for many long years; but recently there seems to be a waking up among the children of men, and many are anxiously inquiring Where are we on the stream of time? And when they inquire of the D. D.'s who ought to know, how often they are told—"I don't know."

We were forcibly impressed the other night, while listening to a lecture from an eminent divine on the "hope of the christian." During his remarks he related a little incident, which will illustrate the mind of the church relative to the coming of the Lord. He said during his voyage to Europe he met with a circumstance which would illustrate the christian's hope. While attempting to enter the channel to stop at Liverpool, contrary winds took them, and drifted them back to sea. The captain finding it impossible to enter the channel there, concluded he would sail around the north of Ireland, and enter the channel at that end. There had been a severe storm for two or three days, and while near the coast, the captain was observed to go often to his cabin, and look at his chart; then go to the deck, and anxiously scan the horizon. His hurried manner and anxious looks attracted the attention of the speaker, and he followed the captain to the cabin, and inquired,

"Captain, where are we?"

The captain pointed to a particular point on the chart, and replied, "We ought to be there, but as we have been sailing without the sun for three days, I have had to make my calculations without any aid; and if we are not there, I don't know where we are; and it is almost night. O! if I could only see the sun for one moment, I should know just where we are; but if we are not within twenty miles from where we ought to be, God knows what will happen before morning; for it is dangerous sailing so near the shore."

They returned to the deck, and just as the sun was sinking behind the hills of old Ireland, the clouds lifted, the sun shone out bright and clear for a moment, then slowly disappeared from view. The captain caught his reckoning, hurried to the cabin, and looking at the chart said,

"We are there, I have made my calculations right. Thank God! we are safe."

The speaker while making the application, said this would be the state of the christian at death, the Sun of righteousness would shine upon him, and show him he had made his calculations right, if he was not sure of his hope here.

But we thought—this is the condition of the church at the present time. They know where they are on the stream of time. In times past, they made their calculations, and when asked Where are we? with their finger on the chart, they have answered "We ought to be there;" but recently the sure word of prophecy, which is a light that shineth in a dark place, has lifted the clouds which had settled over them, and a flood of light has illuminated the coast of time, and they can say with the captain, We are there. We are where we thought we were. Thank God, we are safe; in a little while we shall enter the port of eternal rest.

But how will it be with those who have not made any preparation for the future? It will not be because they have not been warned. The signs of the times, the state of the nations, the affairs in the political, moral, and scientific worlds, all bespeak in thunder tones some great change must soon take place; and in looking over the chart God has given us, we believe the time has come for his Son to take the kingdom and reign. And we are so glad that the long, dark night of weeping is almost over. The day cometh, and also the night, or day of joy and gladness for the christian, and a night of sorrow and mourning for the sinner. In a little while they will have to call for rocks and mountains to fall on them, to hide them from the face of Him who sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. "For the great day of his wrath has come, and who shall be able to stand?" None but those who have clean hands and pure hearts need expect to rejoice in that day.

May the dear Savior help us to live near him. Then we shall love his appearing, and we shall earnestly pray—"Thy kingdom come." My heart is getting fonder

"Of looking to the east,
To see the day-star bring
Some tidings of the waking,
The cloudless, pure day breaking;
My heart is yearning, yearning,
For the coming of the King."

CHURCH DIVISIONS.

THE CAUSES.

6. Doctrinal discussions are productive of many divisions. Truth is revolutionary. When it comes in conflict with error, it sometimes produces a mighty commotion. But such commotion is not always to be regarded as a calamity; and even if it were, the truth must not be held reponsible, but the error that antagonizes the truth and thus creates a clash. Truth has a right to exist and a right to talk; but this world is so sadly demoralized as to dispute that right at every turn. But truth must be defended though legions of opposers should enter their protest. When the pure word of God is preached, and the people "will not endure sound doctrine," but "turn away their ears from the truth," and with "itching ears" clamor for those who will "prophesy smooth things," who is to blame for the want of harmony? Not the gospel, nor those who preach it.

It is possible, however, to do a right thing in a wrong way. Even the truth can be presented with so much bitterness of spirit as to nullify all its good effects. It is not necessary to browbeat and unchristianize all who differ from us, in order to establish a belief in the correctness of our doctrines. Some people become so impressed with the importance of a given truth, that it comes to be regarded as the "alpha and omega" of the gospel. Every thing else dwindles into insignificance. Experimental and practical religion is treated as a second-rate affair. A "hobby" is thus created, and ridden with unbalanced zeal. The doctrinal point so earnestly pressed may be the exact truth; and yet it may be urged in such a way as to distract, divide, and damage the real people of God. This is the word for such "hobby-riders"—"These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

If correct doctrine can degenerate into cold abstraction and profitless discussion, how much more detrimental must be the proclamation of false doctrine! Says Paul to Timothy—"If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil-surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself." 1 Tim. 6: 3–5. Impressed with the same sense of danger, Peter sounds out a prophetic note of alarm—"There were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." 2 Pet. 2: 1, 2.

How sadly the gospel has been perverted during the rolling ages. What wretched theories have been adopted and saddled upon the blessed Bible for support. Small differences of opinion have grown into "strifes of words" and alienations of heart. Think of the hundreds of distinct religious sects that have resulted from doctrinal differences. Surely there must be a large amount of false doctrine interwoven with the multiplied creeds and constitutions of christendom. Church organizations have often grown out of "perverse disputings of men," and called by the names of the disputants, with scarcely a grain of truth involved in the issue. Church divisions have been caused by "damnable heresies," and they have been caused by petty differences that were too silly to deserve a moment's thought. Thousands of Christian churches are torn and bleeding to-day, as the result of leaving the vital issues of the gospel and running after some hair-splitting speculation. Professors of religion sometimes act very much as if their brains had departed with their grace. It is really too bad that religionists should be so so wedded to a theory—whether true or false—that they are willing to sacrifice the peace and prosperity of the church to their own conceit or stubbornness. Some have happily learned not to swallow down all the nonsensical and contradictory notions that assume to be the truth of God. Well would it be for many a bigoted advocate of some distracting, impracticable, church-dividing theory, to seek the baptism of the Holy Spirit (which some of them entirely repudiate), and go to work in good earnest for the salvation of sinners. And if churches, as a whole, would devote more of their time and energies to the business of leading perishing men to the cross of Christ, and less to theoretical abstractions and head-conversions, there would be a positive increase of spirituality, unity, and gospel power. O for less contention and more work!

Rochester, N. Y. A. A. PHELPS.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

The following letter was sent to an eminent preacher in San Francisco, by an intelligent Christian gentleman, who frequently addresses public audiences in behalf of Jesus and the Christian religion. It is published by request from a friend, to whom the writer showed it before it was sent to the party for whom it was intended.—EDITOR.

"MY DEAR BROTHER, in the faith of the Lord Jesus:—Will you permit me to express a few thoughts in connection with what you advanced in your official public discourse this morning. I desire to do so in all christian love and sincerity. To my mind, an overwhelming responsibility rests upon any human being, who assumes to be a teacher appointed of God, and bewilders the minds of believers by misrepresentation of the word of God, even though it be done in manifest ignorance of the truth contained in the sacred Scriptures. Ignorance, however sincere, cannot afford a sufficient excuse for the evil done. I have no doubt many professed infidels are very sincere; but will their sincerity be of any avail for them in the day of judgment? You will agree with me in saying No. Assertions made by any class of men have no weight with them in argument, on any philosophical subject; much less when these mere assertions and dogmas are stated with reference to the teaching of the Bible, unless supported by positive proof; for after all man's thoughts, opinions, and teachings, the Bible, and the Bible ONLY must be the standard and guide for God's children. In this, I am sure you will also agree with me; and this test must apply to professed ministers, as well as to more private individuals, for no minister has any right to assume that any assertion, or mere dogma, will be received by a Bible-reading public, unless proof, clear and conclusive, is given to show that the same is supported by the word of God. For instance, we read in plain English, that every one can understand, "The wages of sin is death"—"the second death." If a minister, in his public capacity, says this does not mean death, but eternal life in suffering, my denial of such an assertion is certainly, to say the least, of equal importance to the assumption. I read also in equally plain English, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." This, I know, does not refer to the death consequent on Adam's sin; for all along, believers, as well as unbelievers, do die, and have died since the fall; but it must refer to "the second death," in consequence of man's refusal of the offer of eternal life, through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ ONLY.

I have thus expressed my thoughts, because I can bear witness that in this day of much misrepresentation of God's word, that much evil has been done to the minds of christians, especially babes in Christ, who have not time, or may not be able even to read the Bible for themselves. I could name some in your congregation. They, therefore, cannot "search the Scriptures," and be assured that in them is eternal life, because they testify of Christ. When the plain word of God is presented to them in clear and conclusive expressions, they meet you saying, "Well, it seems all plain to me as I read it in the Bible, but my minister says it means quite the opposite. I read in the Bible that 'the wages of sin is death,' but my minister tells me it is not death, because the whole man, soul and body, cannot die, but will live for ever; have 'everlasting life,' but it will be everlasting life in torture and suffering. I read, 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die'; but say they, he contradicts the word, and says 'it cannot die.' Therefore, if I believe what my minister says, I cannot believe God in the Bible;" and sadly, alas! do some place more dependence on what their ministers say, than on what they read in the sacred Scriptures. They admit it reads different in the Bible from what he says; but as he has been to college, and is very learned, he must be right. Thus the minds of many of God's children are bewildered and kept in darkness as to the truth; when, had they not been brought under such influences, but been left to themselves in their simplicity and childlike, teachable spirit, they would have read the Bible for themselves, and not have suffered such distress of mind, and had their simple faith in God's own word weakened and almost destroyed.

Public ministers in this city, who are in the habit of making assertions unsustained by the word of God; priding themselves on their superior knowledge; denouncing good, truthful, honest, noble-minded men, such as Elder Grant, who dares to be singular for the sake of truth; should be willing to meet him in public discussion, taking the Bible only for reference and proof, the people being judges. I ask, in all honesty and candor, if these learned divines (as they are called) had the honor of God and the spiritual welfare of their hearers at heart, really believed Elder Grant was preaching error, would it not be their plain duty to meet him publicly, and oppose his supposed wrong teaching? He has again and again offered to meet any minister for discussion, and not one has the boldness and honesty to meet him Bible in hand. If he is right, you who oppose are wrong, and contrariwise. Does it not look like fear and cowardice, unmanly in the extreme, condemning him from your pulpits, and afraid to meet him face to face? Your people know this, and you are suffering in their estimation. If Elder Grant is preaching error, by all means, for Christ's sake, let some of you manifest confidence in God, and come to the rescue. Many of your members in the various gatherings believe he is preaching truth. Some of your best-read Bible members either have, or are about to leave your associations. Beware, lest God should remove his lampstand from your midst.

My dear brother, the time is past for men who obtain a gentlemanly support by the profession of preaching (and preaching of error), to keep the minds of Bible-reading christians in continued darkness and bewilderment of the blessed truth of God. Thanks be to God for it. Amen and amen. Men with assumed authority, and imaginary superior learning, can no more prevent the spread of the truth of God, than they can stop the ebb and flow of the tide of the mighty ocean. It is vain to attempt it. God's children, and the more intelligent of them, are beginning to see through the flimsy vail of pretense. For myself, I do honor a true teacher sent from God; let him be called by whatever name, or sect, or party, he may choose, I pray God to bless, prosper, and sustain him. He will and must have his reward, for the true "laborer is worthy of his hire," but not in looking at things seen and temporal. And if preachers seek for publicity, large congregations, praise from men; holding back the truth, not daring to be singular for the truth's sake; then they have their reward, in many instances in enormous salaries, praise from men, even men of the world; flattery and applause; but "the Lord knoweth them that are his."

God is my witness, I have only the glory of God in view in what I say. I do not seek the applause or approval of men; neither do I fear man's condemnation. I desire to walk with Christ above the worthless din of human applause, or condemnation. The more professed ministers seek to silence men taught of God, however humble their condition, the more will they seek to spread the truth of God, though it may not be behind a velvet cushion, in a costly edifice; for with such furniture and in such buildings did not the apostles sound forth the pure word of God.

I did not intend, when I commenced to address you, more than to allude to several palpable contradictions in your discourse this morning. I will briefly state them, at least some of them, and conclude. You made several assertions, but you did not even attempt to prove them from the word of God. You said the soul of man could not die, but would live for ever—have eternal life, but that life would be everlasting suffering; representing that God, by his Spirit, did not know what he said, or did not mean what he said. You endeavored to make the audience believe that death, the "second death," was life, and life in suffering; and, by your philosophic reasoning, that the plain, simple truths of the Bible were calculated to mislead the minds of the simple and unlearned; and that it could not be depended upon, as their guide to immortality; but that vain philosophers must construe the Bible for them. Why not tell your audience that eternal life "does not mean eternal life?" You have as much authority to do so, as to say death is not death. The devil said, "Ye shall not surely die." May God preserve his own dear children from believing the father of lies.

You said something about infinite atonement demanding infinite punishment. My dear brother, can you not see that if your doctrine, or assertions, are true, that the penalty due to sin was not death, but eternal torture? then you make the sacrificial death of Christ of no avail, because he did not suffer and is not suffering eternal agony and torture. He rose from the dead, according to the Scriptures, ascended up to heaven, as our great High Priest, and will come again (as I hope soon) to take his blood-bought ones to be with him where he is. The Bible says he fulfilled the law; and its full penalty was death. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Permit me to say, do not be the cause of driving some of your most intelligent, Bible-reading members and hearers away from you, by your persistence in opposing truths which they really believe to be contained in the Bible.

But farther. After saying in your sermon that the soul could not die, you gave out a hymn to be sung, in which was the following:

"Oh Thou that hearest the prayer of faith,
Wilt thou not save a soul from death?"

Also,

"Then save me from eternal death."

PRAY IN FAITH to receive that which you say cannot be! My dear brother, is this consistent? The pagan philosophers, who first taught the natural immortality of all men, are more consistent. Pray do look at this. Ministers, who profess to be called of God to preach the word, ought to be consistent, or the world and demons will laugh at them. You may tell me you have been regularly appointed by men of God to preach, and that you have the exclusive right of saying what you please from your desk. Granted; but if you preach error, will not Bible-reading christians detect it? Will your exercising your right prevent worldly, intelligent men from sneering and becoming increasingly infidel?

Let me ask, is not Elder Grant a regular appointed minister, as well as those who call themselves "Rev." and "Right Rev.," "D. D.," and such like unscriptural terms? Why should he not be entitled to respect and credit as yourselves? Why seek to dishonor and anathematize him from your desks, and in private circles; and yet not one of you consent to meet him in public discussion? God is approving of his teaching, and blessing his labors. A work of God has begun, which I hope will lead to the drawing aside of the thick vail which has so long darkened the minds of many of his dear children. I see many of your hearers, and some of them, I know, are the most intelligent, Bible-reading christians, constantly present to hear Bro. Grant; and I KNOW that many of them have been brought to see and believe the truth preached by him. Why do you not go to hear him, and, if he preaches contrary to the word of God, point it out to him? He is a gentleman, as well as a christian, and will listen with the patience of a little child. It is folly to set yourselves (as ministers) in direct opposition to the truth, taught by him. God is manifestly owning it, and he will own it. Let me say to you, the proclamation of these important truths will not cease when Bro. Grant leaves the city. Be willing, my dear brother, to be used of God for dispelling from the minds of believers the great darkness they have long suffered from the evil effects of past wrong teaching. May God bless you, honor you, and help you to proclaim all the truth of God, giving you many seals to your ministry. "He that confesseth me before men, him will I also confess before my Father which is in heaven."

Your sincere friend, and brother in Christ our Life, SAM'L WALKER.

WALK WITH JESUS.

Will you walk this day with Jesus? He invites you to come and take, as it were, the light end of his easy yoke, and walk with him in the way of peace. There may be something that hinders you, or something for you to lay aside before you can walk with Jesus. Will you "lay aside every weight," give up self-will, self-righteousness, and self indulgence? You may well count all these things as loss and dross, when compared with the things that "eye hath not seen," which are prepared for those who walk with Him.

Two cannot well walk together, "except they be agreed," and the way to agree with Jesus is to obey him. Is not this easy? And will you not adventure to try it for one day? If you will but try this blessed way for one day, methinks you will be so delighted, that you will never choose to return to the way of death again. Do you say you would walk with him if you could see him? Ah! that is what multitudes have said. But do you not consider that you might (if he were present) walk with him by sight, and yet not walk with him at all, in the sense and meaning here presented? Multitudes thronged him, and pressed upon him, and followed him, when he was on earth, yet very few of them walked with him, with his yoke and their own cross upon them.

We must walk by faith, not by sight. We must just believe and obey him. Perhaps you will be required to remain just where you are, and "abide in your calling" for the present; but if so, you can walk with Jesus there. Be persuaded to do this, for if you walk with him here in this "low estate" you will walk with him in glory when he comes to be admired by all his waiting people.

Webster, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

HONEST CONFESSIONS.

Many assert that they can prove the immortality of the soul by reason and philosophy. But some of the ablest advocates of that doctrine have honestly confessed that this is not true. Richard Watson, the eminent Methodist commentator, makes this admission:

"There is no indubitable declaration of man's immortality, nor any facts and principles so obvious as to enable us confidently to infer it. All observation lies directly against the doctrine of the immortality of man."—Theological Institutes, Vol. 1, p. 11.

Dr. Taylor also says: "Whatever the metaphysical nature, essence, or substance of the soul may be, which is altogether unknown to us, all arguments for the natural immortality of the soul, taken from the nature of its substance or essence, are manifestly vain; we can never prove that the soul of man is of such a nature that it can and must exist and live, think and act, separate from, and independent of, the body; all our present experience shows the contrary." Quoted in Balfour's Essays, Es. 1, p. 114.

These are candid confessions on this point, upon which modern advocates of man's natural immortality are so very confident.

C. H. SWEET.

ADVERSITY or affliction is often sent to bring out the different shades in our natures. While some are purified by looking at it as sent for their good, others go with bowed heads, and fail to see the outstretched hand to guide them through.

— The love of Christ is stronger than death, sweeter than life, better than the world; and every new sense of Christ's love adds new degrees to ours.

COMING EVENTS.

"Where are we in the history of the world? what must we expect before the coming of Christ, and what will take place at his coming, and after he comes?" Answers to these questions involve important events, and deserve the candid attention of all who are interested in the future history of this planet.

1. Where are we in the history of this world?" That we are near the end of the present dispensation, we see no reason to doubt, neither have we any doubts on this point. We think the fulfillment of the prophecies of Daniel and John demonstrate that the end of the present dispensation is at hand; and that soon Christ will appear personally, "in the clouds of heaven," to raise from the dead all the sleeping saints, and change them and all the righteous living from mortality to immortality; from corruption to incorruption. We do not propose to give the evidence now that compels us to believe Christ will soon appear in all his glory; but to inquire,

2. What must we expect before his coming? What changes, if any, may we look for before the great day of the Lord opens upon an astonished world? Among other things, we may look for two systems of union; one with Christ and a pure christianity for a standard; the other with the devil, spiritualism, and all counterfeit christianity combined against Christ and his followers. The friends of these two systems of union are already rallying their forces for the battle of Armageddon. They may not be aware of the approaching conflict; but unmistakable signs proclaim it at hand. In the first union we may expect to see all the true lovers of Jesus, from every denomination. The bond of union will be Christ, instead of some human creed, or set of theological dogmas, about which good men honestly differ. The time has come when sectarian walls should no longer separate the sincere disciples of Jesus, or keep them from being united in christian love and communion. This is deeply felt by most of the faithful followers of the Savior in all parts of the world, and many devoted ministers of Christ, on both continents, are profoundly impressed with the importance of such a union; while others yet adhere tenaciously to their sectarian names and party policy, thus working against the best interests of christianity, and the prayer of Christ, when he prayed, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." John 17: 21. In this union will be found those who love the appearing of Jesus, without regard to any particular sectarian body with which they may have been previously connected. Of the company it may be said: "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all." Col. 3: 11. This will not be known as a Baptist, Methodist, Adventist, Presbyterian, Congregational, or Episcopalian union, but as a CHRISTIAN UNION, with CHRIST in the centre. Dear reader, are you ready for such a union?

We are down in the period described by Paul in 2 Tim. 3: 1–5, where he says:—"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away."

We most firmly believe we have entered the period when this Scripture is having its accomplishment, and that the time has come to "turn away" from such things. But are those who "turn away" from the corruptions of Protestantism to remain without association? Nay, verily; but they should be "one," as Jesus and his Father are one, that they may be ready for "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Such a union strikes at the very root of all sectarian interests, parties and creeds.

We have had this union principle most beautifully exemplified in our California meetings. The union around Christ is what has given such great power to this work, and silenced the infidel batteries aimed against Christianity. While Roman Catholics unite on a creed, all Christians should unite around CHRIST. No one can truly love Christ without the aid of the Holy Spirit; and every one who has in him the Spirit of God sufficient to cause him to love Jesus, belongs to the heavenly family. This love, and this alone, is the bond of union. Whoever loves Jesus, is the brother of every other one who loves him. Whenever we attempt to form a union around some human creed, we cut off every christian who cannot subscribe to it; and thus build up a sectarian wall, and wound and mangle the body of Christ. Brethren and sisters, let us do it no more. We are too near the judgment to be bathing in such muddy waters. We need washing in a stream more pure than that which flows from any sectarian fountain.

We are rejoiced to know that the whole Protestant world is stirred on this subject. For this reason arrangements were made to hold a World's Christian Convention last autumn in New York; but it was postponed on account of the war in Europe. Great and good men are awake to this subject. Let us, who see the signs of the times so clearly, be among the foremost in leading the way for a grand union with all the true friends of Jesus. We must not expect them at first to see as we do in every particular; but if we carry more light, and a purer religion, we shall exert a hallowed influence upon them, and find a warm place in their christian sympathies. One fact should be kept in mind, and that is, nearly all those who truly love Jesus, are satisfied that he is coming soon, though they may not have heard a single sermon on the subject. The Spirit of God is impressing this grand truth upon their minds. We may expect that this feeling will become more intense, and increase the bond of union as we approach the glorious event.

We expect to see a struggle between pure Christianity and a degenerate Protestantism, like that which existed between Protestantism and Catholicism in the days of Luther. Protestantism, as a system, has fallen so low, and become so corrupted by the spirit of the world, that the humble followers of Jesus must "turn away." There is but little or no hope that the mass of popular professors and ministers will ever consent to walk in the highway of holiness, so as to be ready for Christ's coming; but, on the contrary, will stand opposed to those who are sanctified to the Lord, and waiting for his coming. On this account they are called on to "turn away" from such, and be clothed in the pure bridal robes of Christ's righteousness; ready and longing for his coming. Such should unite together, and be one in the Lord. Such a union must necessarily sunder some strong sectarian ties; but, as in breaking off some bad habit, the results will be blessed. When once out of sectarian bondage, no one wishes to return. We confess a great dislike to everything that tends in that direction.

In order to forward this true christian union, we would recommend those who truly love Jesus in any place, to come together in a union prayer and conference meeting, and sanctify themselves wholly to the Lord, asking him to make them one in Christ, and help them to keep "unspotted from the world." Such a prayer meeting should be composed of all the real christians from every denomination; with no test of fellowship but a pure christian character.

An antagonistic to this true christian union, we expect to see Satan rallying every other element to oppose or break up such a union. We believe his chief emissaries and supporters are now in the ranks of spiritualism. This is his crowning attack upon christianity and the followers of the blessed Savior. The secret of his success consists in the fact that he has persuaded the most of the human race to believe his lie to our first parents, when he taught them the immortality of the soul; so that they are well prepared to go farther and believe that after death these souls can return and communicate intelligence. Believing this, they are inclined to listen to their teaching, which, if followed, is sure to lead them away from Christ, God and the Bible. We believe the union of the antichristian elements will continue to increase in strength till the Deliverer comes. On one side will be Christ and those who will be ready and waiting to receive him at his coming; and on the side all who are his enemies, in union with "the anti-Christ."

Between now and the coming of Jesus, we expect to see the people on this planet entering one of these two unions. In which are we to-day? Have we chosen our final position? Are we wholly united to Christ? is he our centre; our all in all? Can we unite with every one who truly loves our Redeemer?

MEETINGS IN CALIFORNIA.

The truth and light are still spreading rapidly in California. We are now (March 22nd) at Vallejo, about twenty-five miles from San Francisco, holding meetings in the Presbyterian meeting-house, where the Lord is doing a glorious work. Some twenty or more have been converted and others have been reclaimed from a backslidden state. Some strong men, who have been notoriously wicked, are now very bright converts. Two were baptized last Sabbath in the bay, and others are waiting for the next opportunity. Bro. N. B. Klink, the pastor of the church, is a true man. He has heartily indorsed our preaching on the speedy and personal coming of Christ to set up his kingdom on the earth. Bro. K., like Bro. Bailey in San Francisco, appears to be free from sectarianism, willing the Lord should work by any one, and is ready to unite in hearty co-operation. Bro. Rich, the Methodist minister, also unites with us, and renders efficient aid. Saints are rejoicing, and sinners are trembling. We are to remain here over the coming Sabbath, and then return to San Francisco to preach next Monday evening. Last Monday evening (March 20th) in the Music Hall, San Francisco, we continued our review of Dr. Scott's sermons in favor of the eternal misery of the wicked. A large and very attentive audience was present. At the close of the sermon, a theological student, and some others, asked questions for three quarters of an hour, and thus increased the interest in the subjects examined. The people now wonder how the simple truth of the Bible could have been kept out of sight so long. They find their infidelity has been caused by the false teaching of these last days. Had they heard the pure word of God, instead of human opinions and fables, they would have been christians long ago.

Yesterday a Baptist minister in San Francisco called on us, who is fully satisfied that we are preaching the truth, and is ready to go forth, bearing reproach for Jesus' sake, and declare the whole counsel of God. He has been pastor of one of the city churches for some five years. His former friends in the ministry have now turned against him, and he is like one turned out of house and home into the streets. He is a true man. His address is "Thomas Howell, Oak street, off Taylor, near Geary, San Francisco, Cal." We commend him to those on the Pacific coast, who wish to hear the "gospel of the kingdom." He needs and deserves your sympathies. He has made a noble sacrifice for Christ and his word. We know some six or seven others in San Francisco, who are almost or altogether persuaded to go forth and proclaim the glad tidings to a sleeping world and church. Let us keep praying that the Lord will send forth more laborers into the vineyard.

We learned yesterday that some twelve or fifteen members of one of the churches, have been informed by their pastor, that they must renounce their belief in what we have preached, or they will be subject to church discipline. We were informed that they stand ready to be excommunicated, rather than to renounce the truth they have received during the past few weeks. Their eyes are now opened to see the wonderful simplicity and harmony of the Bible, as never seen by them before. There are hundreds in the city, who have received the truth as it has been presented. When some of the ministers talk about rooting out of the minds of the people what they have lately seen in the sacred Scriptures, we would say to them, they will find they have undertaken a herculean task, over which they might spend a life-time, and at its close find that their strong efforts had only served to show the weakness of their position, while supporting the heathen fables which Satan has been grafting into sectarian creeds, for the purpose of destroying confidence in the sacred Scriptures. Thank the Lord, that so many have had their eyes opened to see the wide difference between human opinions and the word of the Lord. While the former is full of fog and mysticism, the latter is all sunny simplicity, perfectly adapted to the comprehension of the common people.

INFIDEL TESTIMONY.—A few days since, we met a prominent infidel on Montgomery Street, in San Francisco, with whom we had before conversed on the subject of the Christian religion. We found him a very candid inquirer after truth, and much interested in our meetings. He remarked that he was connected with an association of infidels, who attended the different meetings in the city, and then met together to compare notes of what they had heard from the various preachers. "And," said he, "we have about come to the conclusion that you are preaching the truth. It is so full of common sense, we are compelled to admit it." He then said the preaching of the doctrine of eternal misery had led him to infidelity. "But," said he, "my infidelity is now about all gone." We find a large proportion of the infidels have been made such by the fabled theology taught at the present day.

CALIFORNIA SCENERY.—At this time (March 22d), the grass, gardens, flowers, trees, and all nature, resemble New England about the first of June. Peach trees have been in blossom two weeks; and flowers in the door-yards are charmingly beautiful, and fill the air with their delicious odor. They grow very luxuriantly, and need no shelter during the winter. Geraniums, petunias, Egyptian lillies, roses, and other flowers, show their smiling faces all the year round. One might easily imagine himself on the borders of paradise, if, on some cold New England winter day, he could step from Boston into some of the beautiful gardens in San Francisco.

But what is this compared to the real paradise on the new earth, which the saints are to possess forever and ever? By the grace of God, let us all be there. The day is at hand when we shall possess our happy Eden home, where sorrow will be forever unknown, and where sweet songs of praise shall come floating on the balmy breeze, perfumed by the enchanting odor of beautiful flowers in bewitching bloom, where delicious fruits that charm the eye, and enrapture the perfected taste of the redeemed; where beauty, grandeur, sublimity and glory shall commingle in unending harmony, to enrapture the dear ones who gave their hearts and lives to the Lamb of God. There the weary pilgrims can sing, "Sweet home," and realize its meaning.

WHO SHOULD COME TO CALIFORNIA.—We have received several inquiries from persons who wish to come to California, thinking to better their condition. So far as climate and soil are concerned, we should prefer California to any other country we have seen. Here the flowers in the open air are in perpetual bloom, and fresh vegetables are constantly in the markets. So far as we are personally concerned, we should be pleased to make our home in this beautiful land of flowers and fruits; but it is a very poor place for certain classes. The following from "Carter's Real Estate Circular" puts the matter in its true light:—

"There may be in the United States a worse place for clerks, salesmen and professional men generally, than California, but few people here believe there is. If you want to come and spend your limited means walking around in idleness, for months, with the probability that you will have to call on your friends to send you money to take you home again—cursing the country as you go—this is the place for you, and you can make all haste to emigrate; but if you are not anxious to experience disappointment and disgust, stay where you are. This city and coast are overstocked with the classes above alluded to, who can find nothing better to do by day than walking about, frequently with empty stomachs, and no better place to sleep by night than that which a cheap lodging house or charity affords. California wants only farmers, shepherds, laborers, blacksmiths, miners, wood-choppers, and working American girls. It would take a hydraulic press to squeeze you in here. Stay at home."

BIBLE NECROLOGY.

After the translation of Enoch, we find further records of death, as follows:—"And all the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years, and he died." Gen. 5: 27. "And all the days of Lamech were seven hundred seventy and seven years, and he died." Gen. 5: 31. These are all the Bible records of death before the flood, when "all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died; . . . and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark." Gen. 7: 22, 23. The first death mentioned after the flood was that of Noah, in Gen. 9: 29, as follows: "And all the days of Noah were nine hundred and fifty years, and he died." Noah was the one who built the ark, the one with whom the Lord conversed; the one who offered sacrifices after he came out of the ark, the real, intelligent man; and this is the one who lived nine hundred and fifty years and died. Should we be speaking in harmony with the Bible if we should say Noah never died?

The next deaths are recorded in Gen. 11: 28, 32. "And Haran died before his father Terah, in the land of his nativity." "And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years; and Terah died in Haran." Next we come to the destruction of the Sodomites by fire and brimstone, as recorded in Gen. 19: 24–25. Jesus says: "The same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." Luke 17: 29. Would it not be doing violence to the Scriptures to say that the fire and brimstone did not destroy the intelligent, accountable sinful men, but only the bodies in which they lived?

The next recorded death is that of Sarah, Abraham's wife, as follows: "And Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty years old; these were the years of the life of Sarah. And Sarah died in Kir-jath-arba; the same is Hebron, in the land of Canaan. And Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her." "And after this, Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah." Gen. 23: 1–2, 19. The one he buried was the one that died: and that was Sarah, his wife. We come next to the death of Abraham, the father of the faithful. The record reads: "And these are the days of the years of Abraham's life which he lived, an hundred threescore and fifteen years. Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years; and was gathered to his people. And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field . . . which Abraham purchased of the sons of Heth; there was Abraham buried, and Sarah his wife." Gen. 25: 7–10. The term "gave up the ghost" means to "expire," "to breathe out," "to breathe one's last." Abraham died, and his sons buried him in the cave of Machpelah. Was Abraham alive when the funeral and burial were completed?

It is sometimes said that the expressions, "gathered to his people," or to his "fathers," indicate that the "real man" was with "his people" in heaven, or in some other place where he was conscious. A very slight examination of the Bible will show that such a position is unscriptural. When they wished to speak of a man as being dead, they would say, he sleeps "with his fathers"; and after the funeral, he is "buried with his fathers." Before the death of Abraham, the Lord said to him, "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age." The pronoun "thou" stands for Abraham, the intelligent man, whom the Lord addressed, and with whom he made the covenant; the same one who was to "be buried in a good old age." And when thus buried, the fact was expressed by saying he was "gathered to his people," or, he sleeps "with his fathers."

Let us notice a few other similar examples. "Now the days of David drew nigh that he should die; and he charged Solomon, his son, saying, I go the way of all the earth." "So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." 1 Kings 2: 1–2, 10. "For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption." Acts 13: 36. "And Solomon slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father; and Rehoboam, his son, reigned in his stead." 2 Chron. 9: 31. "And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David. . . . And Abijam his son reigned in his stead." 1 Kings 14: 31. "And Abijam slept with his fathers; and they buried him in the city of David; and Asa, his son, reigned in his stead." 1 Kings 15: 8. "And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father; and Jehoshaphat, his son, reigned in his stead." 1 Kings 15: 24. "Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David." 2 Chron. 21: 1. "And Manasseh slept with his fathers, and was buried in the garden of his own house, in the garden of Uzza." 2 Kings 21: 18.

Asa not only "SLEPT with his fathers," but "was BURIED with his fathers;" then it follows that "his fathers" were both "asleep" and "buried." The same is said of others. How can such plain statements be made to teach that the fathers were neither "asleep" nor "buried," but still alive in paradise? "Manasseh slept with his fathers" as truly as any of the other kings or patriarchs; but he "was buried in the garden of his own house, in the garden of Uzza." Did all the fathers sleep in that particular garden? Certainly not. Whoever was in the grave in any place, whether saint or sinner, was said to be asleep "with his fathers." Let it be observed that it is always said they died or fell asleep before they were gathered to their fathers; and they are never said to be awake and conscious, while in that condition.

Said Paul, "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep." 1 Thess. 4: 15. Then it follows that whatever be their location, they "are asleep." Thus we see how beautifully the Scriptures harmonize, when we take out the lie of Satan—"Ye shall not surely die."

SOUTHERN NOTES.—No. 9.

March 8th. Went with Bro. Bowman to the Wesley church, a large meeting-house, where at night I met the largest congregation I have had since I came to South Carolina, and had a free time in preaching to a solemn congregation on the speedy close of human probation as indicated by the fulfillment of prophecy. Doctor Bowman followed me in a touching exhortation, when several came to the altar of prayer, when the Baptist minister, who had listened to the sermon with the deepest attention, led in prayer.

Thursday night, March 9th, was a rainy, dark night, which kept many away from church, but notwithstanding the forbidding character of the weather, Wesley church contained a fair congregation, to which I preached on the nearness of the judgment day, producing deep solemnity. After my sermon, Bro. Bowman followed with a strong sanction of my position; and, in response to his request, several came forward for prayers. Several prominent citizens, who have not been to meeting for years, are now attending, and are deeply interested. A physician has just sent a note to Dr. Bowman for some of my books to read, thus proving his interest after listening.

March 10th, A. M., I preached at the Bethel church on the resurrection and its absolute importance, having a congregation with ears and hearts wide open to receive the truth of God. After my sermon, Dr. Bowman made a powerful speech, repudiating immortal-soulism in the strongest terms, basing our only chance of a future life upon the resurrection of the physical man, cutting his way through modern theology with a masterly hand, like a giant with a two-edged sword. I thought I had preached a good sermon for me, but the Dr. went so far ahead of me, and left me so far in the shade, that I did not know for a time as I should ever dare to preach in his presence again; and I sat enveloped in wonder that God had so mysteriously raised up a giant in the cause in S. C., so thoroughly conversant with the truth, so strongly in love with it, having no Ashdod in his speech, and withal so bold in its promulgation; and if this was a sample of his preaching, it is not surprising that all the thinking men in this region, both in and out of his churches, are ceasing their opposition, and beginning to sympathize with these great truths, and many already fully endorse them. We took dinner with Dr. Parrett, a Methodist physician, who, together with Dr. Lucas, another Methodist physician, are rejoicing in the new light they have received under Dr. Bowman's preaching.

On the evening of the same day, I preached again at the Wesley meeting-house to a large and attentive congregation on the subject of the Lord's coming—its nature, necessity, and nearness. Had almost breathless attention to the close, when Dr. Bowman followed with an exhortation, and invited them forward for prayers, and our hearts were rejoiced to see twelve come forward bathed in tears, while many wept in the congregation. Our season of prayer was an affecting time. Bro. Bowman thinks we should witness a gracious and extensive revival here, were it not for these considerations: (1) We are just entering the busiest season of the entire year for planters, who make up the congregation mainly; (2), we are just passing into the dark evenings, which is a serious consideration in this locality in view of the roads and distance to be traveled; and (3), I must leave soon.

March 11th found me much fatigued, having preached twice yesterday; and as I must preach twice to-morrow, Bro. Bowman went alone to the Philadelphia church, and preached on the resurrection. He had a long conversation with Professor Wright, formerly from Trinity College, but now Principal of a High School about fifteen miles away, whose mind is being much exercised of late on these new truths, wishing to obtain all our able publications on these themes. He felt much averse to Dr. Bowman, when arraigned before the Conference, but having had his attention called to the question by that circumstance, and feeling now dissatisfied with modern theology, and strongly inclined to our views, he wishes to probe the matter to the bottom. Thought he should come fifteen miles next Sunday to hear me. Perhaps his mind would never have been exercised on the point if they had not arraigned Dr. Bowman. Bro. Bowman intends to send some of our works to some of the D.D.'s in the South, and insist on an examination. Says he would spend hundreds of dollars in scattering these publications, if he were in as good circumstances pecuniarily as he once was. He is anxious to have the truth spread in S. C.

Sunday, March 12th, preached to over one thousand people. In the forenoon I had a free time in speaking on the doom of the wicked for one hour and forty-five minutes in Wesley church. Breathless attention from the immense crowd. The Lord helped me greatly. Then Dr. Bowman got up and held the people spell-bound for a long time, sweeping the theory of endless misery into oblivion with such a masterly hand, that it made my own sermon look small, and enveloped me with amazement, and led me to ask, Where am I? and who is talking the truth in such strong terms, and defending it with such irresistible proofs? Can it be that I am in South Carolina? and am I listening to a Methodist divine? Surely there is not a cowardly hair in his head, and he will not suppress the truth of God to please men.

Sunday afternoon I preached at the Hebron meeting-house, which was packed full to overflowing inside, and surrounded by many on the outside. Preached upon the coming of the Lord and its associated events, being followed by Bro. Bowman. To-day was a day of seed-sowing. Many have already been enlightened under Bro. Bowman's preaching. The darkness is passing, and the light of truth is shining.

In this part of South Carolina we have many reading, reasoning men, who are hospitable and true. I am pleased with the country and the climate so far as I have seen. The city of Charleston ought to have the light. Doctor Bowman promises if I will go there next fall, in Sept. or Oct., he will go with me. Nothing short of a six weeks' siege ought to be thought of. So with Atlanta, the capital of Georgia, and also Savannah, Ga., the two last named cities containing thirty-five thousand inhabitants each. Then in the winter New Orleans should be visited. My plan would be something like this: begin as soon as next Sept., select such men as Bro. Grant, Couch and Mathewson (or myself as a last resort, if you cannot get some one else to accept), let one begin at Atlanta, one at Savannah, and one at Charleston, at the same time, and each one continue three weeks; then change places, and let a new man continue three weeks longer in each place. It costs but five dollars to go from Atlanta to Savannah, and five from Savannah to Charleston. Then let one man remain through the winter in this region, and the other two go on to New Orleans, if thought best, or hold themselves in readiness to enter the doors that would certainly open for them in every direction. But this will cost money. Not less than five thousand dollars should be raised for this purpose. I speak thus early to set you to thinking. Shall we raise the cry all through the South—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh"?

During my stay in the South, I have been treated with true courtesy by ministers and people, notwithstanding the fact that I am a northern man, and consequently subject to constant suspicion; for the South has been subjected to a flood of northerners in every form, who have proved treacherous, and turned out to be enemies in disguise. I do not blame them for feeling suspicious, in view of their experience. I have been welcomed to ten meeting-houses, in which I have preached, and found as many preachers who have kindly fraternized with me; besides having several pulpits offered me that I could not occupy. And wherever I have been, I have warm invitations to return. I have seen sinners coming to Christ, backsliders returning, professors waking up, and ministers and people eagerly inquiring after light. My mission ends with a visit to South Carolina, where I have enjoyed myself greatly in the society of Dr. Bowman, who has opened to me the doors of the meeting-houses under his supervision, only a part of which I could enter for want of time. I am now to bid farewell to the South, at least for the present; but I do it with reluctance. The light of revelation is beginning to shine on the southern field, and the mists of tradition beginning to disperse. Steam power brought me through to Chicago in time to hear Bro. Ramsay preach Sunday morning, March 19th, and in the evening I occupied the desk.

From here I design to go to the conference at Amboy, Ill., and from thence home to Brodhead, Wis.

I find a great change in the climate; after having spent six weeks among the peach blossoms of the South, I am again chilled with cold weather. Though I am out of the South, the South is not all out of me yet; but I have a lively reminiscence of their cheerful "lightwood fires," their delicious sweet potatoes, and the kindness of numerous friends. I found more of the original southern kindness in S. C. than I had in other localities, though I was treated well every where. The South contains many noble people, though now enveloped in poverty, who ought to hear the truth, and who would receive it gladly. We ought to do mission work in that field. People will hear and believe, if the right kind of men are sent among them. I regard it decidedly a field for missionary labor, if cautious men are sent. I apprehend no difficulty from the "K. K. K." in that case.

I regretted much that I could not have remained several weeks longer. I have already scattered works, and shall still send publications by mail, to keep up investigation, in various parts of the South, and expect that much of the seed sown will spring up, and produce fruit to the glory of God.

W. S.

THE SOUTH AS A MISSION FIELD.—Some of our northern friends entertain erroneous views concerning the southern people, thinking them all ignorant. I find a large class of intelligent men in the south, fully capable of appreciating the deepest reasoning, and will compare favorably with, or even surpass, northerners of the same educational advantages. It is true that the system of schools in the north has reached a higher state of perfection than south; but they are not all illiterate: some of them in various localities are pretty well schooled; others are men of intellect, though illiterate. Their phraseology is a little amusing at first, using the word "tote" for carry, "[illegible]" for poor, etc.; but I soon got so I could talk the same language. They are not so full of egotism and bigotry as northerners are, as a rule.

W. S.

BRODHEAD REVIVAL.—The church in this place has been praying and laboring for a revival the most of the time since Bro. Grant's discussion here, being cheered with many good symptoms, up to the time of my departure for the South. Some protested against my going south, claiming that my labors were needed at home; but I felt a new gift would do better, and wrote Bro. Thurber to come. He was delayed from time to time, but the church kept at work, and the fire kept burning. Finally Bro. Thurber came, full of zeal, and since [illegible] commenced seeking the Lord. I returned from the South in time to enjoy a part of the meeting. The feeling is such that the Congregationalist and Methodist ministers are [illegible] hold with us, and the meeting has been removed to the Congregational house. Nearly a hundred different persons have been forward for prayers, and a large number of them have found peace. Others are coming. The meetings (March 25th) are still continuing. W. S.

AT HOME.—By the blessing of God, we have been enabled to return in safety from the southern field; and find the Brodhead church enjoying a season of grace under Bro. Thurber's labors, of which we may speak hereafter.

Questions, and requests for scriptural expositions, received during my southern tour, at my Wisconsin home, from various correspondents, must be attended to at a late date, having come to hand but recently, other matters claiming precedence. Let none feel slighted nor become impatient while waiting. W. S.

THE BIBLE BANNER.—The second and third numbers of this monthly messenger are decidedly better than the first one. The fact that its subscription list already contains the names of some thousands, besides being scattered gratuitously by hundreds, speaks well for its prospects of doing much good. We call special attention to the publisher's offer to send it for fifty cents per year, when ordered as a present to some friend. Who will thus furnish valuable presents? Address Bible Banner, 240 Broadway, New York. W. S.

THE CHRISTIAN NEIGHBOR.—Such is the title of an anti-war paper, published by Dr. Brown in Columbia, South Carolina. Glad to see such a bold stand taken against war. "From whence come wars?" They are not of Divine origin. W. S.

A LETTER.

Brethren and Sisters:—I feel moved to address you again through our loved Crisis, for I know that you feel interested in the welfare of those isolated ones who have left home and kindred, praying and hoping to impart some knowledge that shall result in some good to some body.

I deeply feel my inefficiency as a laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. When I read "Woman and her Work" (which has so kindly been sent me, and for which I return many thanks), and read what others are doing for Christ, it makes me feel that I am of little account in the Master's service; yet at times I feel greatly encouraged, and rejoice in hope that he is using me to quarry out some stones for his Temple. Of this I am sure, that I desire nothing so much as to be one of Jesus' humble workers.

There has been an interesting work of grace, I trust, going on among this people all winter, and still continues. Soon as I gave this house to them, they consecrated it to the Lord. There were two old preachers among them; one of them, I believe, is a man of God; and I encouraged them to keep up worship, and helped, by reading the Scriptures, and extracts from our papers, exhortation, etc. This people must work in their own peculiar harness, or they cannot work at all; and with all their crude ways and forms of speech, they can sway the minds of their fellows wonderfully. I did not try to draw them from their odd ways and forms, for I saw it would be of no use; but I sought to give them little by little a higher idea of what constitutes christian character; for you must know that so low is the standard of piety among colored people generally, that they can get drunk, lie, steal, and even worse, during the week, and go to church on the Sabbath and get happy and make a great noise. So I felt that practical christianity was the first thing for them to learn; and while I made prominent the coming of Jesus, and the certainty of judgment near, I did not try to introduce doctrines that we love so much, but which they in their present state of cultivation cannot appreciate.

The progress of the children in school gave influence over parents. The Sabbath School became an object of interest. The Temperance Society drew several from the gutters, and a general improvement was visible. I greatly felt the need of a preacher of a higher type, and how I longed for some one of our own loved brethren to come and lead them.

During my absence last summer, one of their color came from Ohio, who proved himself better qualified to lead than any they had. He insisted upon their improvement, and taught a pure christianity. The result was, an addition to their number. Twenty-seven were baptized; some, I believe, truly converted; while others prove like many in our own and all other churches. When I returned was greatly encouraged, and opened day, night, and Sabbath School with renewed ambition.

Christmas week (the most trying among colored people, to test the strength of principles) passed unusually quiet, with less drinking and dancing than ever before. Then my young men and women, who had been at work, came into school, neat and orderly and determined to learn. O, how I coveted them for Christ! One in particular I felt might be so useful to his people. He is almost white, with pretty, black, curly hair, and was ever a perfect gentleman in school; but he had old slave habits, and his heart was bad and proud. But in a little while conviction came, and for three days he never ate nor drank. He saw his heart all black and defiled with sins, but finally he said Jesus appeared and took them all away, and spoke peace to his soul, and he was filled with joy, and ran to tell all he met what great things God had done for him. He has ever since evinced the most decided marks of a change. He is now my most efficient helper in my Sabbath School.

His change had a great effect on a younger brother, nineteen years of age, equally as promising, who soon came forward for prayers. He was in great distress for several days, but found peace in Jesus, and his face is radiant with smiles. Next came a younger sister, and the other three of my girls; and last night my heart was made glad to find that another of my young men, who has been greatly troubled for some time, has found peace. He told me he did not believe he could get religion because of his bad habits; but now he said he felt that grace would conquer them. Four of my large scholars have been baptized, and eight more are waiting an opportunity. I hope the germ of a new life is imparted, and oh for more grace to do my part well in instructing and guiding!

There is an old man preaching here now, who reads well, and who, for understanding of the Scriptures, and correct quotation, and power of applying, I have never seen equaled among this class. He is reading some of our works. Has been to see me twice, and says he wants to get all the light there is for him.

How I wish Bro. Sheldon could have come here on his return north. Prejudice is so disarmed, that he could have preached to both black and white. Quite a number of white people come in to our meetings. At my school examination, the physician of the place, a prominent man of southern principles, came in at the close. I asked him to speak; he did so, and encouraged me in my work. This is a triumph over prejudice; and an earnest, able worker could win souls here, I have no doubt.

I am now having vacation. I have been wonderfully sustained in my work by direct providences, I must believe; and in my greatest straits have for the most been kept trustful and hopeful. Pray for me, brethren and sisters, that I may not swerve from duty, and finally meet you in the kingdom.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Bro. Trevor, Lockport, $1. A sister, 45 cents. From Emily Kimball, Hopkinsville, several packages of papers. Cannot some of the churches gather up their Young Pilgrims and send them here? They will do great good.

March 24th. CAROLINE TULLER.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. H. S. MITCHELL writes:—"Why is it that we do not see that interest manifested among professors of religion that we have in days gone by? Why do we not see such outpouring of the Spirit of God, and hear sinners crying what they must do to be saved? This is often the inquiry, and I thought I would try to give my reasons why I think it is so.

1. We do not get where God can bless us. Many are not in the humble place that they ought to be in; if they were, we should see more of the Spirit of God manifested.

2. They do not pray for their preacher as they should, but instead they trust all in great preachers; instead of praying for the stripling David, they trust in great Sauls. O that we had more Davids and less Sauls; more faithful Abrahams and less doubting Thomases; more praying Daniels and wrestling Jacobs; and we want more Marys who will not be troubled about many things. If you want to see your neighbors converted, just go to praying for them in the name of the Lord, and let God send by whom he will; and it is my faith that you will see more or less converted. May God help us."

BRO. G. E. MERRILL writes:—"I am comforted with the promise of the Savior to his disciples, 'If I go away, I will come again.' I feel that the time is near when he will come to establish his kingdom on the earth. How cheering the thought that we are so near the time when the tabernacle of God will be with men, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. I want to do all I can in the cause of my Master. My way seems to be to scatter tracts. I have been doing so, and my labors have been blest to some extent, and I am encouraged to continue in the work. It is good to live near the Lord, and to have him near us, even in our hearts, continually. I do not want to have the truth we hold so dear in the head (as I fear many have) simply, but I want to have it deep down in my heart. It will not do to have only an intellectual knowledge of the coming of Jesus, but we must realize the fact, and be all ready to hail him with joy when he comes. It is very important to have present salvation; without it we cannot have future salvation. I believe in a full, free, and present salvation. Saved from our sins now, and then in the future with an everlasting salvation, physically, in the kingdom of God."

SR. L. B. WEAVER writes:—"My heart is pressed with trials severe; yet I would not murmur or complain beneath the chastening rod, but cast my care upon Him who has said, 'I will never leave nor forsake you.' Were it not for this blessed promise, I should surely sink beneath my burden. But though the storms rage and threaten to destroy me, yet in the midst of all the dark surging waves I can hear the sweet voice of my dear Savior—'Be of good cheer'—'Lo, I am with thee.'

My sufferings increase, and are so much harder to endure than formerly, that at times it seems as if I could bear them no more. Then I plead with Father to keep me from murmuring, and I feel his soothing and sustaining influences, and his strong arms around me, cheering in the hard struggles and battles of this life of toils and cares. I sigh and groan with the yearning creation to be delivered. Pray for me, ye praying ones; and may we soon meet where sadness can never enter."

Obituaries.

TAYLOR. Fell asleep in Jesus, Feb. 5th, 1871, Sr. D., wife of John Taylor, of Exeter, N. H., aged sixty-four years.

For years she has been looking for the blessed hope, and the fulfillment of the promise of Jesus—"I will come again." Her life has been one of deep piety and devotedness to the cause of the religion she professed. The poor have lost an invaluable friend, one that could be touched with sympathy, and never merely say, Be ye warmed, and fed, and clothed, without doing. In conversing and praying the evening before her decease, she appeared as well and her mind was as clear as ever while talking about the blessed hope, which was her theme. Only three days before her decease she left a testimony in the meeting not soon to be forgotten. She was taken suddenly ill, and in about four hours had to yield to the enemy, death. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer to numerous friends and relatives, from Rev. 14: 13. W. WALKER.

—Woman and her Work.

RAND. Died, in Suncook, N. H., March 23d, Gertrude F., daughter of Silver A. and Lucy Jane Rand, aged eleven years, eight months, and seven days.

Gertrude, a lovely child, was a member of the Baptist Sabbath school, and loved the ways of truth and holiness. Her parents informed me that they never knew of her telling a falsehood. Children and parents deeply feel their loss, yet sorrow not as those without hope. A large circle of relatives and acquaintances gathered at the funeral. S.

WHITTEMORE. Died, in Portland, Me., March 16th, at the house of his brother-in-law, Geo. H. Colley, Charles Whittemore, formerly of N. H., aged twenty-two years and three months.

May the blessing of God rest on the widowed mother, brother and sisters, and his grace sustain them in this bereavement. I. C. WELLCOME.

TAYLOR. Died, in Saco, Me., of consumption, Mrs. Lucy L. Taylor, aged twenty-nine years.

She looked at death as an enemy. Her faith was strong in the resurrection. A large circle of friends mourn her loss. GEO. A. STREETER.

☞ NAPOLEON visited Windsor Castle, on the 27th of March, and remained an hour with Queen Victoria and family. An address of welcome was made by Lord Stanley. Marshal Canrobert's children were also present. The Castle grounds were filled with a great crowd of people, who cheered the Emperor heartily.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

PARIS, 30th. The manufacturers in Paris have asked permission of the authorities at the Hotel de Ville to resume work. The reply was, "Certainly, but the workmen must keep their arms stacked and ready for use, as a conflict is probable."

No courts are open in Paris, all the judges having fled the city. Thirty-five hundred law cases remain in abeyance.

Paris grows sadder in appearance daily, and 60,000 people have left the city within the past ten days.

Chaplains are ordered to cease the performance of mass in prisons.

Insurance offices have been searched by order of the Commune, for jewels and money deposited by the Empress Eugenie.

PARIS, 31st. The Communal Council holds its deliberations in private, but it divulged that an executive committee of seven members had been appointed. The Commune is divided into nine sections, viz.: Finance, War, Justice, Safety, Subsistence, Education, Labor, Foreign and Municipal. The names of the members are all obscure, except Endes, Pyatt, Flourens and Delescluze.

LONDON, 31st. The evening edition of the Times describes the situation in Paris as critical. The gravest apprehension was felt in all quarters. Measures of proscription were secretly enforced everywhere, and the significant word "guillotine," though spoken only in whispers, is in everybody's mouth.

The Evening Standard reports that the Germans will occupy Paris immediately upon the downfall of the Thiers Government.

The insurrection in Marseilles is dying out. Lyons is quiet.

THE PARIS REVOLUTION.

PARIS, March 31. [Special to the New York World.] The Government has completed arrangements for moving against Paris. The troops will move simultaneously with the Germans along the line by Montmartre and Bercy.

Learning this, the Commune has resolved to march on Versailles to-night with 30,000 National Guards, via Montrouge and Camp Sartory, where an infantry line is stationed. On overcoming and fraternizing these they will proceed to Versailles and disperse the Assembly. The new decrees issued by the Commune make the workmen wild with delight.

THE REIGN OF TERROR IN PARIS.

All is consternation. The watchword of the Commune is death to the rich, death to the land owners, death to the priests. Decrees confiscating the church property have been prepared. Demonstrations of the "Suspects" are made hourly and many persons have been arrested. Guillotines will soon be erected, and the inmates of many houses have been marked as good for the guillotine. Drafts on the treasury are not paid either in Paris or Versailles.

The delegates to the Commune National surrounded the general post office to-day, and prevented its transfer to Versailles. The postal service is completely disorganized. The Election Committee demands rigid scrutiny into the elections of last Sunday.

VERSAILLES, April 1. Paris is now completely isolated, every avenue of communication with that city having been destroyed. No letter or postal matter of any kind whatever is permitted to enter or leave the city, and Paris is as unapproachable as during the pending of the late siege. Paris is threatened with the horrors of another famine. Provisions are already becoming very scarce, and the supply at present is exceedingly limited. The central committee refuse to dissolve, but insist on continuing in the enjoyment of the powers it held prior to the late elections. Letters to the journals outside of Paris have been stopped. The inhabitants continue to leave Paris, and many of the streets already look deserted. The Constitutionnel newspaper was seized yesterday. The journals Francais and Electeur Libre have ceased to appear in Paris.

BERLIN, April 1. Bismarck has explained the policy of the government toward France. He said that it was for the interest of Germany to facilitate the task of republican France. The Emperor had decided not to interfere unless the interests of Germany were endangered, when action would be taken which would be effectual.

LONDON, April 2. Several thousand national guards, occupying Puteaux Courbevoie and Bridge Neuilly, have been routed by the troops, who carried the barricades [illegible] ers. The nationals fled into the city. The moral effect of the affair is excellent.

The Paris committee intend to issue assignats to meet their immediate necessities. The nationals have occupied the Bureau de Credit. The Foncier party of order still hold possession of the Bank of France. The band, however, to save itself from being plundered, has advanced three million francs to the insurgents. The organization and equipment of marching battalions in Paris is actively going on.

The army of Versailles has occupied St. Cloud and the line of the Seine.

The Journal des Debats reports a collision at Bridge Sevres with Ducrot's men, and adds that battalions of the committee were on the alert last night, fearing an attack. There were 10,000 men in the Bois de Boulogne, and a large number are bivouacked in the Champs Elysees. The gates of Mailiat, Auteuil and Point du Jour are closed. The sittings of the commune will soon be public. Battalions provided with camping material, marched out yesterday in the direction of Passy.

PARIS, April 2. There was a serious engagement this morning between the government troops and the Communists.

VERSAILLES, April 2. A crisis is at hand. Two batteries are in motion on the Paris road and the ambulances are all ready. Bismarck has given permission for any number of troops to be massed near Paris.

CONFISCATION BEGUN.

LONDON, April 3. The Paris commune have issued a decree arraigning Thiers, Favre, Picard, Dufaure, Simon and Pothuan before a tribunal of the people, and ordering their properties seized. Another decree pronounces the separation of the church and state, suppresses religious bodies and abolishes national property.

Queen Victoria visits Napoleon at Chiselhurst this afternoon.

Religious Intelligence.

—— The Rev. Dr. Henry M. Scudder, lately of San Francisco, preached his first sermon before a crowded audience in Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, his new parish, last Sunday. ——The Union Prayer Meetings at the Mount Vernon church of last week, from five to six o'clock, have been well attended and been characterized by very deep earnestness and solemnity. Many requests for prayer have been handed in. The meetings are to be continued this week.—In the little town of Townsend, in this State, over two hundred have expressed the desire to become christians in connection with the labors of Mr. Durant, and in this connection we may say that the columns of our religious exchanges show an increase of religious interest in many places in New England.——Mrs. Van Cott's labors at East Cambridge have been quite successful. About forty are numbered as converts. Zion's Herald says: "Some of these conversions were indeed wonderful. One gentleman, who had in his social intercourse fallen into the terrible habit of using intoxicants, came to the altar with the smell of liquor in his breath, was converted, and his wife. In that house the family altar has been reared, around which the family bow. Two of his daughters are now seeking Jesus."

In Brief.

—— The balloon letters sent out of Paris during the siege were estimated to be two million and a half in number.——Alexander II., Emperor of all the Russians, is a confirmed drunkard.——Latest advices from Mississippi represent the anarchy prevailing there as extending over all the State. Fifteen school houses were burned in ten days in the eastern part of the State, and superintendents and teachers have been compelled to fly for their lives. ——No fat men are to be taken by Captain Hall in his arctic expedition, they being less capable than lean ones of standing the intense cold.——An inch of rain falling upon an acre of land weighs about 100 tons.——A series of two cent lectures is to be delivered to the working men in London, by such eminent gentlemen as Profs. Huxley, Huggins, Roscoe and others.——Gov. Alcorn, of Mississippi, has sent a message to the legislature relative to the Ku-Klux outrages in that State.—— Green peas and strawberries are being sent north from Charleston.——Two sharp shocks of earthquake were felt in San Francisco about 8 o'clock on Sunday evening. No damage was done, but the people were greatly frightened.

☞ A PHILADELPHIAN has invented a clock that will measure the one-ten-thousandth part of a second. The clock is described as a wonderful affair. The dial plate, which is sixteen inches in diameter, is separated into 5,000 parts, and the indicator revolves twice every second. The clock is set upon a table, beneath which the pendulum revolves, and the intricacy of the affair may be imagined when the statement is made that the entire works can be placed in a small cigar box. The government ordnance officers have accepted the instrument for the purpose of measuring the velocity of projectiles.

THE FIRE BY THE SEA.

There were seven fishers with nets in their hands,
And they walked and talked by the seaside sands;
Yet sweet as the sweet dew-fall
The words they spake, though they spake so low,
Across the long, dim centuries flow,
And we know them, one and all—
Aye! know them, and love them all.

Seven sad men in the days of old,
And one was gentle, and one was bold,
And they walked with downcast eyes;
The bold was Peter, the gentle was John,
And they all were sad, for the Lord was gone,
And they knew not if he would rise—
Knew not if the dead would rise.

The live-long night, till the moon went out,
In the drowning waters they beat about;
Beat slow through the fog their way;
And the sails dropped down with ringing wet,
And no man drew but an empty net;
And now 'twas the break of the day—
The great glad break of the day.

"Cast your nets on the other side"—
('Twas Jesus speaking across the tide)—
And they cast and were drawing hard;
But that disciple whom Jesus loved,
Cried straightway out, for his heart was moved:
"It is our risen Lord—
Our Master and our Lord!"

Then Simon, girdling his fisher's coat,
Went over the nets and out of the boat—
Aye! first of them all was he:
Repenting sore the denial past,
He feared no longer his heart to cast
Like an anchor into the sea—
Down deep in the hungry sea.

And the others, through the mists so dim,
In a little ship came after him,
Dragging their net through the tide;
And when they had got in close to the land,
They saw a fire of coals in the sand,
And, with arms of love so wide,
Jesus, the crucified!

'T is long, and long, and long ago,
Since the rosy lights began to flow
O'er the hills of Galilee;
And with eager eyes and lifted hands,
The seven fishers saw on the sands
The fire of coals by the sea—
On the wet, wild sands by the sea.

'T is long ago, yet faith in our souls
Is kindled just by that fire of coals
That streamed o'er the mists of the sea;
Where Peter girdling his fisher's coat,
Went over the net and out of the boat,
To answer, "Lov'st thou me?"
Thrice over, "Lov'st thou me?"

GOD THE CREATOR OF THE UNIVERSE.

The first verse of Genesis, which book is the beginning of all authentic and reliable history concerning the origin of all things, and of our race, reads: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth" (Gen. 1:1); thus revealing an all-wise, supreme Being, as the Author and Creator of "all things visible and invisible." The universe itself, in its grandeur, magnificence, beauty, and order, reveals the existence of an almighty and all-wise Creator, as says Paul: "The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and godhead." Rom. 1:20. And David sings of the exceeding majesty of Jehovah's works declarative of God's power and glory—"The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handywork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out into all the earth, and their voice to the end of the world." Ps. 19.

Notwithstanding all these proofs from the works of creation, throughout the vast and boundless universe, which our eyes are permitted to behold in infinitude of space, and also the scriptural declaration that God is the great Author and Maker of them all; yet there are men of no inferior minds, but even those who comprehend the magnitude and exceeding grandeur of this universe, who deny that God is the Creator, and even doubt and deny his existence altogether. What can be said in hope of such men, who grope their way amid the radiance and effulgent sunlight of both science and divine revelation in this the nineteenth century of the Christian era? Will not God leave them to blindness of mind and hardness of heart? They tell us "the universe created itself"; that "nature is God, and God is nature"; and the grossest pantheistic ideas are prevailing extensively throughout entire Christendom in consequence of their perverse teachings. They say that by the accretion of the floating particles of matter in the universe suns are built up, and from them, as they undergo volcanic disturbances, their several systems of worlds are created, and from these in turn the satellites of these orbs are generated, and each orbit takes its place in its separate sphere, according to the laws of attraction and gravitation; and that our earth is but a "chip of the sun" thrown from that centre, as are all the worlds in the solar system. Amazing credulity! What faith in the universe is this? They are required to "believe in God," and that "he is a rewarder of them who diligently seek him," yet they deny his existence irrefutably demonstrated, and have faith in absolute impossibilities! What will not men do or believe, to deny their God who created them, and "in whose hand their breath is"; and Jesus who bought them?

Furthermore, they profess to believe and teach that all the animal tribes, together with man, were generated by electrical or galvanic agency; and as some wise professors of science have made out to generate through galvanism some creatures, as they suppose, they think that it is demonstrated beyond question that galvanism is the father of us all. But Prof. Huxley, with others, has shown up the fallacy of the conclusions to which these men have arrived from their experiments. I will quote Dr. Dods upon this subject, who is lucid and plain.

"It is maintained that animal substances are produced by positive and negative forces of electricity, and in the galvanic form, without any previous germ of life, and that experiments have proved successful in producing creatures called acari. This, I contend, is impossible in the very nature of things, because all experiments prove that galvanism, operating according to the positive and negative forces, can produce no image whatever, except from the prototype.

I frankly admit that those acara may have appeared, as has been stated by Mr. Crosse, and seized upon by skeptics as a kind of creative triumph of their views independent of a Creator. But as the galvanic process was continued several months, some ovaria by living creatures might have been deposited during that period, if not before, and been developed into organic existence by natural process, independent of the galvanic battery, and would have been produced, even if the battery had not been employed. As creatures have locomotion, they might have gone to that spot invisible to the naked eye, and deposited their germs of life while the experimentor was there to renew daily the power of his galvanic solution. And in case the battery had anything to do with it, they might, by this artificial action, have attained to an unusual size, and what was microscopic in the present might have become conspicuously visible in the progeny. It is well understood that by favoring developments, any creature can be eminently increased in size.

It should also be remembered that the ovaria of some insects are very difficult to destroy, even by very heat. To test the matter fairly, I would suggest to Mr. Crosse that a soil the most favorable to vegetation be selected, and after having subjected it to a process by which all vegetable life shall be removed from latent seeds, he shall then apply to it any galvanic action he may choose, and if he shall succeed in producing a plant, the matter will be settled; because the seeds of plants possess no locomotion to repair to his chemico-life laboratory. I grant that through electricity or galvanism, a plant may be in a few moments produced from the seed, but not without the living seed. Those who report the production of animal life, by some process or chemical action, have never, at least to my knowledge, reported a single instance when vegetable life was thus produced and developed in a plant of the humblest structure.

As every effect requires an adequate cause for its existence, and as no effect can philosophically go beyond, or transcend its cause, how, I ask, can dead matter be so arranged or organized as to produce the life of an acarus, or any other creature, or even a plant?" —Existence of a God, pp. 53–55.

This reminds us of the fable of the labor of the mountain bringing forth a mouse. Scientific men, after centuries and generations (and some advocate millions of years, and even ages, for the past existence of the race) have succeeded in creating certain "acari"; though it is far from being demonstrated that they were not the product of ovaria, hatched through their galvanic experiments, previously deposited by living animals. And all this demonstration is to prove that all animals, together with man himself, were thus produced to people the earth. Alas, for the folly of wise men! How true it is, "Great men are not always wise." And how true also that what is regarded as "the foolishness of God," rejected in the wisdom of men, "is wiser than men."

When these learned men of science will discover some process by which "from the dust of the ground" alone they can produce all the different kinds of animals now existent on the land, and in the sea, including man, or animals of any kind, to people earth and ocean, the seas and air; and when they have discovered how they can by their creative genius make from the same "dust" the vegetable kingdom to spring forth, without previous germs, or seeds, and then give to each kingdom the peculiar soul or life-element they now possess, then we will begin to believe the universe begat itself, and that living animals and living plants and trees obtained life without a living God, who "hath life in himself," and hath "given to the Son to have life in himself." Until then we shall believe in God, and in his Son Jesus Christ, who is the Life-giver of the world. And feeling our dependence on him, we shall never scoffingly say, as did one recently—"My existence is not dependent on a crucified Jew!"

May we never become so befooled by "vain philosophy," and "science falsely so called," as to forget God our Creator; nor so abandoned to infidelity as to deny and reject our Lord and Savior who is the "life" and "the light of men." O. R. Fassett.

REV. DR. SCOTT.

His Recent Discourses Reviewed.

Elder Grant delivered a discourse last night at Platt's Hall, to a large audience called together by the announcement that the Elder would review the recent sermons of Rev. Dr. Scott upon the subject of future punishment.

The Elder opened by congratulating his hearers upon the fact that the great question 'What is Truth?' is being agitated more than usual, and said that such a fact was not an unfortunate one. He had frequently of late addressed the public upon what he believed to be the scriptural doctrine in regard to future punishment. A brother in Christ had been pleased to call in question what he had said, and he proposed to go over the same ground again.

The Elder then read from the Examiner's report of Dr. Scott's discourses.

As to the theory of eternal life being dependent upon

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT,

and that those who die in infancy are destroyed, because of their intellect being undeveloped. The Elder said that he had traveled, and professed to have some considerable acquaintance with the prominent men and Elders of the Destructionists, so called, and he has never met, seen, or heard of a man who held to the belief. So far as he was concerned, he believed that all were saved. He never believed anything else, and could not believe anything else, taking the Scriptures for his guide, and looking on the picture of Christ with the little child in his arms. Like that little child we are all in Christ's hands until we transgress. Having taken ourselves out of his hands by transgression, we must get back again. So it must be that our brother was misinformed. I say "Amen" to his statement that no little child is denied eternal life, but when he says that those who have died in infancy are angels in heaven, I cannot go so far. Christ said "Where I go ye cannot come."

MEN NEVER BECOME ANGELS.

Man was created a little lower than the angels, but I have yet to learn that grown persons or little children ever become angels in heaven. At the resurrection, the righteous are made equal to the angels. Neither do I believe that infants go to heaven as soon as they die. As to the

LAND BEYOND THE GRAVE,

of which our brother speaks, there is a land beyond the grave, but I can find nothing in the Bible about any such land for the righteous, except on this planet.

The Scriptures tell us the meek shall inherit the earth, and the place where the righteous will dwell in eternal joy is this earth of ours, purified and renewed. This, the Bible teaches, and the contrary cannot be found in it. I say Amen, also, to the assertion that these questions we are considering must be settled by God's Word. "What does God say?" Amen! I deny that the result of our teachings is that we have "no souls." I say, emphatically, that the Bible nowhere teaches that man has an immortal soul. The doctrine that there is an eternal existence for all, began with the heathen. It is the breath of life which departs from a person at death, and nothing else. If there is anything else which lives on, I ask what is it? We press this question here, as elsewhere, and demand an answer. If a man die, shall he live again?

NO SECOND DEATH.

I deny that the moral death spoken of in the discourse under review is a penalty. It is said the second death is the intensifying of the previous death, the condition of those who are dead in trespasses and sin. This moral death is a crime. Death, or the separation of the soul from the body, is a calamity entailed upon us, by the sins of our first parents. If it were a punishment the righteous might escape it. If the soul lives forever then where is the first death? And if there is no first death, how can there be a second?

As to the assertion that the agony of the wicked goes on forever, the Elder asked if that was common sense! He said he would not dare to stand before an intelligent audience and utter such a declaration and attempt to harmonize it with the Bible. I do not wonder at infidelity when such a doctrine is proclaimed as the gospel of Christ.

As to the comparison of the soul in the body to a bird in a cage, it implies that but for death the soul would be in prison forever. If we are so much better off without bodies, why did God create us with bodies in the first place? We cannot exist without bodies. The soul cannot exercise the functions of seeing, hearing, talking, etc., without a body. It is not true that the soul continues to exist after its separation from the body, with the same feelings and passions with which it grows up here. Where does such a doctrine come from? I ask those who believe it, where is their authority? Do they get it from heathen philosophy, or from the Bible? The righteous soul will exist in its purified body after the resurrection, and upon the earth, purified also. Then, as we are told, everything in heaven and earth will be praising God. The meek will inherit the earth, the wicked will be rooted out of it and destroyed. Broad is the road that leads to destruction. Horrid thought, annihilation! Yet it is God's way of stopping sin.

I am ready to meet all the clergymen of this city on this question, if they will give me half of the time.

Another discourse, said the Elder, was delivered last Sunday night, and another will be delivered by the same brother next Sunday night. I propose, if the people desire it, to notice both of these discourses next Monday night.

The Elder reminded his hearers that eternal life was freely offered to all, and he earnestly exhorted them to embrace the offer.

We owe an apology to our readers for this imperfect report. We have not space to do Elder Grant justice. He read through our reports of Dr. Scott's discourses, and replied particularly to everything therein to which he objected. He fortified his positions by frequent quotations from Scripture, and altogether his effort was a masterly one, although we, of course, do not undertake to pass upon the soundness or unsoundness of his views.—San Francisco Daily Examiner, March 14th, 1871.

RIPE FRUIT.

There is no more pleasing sight to the horticulturist, than to look upon the clusters of ripe fruit that fills the air with fragrance sweet. Equally pleasing to the eye of the laborer in the Master's vineyard is the thirty, sixty, and the hundred fold.

It has been our lot the past few years to meet with scores who are enjoying the blessed hope of immortality and eternal life, at the appearing of Jesus Christ, as the result of faithful labor.

I have just been engaged in a very interesting discussion with Elder Alvin Burgess, of Ohio. The discussion came off at East Randolph, N. Y. Arrangements for six sessions were made, but the sudden illness of my opponent brought us to an abrupt suspension of the debate, at the close of the fifth session. I consented to leave the question where it was, provided my opponent would agree to meet me in May or June next, when we are to have two sessions more. Mr. Burgess is considered the man for debates in the Erie Conference of the M. E. church.

The question discussed was—"Resolved, That reason, philosophy, and the Bible, teach that man has no rational soul, or spirit, that continues uninterrupted as a conscious entity between the death and resurrection of the body."

As to the results of the debate, I will only say that nine tenths of the listeners concede that Elder Burgess was badly used up, and even his friends in the church think it doubtful about his meeting us again. The people en masse arose, expressing a wish to have me remain and preach to them a few times, if we could have the house. The pastor (Elder J. C. Sullivan), and the leading trustee, were desirous that I should have the house.

We accordingly appointed a meeting for the next evening (Wednesday), and a crowded house listened with deep interest to our faith. Bro. Sullivan came up to our side, like a true-hearted christian, and took hold in prayer and exhortation, as though it was his privilege to yoke up with any man that had the spirit of Jesus and an open Bible, although we might not see alike in all things.

Two made a public profession of religion as volunteers in the Lord's army, standing up and speaking alone. At the request of a brother, a large number arose expressing a desire to meet us in the kingdom; among them were several who had not individually committed themselves to the truth.

We gave them four discourses, and had to bid them good bye for the present, as our health is very poor; yet the Lord blessed us exceedingly in giving us strength to do what we did. To his name be all the praise.

As the result of a tent meeting last June, and the discussion just passed, many more friends to our blessed cause are added, and no brighter spot for a strong church can be found in western N. Y. than East Randolph. We enjoy the sympathy and friendship of the entire community, including the Methodist people, who act the part of christians indeed. We expect to return to them soon, when several will be buried in baptism. May God speed the truth in every direction. Amen.

Wm. A. Fenn.

— It is not enough to believe what you maintain; you must maintain what you believe, and maintain it because you believe it.

— Some one feeling that actions are better than words, has said: "We read of the acts of the apostles, but never of their resolutions."

— Hold on to the truth, for it will serve you well.

— I see there is no such way to have a large harvest as to have a large heart. The free giving of the branches of our present estate to God is the readiest means to have the roots increased for the future.

IDOLATRY.

"And they took Dagon and set him in his place again."

It will be remembered when the Philistines took the ark of God, they dared to house it in the temple of their god Dagon. But God, true to his own character, would allow no other god to stand before him.

Long time ago, it was written on tables of stone—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me." It is since engraven in living, burning characters upon the very basis of the gospel plan; echoed by every surging tide, and whispered upon every passing breeze. Yet men and women heed it not, but instinctively pay homage at some earthly shrine, and still try to hold God in their idol temple. But he has declared himself "a jealous God," and will not share any temple or heart with an idol. Either by his own mighty power, it will, like Dagon, fall before him, and perish at its own altar; or his sweet Spirit will withdraw its presence, and leave them alone, joined to their idols.

Said a mother—"I have never taken half as much comfort loving my children, as I should had I not always felt so conscientious about it, fearing I might allow them to come between me and the Lord; and now I am just going to love them all I please, and enjoy it all I can." And, as if inspired with her own fearful words, she pressed her baby boy to her heart closer than ever. And she was happy; and she was satisfied, for they were enshrined in the very sanctum of her soul. It was hinted to her they might die. She replied, "I have no fears; they are perfectly healthy, and I make it my chief business to keep the laws of their being inviolate." Forgetting that He who said, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," had the power to allow some accident, or act of violation, to sweep them into the tomb.

But her happiness was short-lived. In a few months the cup of bitterness was pressed to her lips, and held there, till she drank to its very dregs. That same baby boy was the first to fall; its little prattling voice was soon hushed in death. She bowed heavily beneath the stroke, but clung closer than ever to what was left. But soon a similar visitation was threatened; and with every fibre of her heart quivering with anguish, she prayed, oh, so wildly! that the impending blow might be averted, and her darlings spared. But no! the blow must come; and it came with a crash; and soon another, and so on till she was written childless and alone!

She writhed in agony, and for a long time the arm of puny woman struggled and strove with Jehovah! whom in her very soul she almost hated for thus desolating her idol temple; feeling the cold vacancies could never be filled, nor another ray of sunlight ever gleam upon her shadowed life.

After years of controversy with God, she at length submitted herself to him; owned him conqueror, and her whole being paid its grateful homage to him for having thus dealt so bitterly with her. Ever since, Christ has been her all.

But, says one, "I am not conscious of cherishing any idol; yet I do not stand as free in Christ as I used to. I do not delight myself in the Lord as I once did." Dear one, just adopt the prayer, and continue it till an answer is realized—Search me, O God, and try me, and mirror to my view just my real condition. And sure as there is a God in heaven, you will find some idol set up. Perhaps it is some friend or friends; perhaps wealth with its appliances, or possibly some lust of the flesh, or lust of the eye, or mayhap some pride of life, or unhallowed associations, or something, however inferior it may be, stands between you and the Lord.

Said the writer to a dear one who was struggling, praying and groaning for all the fulness of the gospel—"I fear your husband stands between you and the Lord. I think deep down in your heart you idolize him." A shade passed over her countenance as she gravely replied,

"Perhaps it is so, but how can I avoid it?"

She was told if she was powerless to avoid it, perhaps the Lord could avoid it for her; at which thought she shuddered, and said—

"O! don't talk to me of trial, for I have had enough of that."

This is not an isolated case. Many there are who are aware that something exists which comes between them and the Lord, but they are powerless to break the spell and humble themselves under his mighty hand. Then let such extremity indite the prayer for God to humble them, though such a petition is fraught with fearful import; yet we had better be saved as by being pulled out of the fire, than not saved at all.

It sometimes takes a fiery ordeal to cleanse the human heart of its idols, and dissolve the strongly cemented ties which bind it there. Its inner soul becomes the scene of many a struggle. It is productive of much slaying, much crucifying. But there is a healing balm in the gospel which reaches every chamber of the soul. Not a desire, not a breathing, not an aspiration, but what is fully met in Christ.

O that the Spirit and power of the living God might break this Dagonic power, which is surging over the church, and sweeping so many into its terrible abyss. And may they be incited to a more elevated standard of christian excellence and pure devotion to Him whose fulness is sweeter, richer, and more abiding, by far, than any thing else of which the heart can conceive. A. E. Bennett.

THE WORK DONE INSIDE.

One of my friends is a very earnest, shrewd man, who seems to always know how to accomplish the best thing at the proper time. One day he was passing a gin-shop in Manchester, England, when he saw a drunken man lying on the ground. The poor fellow had evidently been turned out of doors when all his money was gone. In a moment my friend hastened across the street, and entering a grocer's shop, addressing the master, said:

"Will you oblige me with the largest sheet of paper you have?"

"What for, my friend? What's the matter?"

"Oh! you shall see in a minute or two. Please let it be the largest sheet you have."

The sheet of paper was very soon procured.

"Now, will you lend me a piece of chalk?"

"Why, what are you going to do?"

"You shall see, presently."

He then quickly printed, in very large letters,

SPECIMEN OF THE WORK DONE INSIDE.

He then fastened the paper over the drunken man, and retired a short distance. In a few moments several passers-by stopped and read aloud, "Specimen of the work done inside."

In a very short time a crowd assembled, and the publican, hearing the noise and laughter outside, came out to see what it was all about. He eagerly bent down, and read the inscription on the paper, and then demanded, in an angry voice, "Who did that?"

"Which?" asked my friend, who now joined the crowd. "If you mean what is on the paper, I did that; but if you mean the man, you did that! This morning, when he arose, he was sober—when he walked down this street, on his way to work, he was sober—when he went into your gin-shop, he was sober, and now he is what you have made him. Is he not a true specimen of the work done inside?"

A LITTLE WHILE.

A little while for patient vigil-keeping,
To face the storm, to wrestle with the strong;
A little while to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bind the sheaves and sing the harvest-song.

A little while, 'mid shadow and illusion,
To strive by faith Love's mysteries to spell;
Then read each dark enigma's bright solution,
Whilst meekly owning, "He doeth all things well."

And He who is himself the gift and giver,
The future glory and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad "forever"
Will light the shadows of the "little while."

Never too Late.—How often do we see men around us who, having been discouraged by financial reverses, are broken in spirit, and declare that is is no use to make any farther efforts—that fortune is against them! How often do we meet people addicted to bad habits who affirm that they are too old to break them off; that after so many years of indulgence it would be impossible to give up this or that pleasure! How often do we encounter individuals who earnestly desire this or that accomplishment, but who argue that they are too far along in years to acquire it! If they were only a little younger, they would lay hold and master it. And yet all history affords illustrations of the old adage that "it is never too late to mend."

The First and Last Oath.—Touching and striking is the following incident mentioned in the life of Dr. Marsh. "When dangerously ill, in his eighty-eighth year, he mentioned, with an expression of anguish on his countenance, that once, at the sinful taunt of a butler, he uttered an oath. This man had said in the presence of several of the servants, 'Master William is not man enough to swear.' He fell into the snare laid for him, and with trembling lips for the first and the last, he took the name of God in vain. But he went out and wept bitterly; and the recollection, even after the lapse of eighty years, caused him keen distress."

MANNA.

[From Bishop Hall's "Meditations."]

— God taught his people by actions, as well as words. This entrance showed them their whole journey; wherein they should taste of much bitterness; but at last, through the mercy of God, sweetened with comfort.

— They must come whom God brings. His hand is in all the motions of his meanest creatures.

— In vain shall Moses be upon the hill, if Joshua be not in the valley. Prayer without means is a mockery of God.

— There cannot be a more brotherly office, than to help one another in our prayers, and to excite our mutual devotions. No christian may think it enough to pray alone; he is no true Israelite, that will not be ready to lift up the weary hands of God's saints.

— The more familiar acquaintance we have with God, the more do we partake of him. He who passes by the fire, may have some gleams of heat; but he who stands by it has his color changed. It is not possible that a man should have any long conference with God, and be no wise affected. If we are strangers from God, it is no wonder if our faces be earthly: but he who sets himself apart to God, shall find a kind of majesty and awful respect put upon him in the minds of others.

— It is good for a man sometimes to hide his graces; some talents are best improved by being laid up: Moses had more glory by his vail, than by his face. Christian modesty teaches a wise man not to expose himself to the fairest shew, and to live at the utmost pitch of his strength.

— I would never desire a better proof of a false teacher, than flattery. True meaning has no need to uphold itself by soothing. There is nothing easier than to persuade men to think well of themselves. When a man's self-love meets with another's flattery, it is high praise indeed that will not be believed.

— He who will pass to the promised land, must neither stand upon length of way, nor difficulty. Every way has its inconveniences; the nearest has more danger, the farthest has more pain; either, or both, must be overcome, if ever we will enter the rest of God.

— There can be no fitter disposition for a leader of God's people, than constancy in his undertakings, without either weariness or change.

— While Moses was tending his sheep, God appeared to him. God never graces the idle with his visions; when he finds us in our callings, we find him in the tokens of his mercy.

— God commonly uses Satan in the execution of judgment, never in the works of mercy to men.

BESSIE AND THE BLUE DAISIES.

Bessie lived out in the country. The nearest neighbor was Bessie's Aunt Sarah, and her house was a whole quarter of a mile away. Bessie's house was on the top of a hill, while Aunt Sarah's was in a little valley. No place in the whole world did Bessie so much like to visit as Aunt Sarah's. There were plenty of girls, while Bessie's sisters happened to be all brothers. To go and spend a whole day there was the greatest happiness Bessie knew. To go on an errand, and stop a few minutes even, was very pleasant.

One summer morning Bessie's mother sent her on an errand, saying, "Do not stop at all this time, Bessie dear, for I am in a hurry for the spools. I want to use them in my weaving."

Away skipped the little girl in her white sun bonnet and bare feet, as happy as happy could be. She did her errand, and stopped not even to see what Jane and Mary and Sarah were doing that pleasant morning, for she might be tempted to stop awhile.

On her way home, just over the fence, Bessie spied some wild, blue daises, the first of the season. Now this little girl was very fond of flowers. At her house a few lilacs and roses and sweet-williams blossomed, but not flowers in abundance that she could gather any time she liked. Away went Bessie over the fence for the daises, almost as quick as a squirrel. She gathered her hand full and hurried on her way home. She went into the house and handed her mother the spools, and showed her the pretty flowers she had gathered. "Where did you find these, Bessie?" her mother said. "Why, mother, they grew right on the roadside, where I was walking," replied Bessie. Oh! naughty Bessie! Why did you not say, "They were over the fence, and I jumped over so quick, and got them, for I knew you would not care, mother dear." These little wild flowers were as likely to grow by the roadside as anywhere. Bessie was usually a truthful girl, so her mother did not know she had told a lie. Bessie had always much loved the blue daisies. God made them to bloom every summer for his little Bessie to gather, and well she might love them, though so very common.

Bessie put the flowers in her little mug, and stood them on the broad window-sill, as usual, but she did not enjoy them as she had done before. Why not? Because every time she looked at them they said, "You told your mother a lie about us; we were over the fence, not on the road-side. Why didn't you say so? your kind mother would not have cared; she knows you love flowers. You ought to have told the truth anyway, whether she would have cared or not."

No one but God who made the flowers, and Bessie herself knew she had not spoken the truth. The innocent flowers in her mug withered at last, and were thrown out. The blue daisies blossomed on in the fields just as pretty as ever, and Bessie often passed by them in her walks, but she did not like to see them now. She would often shut her eyes till she thought she had passed them, for they always reminded her of the lie. Bessie wished they would not grow on her way to Aunt Sarah's; she would have pulled them all up if she could, and never have seen another growing anywhere again. The very sight of them made Bessie's little heart heavy on her way to Aunt Sarah's when it used to be so light and happy. She used to say to herself, "When I go home, I will tell mother how I did not tell true, and ask her to forgive me; and God too, for I told a lie about his flowers." Bessie put it off when she got home, and said, "I will tell the next time; it will be easier then, but I will not tell now." Bessie never told, and by and by her mother died.

Oh! Bessie, why did you not tell the first time, and not put it off? That is the right way. It does not grow easier the next time; or the next; but harder and harder, as Bessie found.

Bessie is now an old lady, and wears glasses. She has children, and grand-children too; and to every one she tells the sorry story of the little blue daisies—how she never loved to see them any more after telling a lie about them.

Sixty summers have come and gone, and the blue daisies have blossomed every season as fresh and as innocent as ever. Bessie has seen them every summer in her rides and walks, but she never has had heart to pick one—not even one. She says, when she sees them, "These little blue daisies are the flowers I told my dear mother a lie about, when I was a little girl; it always makes me sad when I see them. I never told my mother either, or asked her forgiveness, as I should have done." Bessie always adds, "Never, never, tell a lie, dear children; it costs too much."—Christian Union.

Acts, once done, cannot be undone. Dr. Newton, in one of his sermons, tells of a father who every day when his boy was disobedient, drove a nail in a board, and when obedient, took one out. After a while the nails were all drawn out. But one day the father saw his son looking at the board and weeping, and when he asked the reason, was told: "The holes are there yet." The nails were out, but the marks were left.

APRIL.

Now melts the snow upon the hills,
Unnumbered foaming, sparkling rills
Come singing, tumbling down.
Through balmy days and sudden showers
We'll search the woods for early flowers,
Neath last year's leaves so brown.
Oh! blissful hours of coming spring,
After rude winter's frown!

Doing Good.—Napoleon once entered a cathedral and saw twelve silver statutes.

"What are these?" said the Emperor.

"The twelve Apostles," was the reply.

"Well, said he, "take them down, melt them, and coin them into money, and let them go about doing good, as their Master did."

PUTTING CHILDREN TO SLEEP.

Mrs. Stowe, in Hearth and Home, says: "The direction about putting a child away alone to sleep, without rocking or soothing, is a good one only for robust and healthy children. For the delicate, nervous kind I have spoken of, it is cruel and it is dangerous. We know one authentic instance of a mother who was trained to believe it her duty to put her infant to bed in a lonely chamber and leave it. Not daring to trust herself in the ordeal, she put on her bonnet, and positively forbidding the servants to go near the child, went out for a walk. When she returned the child was still, and had been so for some time. She went up to examine. The child had struggled violently, thrown itself over on its face, a pillow had fallen over it, and it was dead from suffocation.

"Nervous children suffer untold agonies from fear, when put to bed alone. No tongue can tell the horrors of a lonesome room to such children. A little, delicate boy, whom his parents were drilling to sleep alone, used to cry violently every night, and his father would come in and whip him. He mistook the pertinacity for obstinacy, and thought it his duty to conquer the child's will. One night he said: 'Why do you always scream so when you know you shall be punished?' 'Oh, father, father!' said the little fellow, 'I don't mind your whipping me, if you only stay with me.' The father's eyes were opened from that moment. He saw that a human being cannot be governed by dead rules, like a plant or an animal."—Home Magazine.

Benefits of Laughter.—Probably there is not the remotest corner or little inlet of the minute blood-vessels of the body that does not feel some wavelet from the great convulsion produced by hearty laughter shaking the central man. The blood moves more lively—probably its chemical, electric, or vital condition is distinctly modified—it conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body, as it visits them on that particular mystic journey, when the man is laughing, from what it does at other times. And thus it is that a good laugh lengthens a man's life by conveying a distinct and additional stimulus to the vital forces. The time may come when physicians, attending more closely than they do now to the innumerable subtle influences which the soul exerts upon its tenement of clay, shall prescribe to a torpid patient "so many peals of laughter, to be undergone at such and such a time," just as they now do that far more objectionable prescription—a pill, or an electric or galvanic shock; and shall study the best and most effective method of producing the required effect in each patient.—Good Health.

Fever and Ague.—The following appears as a leading editorial in the Cleveland Herald: 'We wish to give a very simple remedy for fever and ague, and wish to emphasize it by saying that it has, to our knowledge, proved very efficacious. It is simply common salt. A teaspoonful taken in water, and a teaspoonful deposited inside each stocking next the foot, just as the chill is coming on. That's all there is of it; but, knowing that it has been very efficacious in 'breaking' the chill, and perfecting a cure, we put it in our editorial columns, where no humbug remedy shall ever find a place, if we know it."

Treatment when Poisoned.—It is worth while to bear in mind that if a person has swallowed poison, and no recognized antidote is at hand, the best thing to do is to give warm or cold water as fast as possible. Tepid water is the best, as that opens the pores of the skin, and causes vomiting; but if that is not at hand, do not wait, but give cold water until the physician arrives. While this will not cure all cases of poisoning, it will cure some, and benefit in all cases.

— Sleep warm, but never on feathers.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

MY FATHER'S WILL.

My way I dare not choose,
Thou knowest what is best;
Let me but clasp Thy hand the while,
And see Thy gracious, loving smile—
I feel such peaceful rest.

It was not always thus;
I once my way would choose;
I did not seek to learn Thy will,
I asked that Thou my cup would'st fill,
And naught of good refuse.

But now, O Lord, I feel
How blest are loss and pain;
When meekly borne, new strength they give,
They teach the soul in Thee to live,
And lead to endless gain.

THE AGE OF CHRIST, AND THE LENGTH OF HIS MINISTRY.

M. E. GREEN.

It may seem like presumption to the majority of the world to introduce any evidence against the orthodox belief on this subject; but I trust that there are those who are willing to receive evidence on this subject, even if it should not emanate from some orthodox pen. Most historians merely echo some learned or great man who has gone before; therefore when we find a majority agreed on a point, it is not conclusive evidence that they are right. Few follow Paul's maxim, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

The views that I shall present on this subject have been forcibly impressed upon my mind for years. There has been no historical event that has perplexed the ecclesiastical historian so much as this. The learned Dr. Jarvis, in his Introduction to the History of the Church, says, "The birth and death of our Lord Jesus Christ are the centre around which all history move. They furnish the key to civil as well as ecclesiastical history of man. How comes it to pass that the generality of ecclesiastical historians have left unnoticed the chronology of our Saviour's life, abandoned the subject in dispair, and pronounced it to be utterly impossible to ascertain the time of his birth or the year of his conception?" After the testimony of such a learned man of the so-called orthodox class, we may venture a few remarks on this point.

There is one point on this important subject that is settled by "a thus saith the Lord. Christ came to be baptised in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, at which time Jesus was about thirty years old. To establish the year of our A. D., when that occurred, historians have made the year that Rome was founded the basis of their arguments. Upon this point Hales gives the extremes of 126 years, while Dr. Jarvis gives a period of 86 years. He figures them down to a period of five years, from B. C. 753 to 748. The last of these periods, B. C. 748, is adopted by Abp. Usher. B. C. 753 is the basis from which our A. D. is recorded, and therefore if the period adopted by Usher is the correct one, then instead of A. D. 14 marking the death of Augustus Cæsar (as our common chronology gives us), his death would occur in A. D. 19. This is an important point to settle. Dr. Jarvis remarks—"To ascertain the year in which Julius Cæsar and Augustus died, is to settle two of the most important points in chronology." There are no two opinions as to the year of Rome when Augustus Cæsar died; therefore to ascertain the year of Augustus' death is all important. I shall introduce but one item of evidence on this point. Dion Cassius, the historian, in speaking of the death of Augustus Cæsar says—"Augustus went into Campania and died at Nloa. There was a total eclipse of the sun, and a great part of the heavens seemed to be on fire, and blood red comets were seen." All historians who speak of the death of Augustus in particular record this part.

If we turn to the great work of the Benedoctrines, entitled "The Art of verifying Dates," we see a calculation of all the eclipses, both lunar and solar, for over two thousand years, made by M. Pingre, and approved by a committee of the French Royal Academy of Science. We find that in the year A. D. 19, June 21, at twelve o'clock noon, there was a total eclipse of the sun in Europe, Africa and Asia. There is no total eclipse of the sun recorded by him for ten years prior, or ten years after; therefore it proves that A. D. 19 is the year of Augustus Cæsar's death, which agrees with Usher that the foundation of Rome is to be dated B. C. 748. There is no reliance to be placed upon any eclipse noted in history, unless it is a total eclipse, as all must see if they will examine the calculations of M. Pingre or others on this point.

Augustus' death occurring A. D. 19, in August, the first year of Tiberius began with the death of Augustus; therefore the fifteenth of Tiberius began in August, A. D. 34, Christ being about thirty years old; which, according to Moses' law, was the time given to commence the ministry, and was to be continued until the fiftieth year. Num. 4. The idea that our Lord preached but three or four years only, based upon the number of passovers recorded in the gospels, would seem to be absurd when we read what John says—"And there are many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written." John 21: 25. That Jesus or any other man could fill the world with books in three or four years is not to be believed by any thinking man. I shall endeavor to show by facts that Jesus preached according to law nearly twenty years.

I have before shown from a quotation from Dr. Jarvis that historians have decided that it is "utterly impossible" to tell the age of Christ when he was crucified. I shall now introduce the testimony of the Fathers (as they are called) of the Greek and Latin churches. St. Clements of Alexandria was the most learned of the Greek church. He wrote about A. D. 194. In commenting on Luke 3: 4, 23, he says—"And to prove that he [Christ] must have preached only one year, it is also written, 'He hath sent me to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.'" He then goes on to show that Christ came preaching in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, and was crucified in the twelfth month of the same year, about eleven months for his ministry. Being a very learned man, St. Clements' views became orthodox for centuries among the Greek church, and therefore but one opinion prevailed among them. Tertullian stood at the head of the Latin church. He was cotemporary with St. Clements, converted from the Pagan religion, and was one of the most learned men of his day. In commenting on Daniel's seventy weeks, he says—"Christ was cut off after the passion of Christ, within the times of the seventy weeks, in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar's reign, in the month of March, in the season of the passover, on the first day of unleavened bread." This was the orthodox view of the Latin church until the days of Eusebius, the historian, A. D. 300.

I shall now give the testimony of another Latin Father, Irenæus, who was born about the beginning of the second century. He was a disciple of Polycarp and Papis, who were cotemporary with, and disciples of, St. John the apostle. Irenæus wrote five books on the heresies of his times. His books are now extant. Mosheim calls them "a splendid monument of antiquity." Among the heresies he wrote against was the "Valentinian heresy" that Christ did not preach but one year, that he came preaching in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, and was crucified the same year. Dr. Jarvis gives the arguments set forth by Irenæus sufficiently for our purpose. He says—"It seems to have been the opinion of Irenæus that after our Lord's baptism, to which he came when he was thirty years old, he must have passed a number of years in retirement; for he adds that he came to Jerusalem when he had attained the perfect age of a master. This perfect age Irenæus supposes to be between the fortieth and fiftieth years of man's life; for he says the thirtieth is the first age of the youthful constitution, and extends, as every one admits, to the fortieth year; but from the fortieth and fiftieth year it declines into the age of seniority. Then on the authority of certain presbyters (Polycarp and Papis) who said they learned it from St. John, and others who said they learned the same things from the other apostles, and also from the expression of the Jews, 'Thou art not yet forty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?' Irenæus concludes that our Lord when he taught had passed his fortieth, and had not attained his fiftieth year. To him who was but thirty they would have said, 'Thou art not yet forty years old;' for it is altogether unreasonable to suppose that they would have added twenty years in their wish to make him younger than the times of Abraham. Hence Irenæus concludes that he was not much short of fifty, and consequently that he neither preached one year only, nor suffered in the twelfth month of that year, (for the time from thirty to fifty years (he sarcastically adds) would never be reckoned as one year, unless among the Æons their great years are so counted. From this last expression, one might infer that Irenæus supposes our Lord's ministry to have continued for nearly twenty years."—Jarvis, Part 2, chap. 9.

Here is the testimony of one of the Fathers, who had seen St. John when he was a boy, and was instructed by Polycarp and Papis, from whom he declares he received the evidence he gives. His integrity for truth has never been questioned. Dr. Winthorp in speaking of Irenæus says—"Is it credible that that excellent and pious father, with the advantage of being instructed by Polycarp, who was himself instructed by St. John, did not know what the beloved disciple held as to the facts of the second coming of Christ?" I would ask, Is it likely that he did not know how old Jesus was when he was crucified, and how long his ministry continued? Who dare accuse Irenæus of telling a lie with reference to this important fact? I say important, because he would not have noticed it as a "heresy" if he had not considered it to be important to the church.

Suppose all the testimony of the Fathers down to the fourth century were placed before a jury against the testimony of Irenæus; would they not decide unanimously in favor of Irenæus? Surely they would. If there could have been any evidence in the Roman archives in reference to the time of Christ's death, would not Tertullian, or Lactantius, two of the most learned men in the Latin church, who had access to the Roman records,—would they not have learned that Christ was not crucified in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar? It is clear that the evidence of such facts was destroyed by the fires in Rome in Nero's day, which destroyed all such evidence.

I am well aware of the objections that will arise with those who have made up their minds on this point, and accepted the evidence that has been brought forth by orthodox theory. The testimony of Irenæus is of more weight than all the conflicting testimony on this point. Hales, in his Chronology, says that the epochs of Christ's birth by "eminent" chronologists vary from seven years B. C. to five years after. "When doctors disagree, who shall decide?" One historian, in writing a history of the Emperors, says Mary the mother of Jesus died in the sixth year of Claudius Cæsar, in the sixty-second year of her age, which he gives A. D. 47 or 48, which would make her eight years old when Jesus was born, if he was born B. C. 7, and only twenty years old if his birth occurred A. D. 5.

Again, some give Tiberius' reign twenty-two years, while others give him twenty-seven years, and some even more; and when you take the extremes from the death of Augustus to the destruction of Jerusalem, you have from thirteen to twenty years, as is shown by historians. The question will be asked, "Can there be no reliance placed on Josephus?" His history is set down as "very unreliable." Gibbon makes this remark about Josephus, while giving the history of Claudius Cæsar, the second emperor from Tiberius. He says, "It is to be much regretted that we have lost the part of Tacitus which treats of these transactions. We are forced to content ourselves with the 'popular rumors' of Josephus and the imperfect hints of Dion and Suterius." We see from this quotation that Gibbon looked upon Josephus' history as mere "rumors," and therefore unreliable. If Josephus was well versed in facts, why did he not say something about Jesus and his condemnation, and other things connected with it, which agitated all Judea and the Sanhedrim? You will say he did, as is recorded in his "Antiquities," book 18, chap. 3, sec. 3. We are told by the classics that this passage is not found in the old manuscripts, and is evidently spurious. It is not my purpose to harmonize historians, much less to put reliance upon "popular rumors."

The question will be asked, "Does not the eclipse of the moon, that took place at the death of Herod, which occurred B. C. 4, make it sure when Christ was born? By turning to the table of eclipses by M. Pingre, we find that he records eclipses of the moon in every year from B. C. 4 (except B. C. 3), and A. D. 4, and in nearly every year two eclipses. In A. D. 3, Oct. 28th, at quarter to twelve in the evening, a total eclipse; and May 4th, at half-past eight in the evening, a total eclipse. The eclipses that occurred B. C. 4, March 13, were only partial (four digits), and not likely to be much noticed.

I have before stated that to undertake to establish a date from a partial eclipse, either lunar or solar, amounts to nothing as positive evidence. There are other objections, but my space does not permit me to notice them at present.

The question naturally arises, "What does all this amount to?" I answer, If historians, who record that a total eclipse occurred in the year that Augustus Cæsar died, speak the truth, then beyond controversy A. D. 19 is the year in August which commences the first year of Tiberius Cæsar's reign. The fifteenth year of his reign corresponds with A. D. 34 and 35, when Jesus was about thirty years old. And then if Irenæus speaks the truth, our Savior was forty-nine or fifty when he was nailed to the cross, corresponding to the years A. D. 54 or 55, which mark the end of the sixty-nine weeks, or four hundred and eighty-three years of the 2300 years of Daniel 8th, as explained by the angel in the ninth chapter, as being cut off from that period which brings us to the Messiah, the Prince, when he was exalted to be a "Prince and Savior" after his resurrection. One week was to confirm the covenant with many, which was the new covenant. Paul says of Christ—"He is the mediator of the new covenant." Where a covenant is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator, for "a covenant is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth." It will be seen by this that the covenant could not be confirmed until Jesus was crucified. Jesus told his disciples to tarry at Jerusalem until "ye be endowed with power from on high," after which "they went forth and preached every where," the Lord working with them and "confirming the word with signs and wonders and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost."

These texts are sufficient to show that Christ made a covenant, and made it sure by his death; and that it was confirmed by his disciples, God himself working with them, according to Daniel, for one week, or seven years, which brings us to A. D. 61 or 62, leaving eighteen hundred and ten years of the 2300, which would end in 1871 or 1872, when the times of the Gentiles will end, and Daniel will stand in his lot. Amen.

Preaching and Prayer.—An American pastor saw his preaching extraordinarily blessed. For twelve years he had a revival in his church every year. He was himself surprised at such success, until one evening, in a prayer-meeting, one of the brethren stated that for some years he had been in the habit of praying every Saturday until midnight, that on the morrow the preaching of his pastor might find its way to the people's hearts. We should, without doubt, see more fruits of the numerous sermons which are preached every Sunday, if every minister had one friend who took really to heart his pastoral work, and presented it without ceasing at the throne of grace.

A sermon of a Scotch preacher (John Livingston) was the means of the conversion of five-hundred persons in one day. But it should be said that a large number of christians had devoted all the preceding night to prayer for this object. Let us not forget that the Holy Spirit alone can make preaching efficacious, and that he is sent in answer to the prayer of faith.

"LITERAL INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE."

A PARTIAL REVIEW OF "THE END OF ALL THINGS."

No. 4.

DR. N. L. WILLARD.

In reviewing the remainder of Mr. James Grant's work, in which he attempts to show what is the true Hope of the Church, I shall content myself by giving his words, and at the same time parenthetically combating what I hold to be error. In so doing, I think the subject will be plainer, and the points more easily comprehended. It is not to be disputed but that one or the other of us is most egregiously mistaken, for two more widely divergent positions can hardly be conceived. We are diametrically opposed in almost every particular, except that we agree in the final happiness of the redeemed, whether in heaven or on the new earth. That it is both pleasant and profitable for us to know which of these two places is to be our future abode, is manifest from the great number of times the sacred writers speak of our home, and from the inducements held out for us to attain it.

We have not only the most full, accurate, and minute descriptions given of the nature and characteristics of that glorious state and conditions, but we have its location almost invariably given. And this is so frequently done, and by so many different writers, and in so many different words, all pointing to the same identical thing, that it is a standing wonder to me to know how (except by the most unwarranted wholesale perversion of human language) any other idea can be obtained or supported. Yet such is a fact; and to us it is a fact no less lamentable, than the theory is untrue. Thousands believe that the hope of the church is a home in heaven; and yet, when pressed for proof, they are unable to give one single plain passage of Scripture. Mr. G., it is true, quotes Scripture; but it requires volumes of explanations and theories to make it say that this home of the saints is to be anywhere else than where they were born; viz., on this earth.

The theory of going off "beyond the bounds of time and space"—just think of it—at death, or at any other time, is so full of rank absurdities and glaring inconsistencies, that to call it God's theory, is to charge him with folly. He is the author of no such mass of contradictions and impossibilities. Indeed, this very state of affairs stamps its human origin on its face. Man's plan depends solely upon the most ethereal fancy and sublimated imagination. God's plan appeals to a man's highest reasoning powers and his soundest judgment. Man's plan confuses his mind by its complications and intricacies. God's plan challenges his admiration by its beautiful simplicity. Man's plan fills his heart with doubt and uncertainty. God's plan fills his soul with joy, at the exceeding probability of its actual fulfillment. Man's plan attempts to achieve moral and physical impossibilities. God's plan is in perfect keeping with all of his laws which govern his works.

But let us hear what Mr. G. says on the subject: "There is one notion that may now be regarded as universal, among millenarians though on other points their views are remarkable for their diversity. The notion to which I allude is that of the coming of Christ to establish his millennial reign upon the earth, being 'the hope of the church.' By the expression, 'The hope of the church,' is meant that the hearts of all millennial believers in Christ are supremely set on such appearance of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and that this ought to be the hope of all the people of God.

I regard this as being a most obvious, and a most grievous error. It appears to me so manifestly at variance with the whole tenor of God's word, whether regard be had to the Old or to the New Testament, that I can only repeat the expression of my surprise, that any one conversant with the Scriptures, and seeking with singleness of heart to know the truth as it is in Jesus, could ever come to the conclusion that the hope of the church ought to be centered in the coming of Christ to our world to establish his millennial kingdom. . . . I hope to be able in this part of my work to make it conclusively clear that millenarians have no ground whatever for their assumption that the coming of Christ personally, in manifest glory, to reign with his saints on earth, is, or ought to be, the hope of the church.

First of all let me remark, that if this visible coming of Christ to reign personally with his people on the earth ought to be the hope of the church now, it ought equally to have been the hope of the saints in all ages. Now was it so? The hope of Job was certainly not the hope of reigning personally on earth with Christ during a millennial period. His hope was grounded on the conviction of seeing his Redeemer at the latter day—which latter day manifestly means the last day of the earth's existence."

[Why, allow me to ask, do you not recite the whole of Job's conviction? Why not let him speak for himself? He certainly is competent. Let us hear his exact words: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day UPON THE EARTH! And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." Job 19: 25–27. Now if Job expects to see his Redeemer, as he says he does, he will have to see him on the earth; for there is where his Redeemer will stand; and in order to see him there, Job will have to be there also. Again, Job says he expects to see God at that time in his (Job's) flesh; and that that is the only way in which he can see him. So Job is certainly not now in heaven; or, if he is, he is there bodily; otherwise Job's soul is blind and cannot see God.]

"On this point [viz., that Job is now in heaven; or rather that his hope was of going there at death, continues Mr. G.,] there cannot, I think, be the slightest ground for doubt; for in the twelfth verse of the fourteenth chapter of his book, Job thus expresses himself: 'Man lieth down [at death] and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep.'"

[Now I ask in all earnestness, How in the name of reason, common sense, and a decent respect for human language, can the idea be made to appear from the above quotations from Job's words, that man, instead of "lying down, and rising not," not only does not lie down, and does not sleep, but is more wakeful than he ever was, and rises higher than the very heavens themselves? If our language means the very reverse of what it distinctly says, then I can understand the above; otherwise I can not. It will not do to say that Job meant that his soul would go off to glory, while his body returned to dust; for he does not say one word, either directly or indirectly, about his soul. He speaks only of man. Now if the soul is the man, as is believed by Mr. G., Job says it "lieth down and riseth not." If it is not the man, we have nothing to do with it any more than Job had.]

"This [the passage just quoted, continues Mr. G.] must mean in a literal sense the end of the world. Job, therefore, had his hope only in the resurrection [precisely right], and that eternal happiness in heaven [precisely wrong] to which, as relating to both soul and and body, it is a preliminary step. The hope of reigning with Christ on earth was a hope to which he was an utter stranger."

[It certainly was very stupid in Job to say earth, if he really meant heaven all the time. He says, however, just as much about going off to the sun, or to Jupiter, or to Venus, or to any other of the planets, as he does about going off to heaven. Why may he not have gone, or why may he not go, to some one of these worlds, as well as to heaven? Just as much scripture for it, as for the latter place, If Job was a saint—and I believe he was—he will be with the rest of the saints, and St. John says—"And we [the saints] shall reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 10. How long, John? "And they shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 22: 5. This settles the matter. Job knew what he wanted to say, and he said it; and it agrees with what John, and Jesus, and the apostles, and the prophets, and all, say about it. So it is right. Therefore Job was not a stranger to the blessed hope of reigning with Christ on the earth, but was a staunch believer in it.]

"Nor is there the slightest trace of any such idea in the blessed experiences of David. Addressing God, we hear him saying—'Thou wilt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to glory.' Heaven, therefore, not any glorious state of things on earth in connection with the personal right of Him who was afterwards to be called 'David's son, was the hope of the Psalmist."

[I would timidly ask the brother, why this passage, and others like it, may not be "figurative,' or 'allegorical,' or 'symbolical,' or anything else, as well as the sayings of St. Paul, and other writers, which the brother claims are mostly anything else than what they say? But like Job, David says not one single word about heaven. Peter says (Acts 2: 29, 34), "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. . . . . For David is NOT ascended into the heavens." * *

"Dear me, Peter, this is too bad to speak so freely about David. But, then, you only mean, of course, that David's body is dead and buried. He is in heaven himself."

"No, I mean just what I say; 'DAVID is not ascended into the heavens.'"

"Yes, Peter, that is just what we mean. David is dead and buried, but his soul is in heaven, you know."

"I did n't say a word about David's soul, or his head, or feet, or hands. I spoke of David as a whole man, not as a part of a man. Therefore I repeat—'David is not ascended into the heavens.'"

"Why, Peter, you are a 'no-soulist'!"

"I can't help it. I stick to it. 'David is not ascended into the heavens.'"

But did David himself expect to go to heaven? Let us see. "What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the PIT? Shall the dust praise thee? Shall it declare thy truth?" Ps. 30: 9. "For my soul is full of troubles; and my life draweth nigh unto the grave. I am counted with them who go down into the pit. . . . Free among the dead like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more." Ps. 88: 3–5. David's view of his home after death did not seem to be a very cheerful view. But, David, what is your hope, or expectation, and what will satisfy you? "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied WHEN I AWAKE IN THY LIKENESS." Ps. 17: 15. Ah! that is it. He will be satisfied when he awakes. When will that be? At the resurrection of the just. When is that? At the last trump. When does that sound? When JESUS COMES. Where does the resurrection take place? On the earth! What will be the condition of the earth after the resurrection and its (the earth's) purification? It "shall be filled with the GLORY OF GOD," into which David will be permitted to enter, to go no more out forever. Therefore, David's hope was for the returning Jesus; for until He returns, David cannot "awake."]

"But, passing over other Old Testament saints, I come to the New Testament believers in Christ. When the martyr Stephen was in the act of closing his life on earth, and knew that he had but a few minutes more to live, what was the absorbing subject of his thoughts, what the object of his hope? 'Being,' we are told, 'full of the Holy Ghost [he] looked up into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.' Surely no millenarian will venture to say that the hope of Stephen in his dying moments was the hope of Christ coming to reign personally on the earth, and he to reign with Christ. No! his hope was to be with our Lord in heaven—a hope, so far as his spirit was concerned, to be realized almost instantaneously, and to be experienced in all the fulness of its fruition on the resurrection morn."

[No one doubts that Stephen saw what he said he did. He was permitted in that trying hour to see Jesus who died on the cross for him, and for whose sake Stephen was now called upon to give up his own life. But in no case does he intimate that he was going to heaven, for he well knew that where Jesus was, he could not go. Jesus had told his disciples only a short time before that "as I told the Jews, so say I now unto you, that where I go, ye cannot come." Now God is no respecter of persons. He would not admit Stephen into heaven and leave out all the other apostles. Then again Stephen's biographer says that "he fell asleep," and that "devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him." Was it not rather inconsistent for those devout men to make great lamentation over Stephen's going into glory, if such was the case? Had they not ought to have rejoiced at his happy deliverance from such awful persecutions and his entry into the realms of glory? Indeed, does not such a belief hold out the strongest inducements for the saints of God to court death, to pray for it, and, if possible, to secure it, if by dying they immediately pass to the shining courts of heaven?

Did not Jesus do a very unkind thing when he deliberately told Lazarus to lay aside his golden harp, take off his starry crown, put away his white robe (if disembodied spirits have such things), stop singing that new song, and come down to this wicked, dismal world, and enter into a body which by reason of four days' burial stank? King Hezekiah felt so badly about going off to glory, that he "turned his face to the wall, and wept sore"; and in answer to his earnest prayers and entreaties, and in consideration of his life of obedience, God graciously kept him out of glory fifteen years longer. Poor Stephen did not die until they rushed upon him with stones and overpowered him. He kept out of glory just as long as he could, and only gave up when obliged to. But when he did yield to the enemy death, he called upon his divine Master—"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit"; or, in other words, "Let my life be hid with thee, O Christ, in God, that I may, at thy coming, and at the great resurrection, receive it again."]

"What, too, was the hope of the thief on the cross—a hope almost instantaneously realized, after it was inspired by the gracious promise of Christ? It was not that he should reign with Christ personally on earth, during a thousand years, but that he should that day be in heaven with his Lord, who had so mercifully saved his soul at the last moment."

[But Christ and his soul went to hell (or the grave), where it remained three days and three nights, after he had promised the thief to remember him. The third day Jesus met Mary, and told her to touch him not, for "I have not yet ascended." Now how could the soul of the thief have been with Christ (not Christ's soul, for Jesus said "with ME"; not my soul, that very day in heaven), when neither party went there that day? The facts do not agree with the statement; so either the facts or the statement of Mr. G. must be wrong. Which is it? Of course the facts are right; let us see therefore if the record, as it actually reads, does not agree with them. Now what was the thief's prayer? "Lord, remember me when thou COMEST into thy kingdom," not GOEST up to heaven. Quite a difference, is n't there? Jesus having heard and received an intelligent prayer, answers it accordingly, in these emphatic words—"Verily [truly] I say unto thee to-day [notwithstanding I am to all human appearances cut off from ever being a king, or possessing a kingdom; notwithstanding I am dying on the cross, and am the object of ridicule and jest, and will soon be dead and buried], thou shalt be with me in paradise." When? Why, when I come into my kingdom. Is not this an honest answer to an honest prayer? And will not this promise be fulfilled when Jesus comes? If so, was not the hope of the thief centered on the returning of Jesus? On this point there cannot, I think, be the slightest ground for doubt.

There is another trouble with Mr. G.'s theory. It proves too much. No better argument could be adduced to prove that Jesus had already come the second time (for such would actually be the case), if his theory be true. But he denies that Jesus has come the second time. Now see how like a rope of dry sand is this belief.

Jesus came to earth, where he lived until he was put to death. That is the first time. Then he died and went back to heaven, where he stayed from sixty to seventy hours (less the time consumed in going and returning). He then came back to earth again. This makes the second time! But Jesus has only promised to come twice, and St. John says that when he comes the second time, he will come with the clouds of heaven, "and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him." Rev. 1: 7. Now did every eye see him when he came back to earth after his three day's visit to heaven? Did any see him? If not, is n't it pretty plain that there is a screw loose somewhere?]

"What, let me further ask," says Mr. G., "was that which animated and sustained Paul amidst all his great and manifold trials, mingled with perils, which justified the forcible expression that he was 'in deaths oft'? Was it the hope of reigning with Christ personally on the earth? There is not the slightest trace of any such feeling in the experience of Paul. His hope was centered first in being, as far as his soul was concerned, with Christ the moment he died [where is the proof?]; and after the resurrection of the body being with his Lord, in his complex capacity of a physical and mental person, through all eternity in heaven."

[Very fine, but where is the proof? Let us ask Bro. Paul whether this was his hope, and if he says it was, we concede the point: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the PROMISE made of God unto our fathers." What promise is that, Paul? Why, the same God promised Abraham, and repeated to Isaac, Jacob, David, and others of our fathers, saying, "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger; all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." Gen. 17: 8. "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the WORLD, was made to Abraham through the righteousness of faith."—Rom. 4: 13. "Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which HOPE'S sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews." Acts 26: 7.

Well, Paul, how do you expect to obtain that promise, and when? "This I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers; believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets [That is n't orthodox, Paul; but go on]; and have hope toward God; which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead." But, Paul, your soul will go off to glory as soon as you die; therefore what need is there of a resurrection? Your body is only a miserable clog, with a thorn in it; what is the use of trammeling yourself with so useless a burden? Because—"If the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised. And if Christ be not raised, . . . all they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 16–18.

I think this is a "slight trace" of Paul's hope, in which he states pretty conclusively the very reverse of what our author asserts.]

"But let us now look, for a few moments, at what is the general tenor of the Scriptures with regard to the hope of the church. And first of all, let us listen to the language of our Lord on this subject. What was the nature of the hope which, in his sermon on the mount, he taught his disciples to cherish? Was it a millennial hope—which at best is but an earthly hope? No, it was a heavenly hope; a hope which had heaven for its object. Referring to the slanders and persecutions which would be the lot of his disciples while on earth, he sought to comfort them with the bright and blessed prospect which was before them, of a happy home in heaven. 'Rejoice,' said he to them, 'and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven.'"

[That is just what we believe. The reward is in heaven, and will remain there, until Jesus comes again, when it will leave heaven. "For, behold, I come quickly; and my REWARD IS WITH ME, to give to every man according as his work shall be." It does not stay in heaven for ever. Now if the disciples are in heaven, they have not yet received their reward, for it is not to be given them until Jesus comes. Moreover, they will have to come back to earth again to get it, for "the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth." So they make the round trip for nothing. The simple truth is, the disciples are asleep, and will remain asleep, until awakened by the last trump, at which time they and all the rest of the laborers in the Lord's vineyard will each get his penny, or reward.

Titusville, Pa.

"POSITIVENESS OF BELIEF."*

"I have now spoken to you concerning the need and some of the influences of a positive belief. I have striven to meet some of the charges made against those who hold to their convictions in respect to the Bible and God. I ask you, in conclusion, to note the happy effect of a positive conviction upon the nature. It is undeniably true, that we live in an age of great mental activity. A thousand questions of duty invite us to daily decisions. A thousand problems challenge investigation. The age is tempestuous with speculations, and every man is the centre of converging whirlwinds. I do not envy that person who has not lashed himself to some granite column for support. When mental uncertainty has passed beyond a certain point, it is not the source of growth, but of torture.

There are mysteries in religion that we can never understand. Never by searching shall we find out God. In him are depths no thought of man may ever sound. Life, too, is intricate; and not seldom must we grope blindly, and feel our way along as a blind man feels his way, keeping close to the friendly wall. But, on the other hand, all that is essential for us to know, all that is needed for our guidance and consolation, is within our reach. I urge upon you all, and especially upon you who are young, to be positive in your belief. Base not your faith on ignorance, but on an intimate acquaintance with the inspired volume. Be diligent students of the Word.

Skepticism has two sources in our day,—an overweening pride of intellect, which disdains to sit as an humble learner at the feet of God; and superficial knowledge of the Scriptures. These are the two fountains of bitterness from which flow waters that quench no thirst, and drinking which you will imbibe fever and delirium. Avoid both; and remember that no pilgrim ever went to the oracle of God, seeking needed knowledge and wisdom to live, bringing in one hand humility, and in the other gratitude, as offerings to its shrine, but that received at last, although at first its face was as marble, the needed message. Cold and imperturbable was the countenance of the God at first: but as the suppliant gazed, praying as he gazed, a blush stole over the chiselled features; the stony orbs returned in love the suppliant's gaze; the closed lips opened, and the long-sought words of wisdom broke on the listener's ear."

— A christian, for the sweet fruits he bears to God and men, is compared to the noblest of all plants, the vine. Now as the most generous vine, if it be not pruned, runs out into many superfluous stems, and grows at last weak and fruitless; so does the best man, if he be not cut short of his desires, and pruned with afflictions. If it be painful to bleed, it is worse to wither. Let me be pruned that I may grow, rather than cut up to be burnt.

— The hand of God is in the restraint of many evils, which we never know to be towards us. The Israelites sat still in their tents, and little thought what mischief was brewing against them: without ever informing them, God crosses the designs of their enemies. He that keeps Israel is both a sure and a secret friend.

COMING EVENTS.

In relation to "coming events," we have spoken of the two great "unions" which are now progressing in the world: one with CHRIST; and the other with antichrist as a centre. One is led by the Spirit of God; the other by the spirit of the Devil. We believe the final conflict is at hand; and that it is high time for all Christians to be united against the common foe of man's highest interests, which is before us in the form of Spiritualism. From now to the end of time, we expect to see the true disciples of Jesus becoming more fully separated from the world; while a multitude of lukewarm professors will float into the devil's drag-net of Spiritualism, containing every thing that is opposed to vital godliness and holiness of heart. The saints will grow bolder and stronger, while at the same time the swelling numbers of the enemy's hosts will give them also courage to mock and scoff at the "little flock" of Christ, while anxiously waiting to see their glorious deliverer. Till that glad hour arrives, "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3: 13. The streams of iniquity will overflow their banks, and infidelity will laugh at the man who has faith in the sacred Scriptures; especially in those that relate to the speedy, personal coming of Christ. This doctrine receives special opposition and scorn from the enemies of the cross of Christ. The more important the truth, the stronger the opposition. Satan knows that time has come when the church needs to be aroused with the evidences which prove that our Savior is about to appear in glory to set up his kingdom; hence he is doing all in his power to divert the attention of the people from this all-important subject, to some of his popular fables, which have been adopted by many honest souls in Christendom. By this means he is neutralizing the power of the truth, and keeping men in darkness.

Without stopping to speak more definitely of the jots and tittles that are to fill up the last pencilings on the prophetic chart, just before the coming of Christ; nearly all of which we believe are accomplished, or now transpiring among the passing events; we advance to "the sign of the Son of man in heaven," which will cause "all the tribes of the earth to mourn." We cannot speak definitely in relation to the fulfillment of this sign, because we do not find any plain declaration as to what it is. It is our belief that it will be the shining glory that will precede the visible manifestation of Christ in the clouds of heaven. Whatever it is, when it appears, it is evidently too late for sinners to repent. Whoever remains in sin till then must expect to "be filthy still."

Immediately following "the sign of the Son of man," "they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Matt. 24: 30. Nothing short of a personal coming of Christ can fulfill the Scripture, which says: "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11.

For what purpose is he coming? What will he do when he comes? According to the Scriptures, his first work will be to raise the dead saints. Says Paul: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4: 16. Again he says, when speaking of the order of the resurrection of the dead: "They that are Christ's, at his coming." 1 Cor. 15: 23. The apostle is very particular to state that "the dead in Christ" are the first to rise from the grave. Then they sing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. 15: 55. If all the dead will rise at the same time, we think Paul would have been inspired to express himself quite differently. Instead of saying, "The dead in Christ shall rise first;" and "they that are Christ's at his coming," he would have said, The dead shall rise, making no distinction between saints and sinners. We can see no possible way to harmonize the inspired teaching of the apostle with the idea that those who are not in Christ will rise at the same time as the christians. The dead who are raised at the coming of Christ, "put on incorruption," and immortality" (1 Cor. 15: 53); hence none but the righteous are included in "the first resurrection." Paul calls those his "brethren," when addressing those who shall be raised "first," at the time "the trumpet shall sound," which will awaken "the dead" who are to "put on incorruption" and "immortality," and sing "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Does he include all the wicked, when he says, "my beloved brethren"? If not, then only the saints will rise at the coming of Christ.

According to the Scriptures, the next event after "the dead in Christ" are raised, is the changing of the living saints from corruption to incorruption, from mortality to immortality. This is the class named in John 11: 26, who "never die." Says Paul: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." When? "At the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised, and we [the living believer] shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. At that time, all who have been raised from the dead, together with all the righteous who were living at the coming of Christ, have "put on immortality," and are ready for the next event in the heavenly programme, which is a removal from the earth to meet Christ in mid air. We will let the apostle declare the truth in the language of inspiration: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." This Scripture affords the most positive and clear proof that ALL who rise from the dead when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven," are "caught up" to meet him "in the air," and remain with him for ever; hence none of the wicked have any "part in the first resurrection," when the saints are raised.

Having thus gathered all the saints to himself "in the air," what is the next great event? As we understand the teaching of the Scriptures, next comes the destruction of the living wicked by means of the vials of wrath. Paul says of them: "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. 2: 8. In connection with this, begins the cleansing of the sanctuary. The examination of this point, we reserve for next week.

VALLEJO.

Our meetings in Vallejo, twenty-five miles from San Francisco, are specially interesting. It is thought that some fifty have been converted or reclaimed. When we closed our meetings last evening, March 26th, the interest was greater than at any other time. Some thirty or forty rose for prayers. Those who reside there say there have never been before such excellent meetings in the city. Many are under conviction. Strong men are bowing to Christ. Seven have been baptized, and others are waiting for the next opportunity. We have had two meetings a day.

We are now at San Francisco. We learn the church here is doing well. Our meeting this afternoon was excellent. We expect a feast in the Lord this evening. To-morrow, in company with Bro. Bailey, we are to commence meetings in San Jose (Hoza.) We are expecting an interesting time. It is the seat of the Catholic power in the state.

We have not yet decided when to leave this coast, but may do so about the middle of April, when we purpose to stop a few days in Nevada, Cal., and then go to Salt Lake City. We have had meetings every evening this year, excepting one, and most of the time at two o'clock in the afternoon. The Lord is doing a great work in this state. "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord."

One who has been a strong man among the infidels, said to us to-day, that he believed we were teaching the true Bible doctrine; but he thought some who preached in the city did not believe the Bible. We found this man almost persuaded to be a christian, because he could now understand the Scriptures.

WHERE ARE WE?

The above is a question of no ordinary interest. Thinking men, whether christians or infidels, are satisfied that some grand event is at hand. The Bible student, who has not been blinded by traditions and fables, sees clearly, by the prophetic light now shining, that the end of the present dispensation is at hand. Says Bishop A. C. Coxe:—

> "We have reached one of those important and critical periods of the world which is destined to open a new era. . . . We may not be able to foresee precisely how that era will be shaped by Providence, but it becomes every one of us to understand the times in which we are living, and contribute what we may to direct events as they are developed to good and glorious ends. It is the remark of an eminent Frenchman, Mr. Pressense, that at this moment every important religious body in the christian world is strongly moved and agitated; every christian body acknowledges itself stirred by some impulse tending toward christian unity, and to the achievement of real work for the truth of God. . . . We may believe the impulse to which I refer is a real one, and proceeds from the Holy Ghost."

Wherever we go, we find the most devoted people in all churches have become convinced that sectarian walls should be thrown down, and thus allow a free communion of all saints. This is one of the bright omens which indicates that the bride of Christ is getting ready to meet him at his coming.

SAVED BY FIRE.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you give me, through the Crisis, a comment upon 1 Cor. 3: 15? "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." E. F. GLIDDEN.

The apostle is speaking of the "laborers" in the vineyard of the Lord; especially of himself and Apollos. He says: "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." Verse 6. Some of the Corinthian brethren got into "strife" about Paul and Apollos, and thus became "carnal," endangering their hope of salvation. Paul had bestowed much "labor" upon the Corinthians, but that labor would all be lost if they did not endure unto the end. If they should "be burned," then he would suffer the loss of all his work in Corinth; yet, "he himself shall be saved." Suppose a man builds a house, and after enjoying his house for a season, it takes fire, and is burnt to the ground, while he himself escapes unharmed. He has suffered the loss of all the work bestowed upon the house. So, if those Corinthians did not overcome their "strife and divisions," they would be burnt up at last, and thus turn out to be only like "wood, hay" or "stubble," fit for the gehenna fire; but the apostle would be saved; while his "work shall be burned." But if they lived faithfully, and endured to the end, they would add to Paul's "crown of rejoicing, [illegible] the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming."

When the faithful minister, after much toilsome labor, raises up a church in Christ, and the enemy sows discord among its members, causing them to become "carnal" again, then he has lost all his labor, and can feel no joy at the results of his work; "but he himself shall be saved," like one taken from a burning house, when his whole year's labor is consumed.

PIT OF HELL.—Said President Edwards, in a sermon to sinners, "God holds you over the pit of hell, much in the same way as one holds a spider, or some loathsome insect, over the fire." "The infinite might, and majesty, and terribleness of the omnipotent God, shall be magnified upon you in the ineffable strength of your torments. . . When you shall be in this state of suffering, the glorious inhabitants of heaven shall go forth and look on the awful spectacle; . . . and when they have seen it, they will fall down and adore that great power and majesty."—Tract No. 24, published by the Pres. Board of Pub., 821 Chestnut St., Phil.

Is it any wonder that such abominable doctrines make infidels? We believe no doctrine dishonors God more than that of the eternal misery of the wicked. The time has come when but few dare preach it in plain terms; yet is a necessary result, if the "real man" is an "immortal soul," and is not saved. Let the wages of sin" be "death," as declared in the Scriptures, then the Bible harmonizes with itself, and the doctrine of eternal torment becomes only an outgrowth of the great lie of Satan, first uttered to the human race in the garden of Eden. Let every one who sees the truth stand up boldly, firmly; and declare it with meekness.

WRONG IMPRESSION.—Our readers will get a wrong impression from the closing remark of our article, headed "San Francisco," in the Crisis for March 15th. It reads, "We would not advise those to come to this coast who can get a comfortable living in other places." It should have read: "We would not advise those to come to this coast who can not get a comfortable living in other places." Our point was this: if one can get a comfortable living where he is, he might do the same here; but we would not advise poor people to come here with the idea that they can get a living easier than in any of the States east of the Mississippi. If a man has good business tact, he may do as well here as anywhere. If he wishes to fix up a nice home, with delightful surroundings, this is the place where he may gratify himself.

☞ FATHER TAYLOR, the sailor's friend, died in this city, Wednesday morning, April 5th, aged seventy-eight years. For forty years he has been the pastor of the "Seamen's Bethel," in North Square, which, together with the "Mariners' Home," was the fruit of his zeal and devotion to those who "go down to the sea in ships."

CONVERSATION WITH DEMONS.

In the Banner of Light, Nov. 26th, 1870, we find a report of a conversation held with a spirit, as follows:—

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

QUES.—(From the audience.) Does the spirit, in its development and acquisition of power, appropriate pabulum as food?

ANS.—It certainly does.

Q.—From whence is it derived?

A.—From what is equivalent to all the various kinds of food that you have here. Now do not suppose that we subsist in our spiritual state upon nothing, for we certainly do not.

Q.—Do you have a digestive apparatus corresponding to the one pertaining to the physical body?

A.—We certainly do.

Q.—Is the food appropriated in a similar manner?

A.—It is.

Q.—Do you, in the acquisition of strength and knowledge, grow in size?

A.—Yes; till we reach a stature that is sufficient for the necessities of the spirit. Having reached that, so far as size is concerned, we do not grow beyond it.

Q.—How is the power obtained after that? If not in size, wherein does it lie?

A.—It lies in intelligence—in the aggregation of thoughts, more than of material atoms.

Q.—Are thoughts material?

A.—They are.

Q.—Are they incorporated into the intellection of the individual?—are they appropriated?

A.—Not necessarily. Their results are, but they themselves are not.

Q.—Do the thoughts exist outside of the individual's brain?

A.—Yes, emphatically yes.

Q.—How are they appropriated by the spiritual brain?

A.—By spiritual assimilation—just the same as they are appropriated here. All thoughts that you can spiritually assimilate you receive; all others you reject.

Q.—Whence do these thoughts proceed, if they exist outside of ourselves—are not elaborated in the mental constitution?

A.—So far as individual consciousness is concerned, they are elaborated in the mental constitution, but really they proceed from everything that lives—from the rocks, from the soils, the mountains, the valleys, the ocean, the dry land, the singing birds, the roaring beasts, from everything, because everything is a witness of God, everything is a thought of God.

If the foregoing answers from the demon were true, we can see a good reason why the Chinese, and other idolatrous worshipers, should put food in the house of their gods, so that the spirits, which these gods represent, can come and regale themselves on the spiritual nature of the literal food, standing on the table in front of their idols. The fact is, Spiritualism is only a rehash of Paganism, with new names and terms. Its theology is the same as taught by the heathen, and those who follow the instructions of the spirits, will be led to substitute science and reason for Christ and Christianity, God and the Bible.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

QUESTIONS AND REPLIES.—A friend inquires, "On what principle can Bro. Sheldon fraternize with those southern clergymen of various churches holding the rankest errors? What communion hath light with darkness?"

On the principle that Apollos was received, and was taught the "way of the Lord more perfectly." A lack of perfection in theology is no reason why we should withhold the light of truth, nor should a kindly effort to dispel theological darkness be construed into a fellowship with darkness. There are two ways to treat men with dim eyesight: the one is to put their eyes out, and then they will never see; and the other is to kindly apply the eye-salve of truth, which will dispel the dimness of vision. Judge ye which is the best method.

A brother inquires, "Did Christ exist before his birth of the virgin Mary?" We think he did, for Peter, in speaking of the prophets, affirms, "The spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ" (1 Pet. 1: 11); and it is evident that "the spirit of Christ" could not exist as such before the existence of Christ himself; thus making him both "the root and offspring of David"—David's Lord and David's son, having existed "before Abraham was," and "before the world was"; being "rich," and surrounded with "glory"; "being in the form of God" (Phil. 2: 6), "the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature: for by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist" (Col. 1: 15–17); "by whom also he made the worlds." Heb. 1: 2. God made the worlds by Christ, just as he will hereafter judge men by Christ; hence it is said that Christ made all things, in the same sense in which it is affirmed that Christ shall judge the race; and if all things were thus made by Christ, certainly Christ then had an existence, agreeing with John—"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God [with God the Father], and the Word was God [was God the Son]. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." John 1: 1–4, 14.

Here is a person bearing the name of "Word,"—not a sound bearing that name, for "HIS name is called the WORD of God" (Rev. 19: 13), and "In Him was life"; and this person, possessing "life" was "with God," and is called God—God the Son, for "unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." Heb. 1: 8. This God, the Son, was "with" God, the Father; and this God, the Son, called the "Word," was "made flesh"—humanity and Divinity being miraculously compounded—"for it became Him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. . . . Forasmuch, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." Heb. 2: 10–14. Thus we have "God manifest in the flesh"; not God the Father, but God the Son; but "great is the mystery," and Paul leaves it unexplained, and so must we, but receive it as a revealed truth, nevertheless—a mysterious truth. LIGHT WANTED.—The following note awaited my return from the south:—

"Bro. Sheldon:—Will you be so kind as to give your views of Rev. 20: 4–10 in the Crisis? I wish to have a correct knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and I find a difficulty here. If the wicked are raised from their graves and punished with everlasting destruction when Jesus comes (Dan. 12: 2; John 5: 25, 28; 2 Tim. 4: 1; Mal. 3: 18; 4: 1), how is it that they are to come forth on the new earth one thousand years thereafter, and the devil go forth to deceive them after their destinies will have been sealed one thousand years before? I have not yet been able to solve this mystery. If you have the light, please let it shine in our hearts, that we may also be edified. Your Bro. in Christ,

D. D. LATHROP.

Being so pressed with present duties, a full exposition of this scripture must be deferred; but we here remark—(1) The "difficulty" is obviated when we cease to make this one symbolic passage the standard with which to harmonize the many clear and harmonious passages. The many are right, and we must understand this in harmony with the many, if we understand it correctly; and the many are right, even if we never understand this. (2) A correct exposition will not demand the marshaling of millions of wicked men over the fair face of the New Earth. (3) The "mystery" will be solved more easily by allowing the general tenor of scripture to give the chronological location of the fate of the ungodly, and then understanding this one seemingly conflicting passage in harmony with the many, instead of trying to harmonize the many with our doubtful construction of only one passage. W. S.

THE HUMAN SPIRIT.—I am inquired of—"If the human spirit, which is to return to God, is simply breath, how does that return to God any more than a thousand preceding breaths of air?" I do not regard this spirit as a mere breath of air, but rather as "the breath of life"—an element of vitality which uses the breath of air and the blood to propel the human machinery; this principle being transmitted from parent to offspring, existing also in the animal creation, and evincing its existence prior to inhaling the breath of air; nor can this fact be obliterated by setting up the claim that this principle of life depends upon the life of the mother, for the hen that lays the egg may be killed, and yet the chicken in the egg possesses life before the breath of air reaches it, and is thereby enabled to break its shell; but this principle of life is not an invisible chicken within the material chicken, nor is it an invisible man within the material man. While I do not subscribe to the theory that makes man a mere compound of dust and air, I repudiate the popular claim that the spirit of man is a personality within man. It is an element of life, or a vitalizing principle that leaves man at death; for without it the body is dead, no matter how much air may be left in the lungs. This spirit neither lives nor dies, but causes life alike in man and beast. W. S.

RELIGION IN CALIFORNIA.

H. F. ROSS.

Ed. World's Crisis:—The men who first rushed to California were not christians; at least their Sabbaths were not spent in praising God. Gambling houses were their churches, and faro tables the altars at which they knelt. This state of things continued for some years; but now the scene is changed, and 1871 reveals a more cheering religious and moral aspect. Indeed, a revolution has taken place in the sentiments of the people of California on the subject under consideration, and the worship of God is being upheld in every town and village in the State. The character of the people too is undergoing a change. The reckless and impulsive element that was at one time so characteristic of the people is dying out; license is giving way to constraint, intemperance to sobriety, idleness to industry, and an unreasonable regard for the things of this life to a reasonable regard for the things of the life to come.

Elder Grant, who has now been laboring for almost three months in this city, has done a great deal in bringing about this much needed consummation. His lectures in Platt's Hall, and his constant labors in the churches, are awakening an intense interest in the subject of religion. Indeed, thousands in this city have listened to the Elder with marked attention who heretofore were indifferent to the truths of the gospel, and far more ready to ridicule its claims than to respect its teachings. His lectures were largely attended by persons of every sect and creed, and by persons of no sect or creed, such as infidels, atheists, and spiritualists. Such a commingling of believers and unbelievers, of the friends and foes of religion, was never before witnessed in the city. It speaks volumes for the ability of Elder Grant, that he could so often in a city like this command and interest such mixed assemblies. The irreligious and skeptical classes seemed of all others to be the most interested and attentive listeners; indeed, these men, with all their boasted contempt of God's word, are not so impervious to the truth and to the power of religion as they pretend.

The Elder's preaching and lectures have awakened a new spirit of inquiry in this region. Such a ransacking of Bibles for passages in relation to the soul, to the resurrection, and to future punishment, was never known in this city; indeed some men, who heretofore had always been innocent of handling the word of God, now carry the Bible in their pockets, and are diligent students of the word. If the Elder had done no more here than to create this new interest in the gospel, he would have accomplished a great work in our midst. I hear that the Elder's labors in Vallejo have been crowned with great success, and many of the worst men in that large town have been brought to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus.

California is one of the most beautiful lands on this globe, and nothing but sin hinders it from being a perfect paradise. What I wrote of it elsewhere will bear repeating—

> On either hand is seen impressed
> God's fairest landscape here below;
> Mountains which climb the skies to rest,
> And vales which bask in Eden's glow.

I do not desire to inflict a long communication on your readers, and shall therefore close by expressing the hope that I shall find opportunity to send you a line or two hereafter on topics suitable for the Crisis.

SISTER C. B. TURNER.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—You have seen the earnest appeals from Bro. Cogswell and J. B. Cook in behalf of Sr. Turner, and no doubt many who have not yet responded have purposed in their hearts so to do. Will you not carry that purpose into effect immediately? Only seventy-five* dollars more are needed to make up the whole amount. Are there not seventy-five persons who will send one dollar each, and so close up this matter? We are anxious to do this before the first of May. "As a man purposes in his heart, so let him give. For the Lord loveth the cheerful giver." Some perhaps have purposed to give five dollars, more or less. Let none delay, but send at once either to the Crisis, or to myself, at Rahway, N. J., and the amount will be acknowledged through the Crisis.

AN IMPOSTER BROUGHT TO JUSTICE.—Geo. Thomson, who claimed to be an Advent preacher from Wis., and by the fraudulent use of said name obtained money from Brn. in several places in Me., N. H., Vt., Mass., and Conn., was arrested in Springfield last Friday while attempting his games with the Advent church here. If any one swindled by this man will give the facts to the subscriber, it will very much assist in bringing this imposter to justice. T. R. WEAVER.

LETTER FROM BRO. A. N. SEYMOUR.

BRO. GRANT:—While many are zealously making proselytes to some peculiar creed, sect, or party name, and by so doing merit the cutting rebuke of Jesus when he says—"Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, but when he is made ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." Others, whose whole hearts are set apart to the great and glorious work of making people christians, seem to be wholly relieved from such a work of supererogation. The work of the first class referred to is a work of selfishness throughout, and although some good may result from such misdirected zeal, yet as a whole the good that might arise from it is so overruled by division, subdivision, and the spirit which it engenders among its votaries, that it proves to be a curse rather than a blessing. This influence God's faithful ministers and children have to meet wherever they go, for the world is full of it. This hydra monster uses all kinds of artful policy in order to engineer itself among men and meet with success. Its first policy is to impress all with the idea that they do really believe the Bible to be a sufficient rule of faith and practice. Second, they ignore sectarianism, and claim that all christians should be one. Third, they claim to be apostolic, having descended in a direct line from the primitive church, and also to be laboring for the salvation of souls, and for the establishment of christianity, christian practice, principles, faith, and doctrines.

Now as regards their claims, we would not particularly find fault; but in carrying them out we do demur, we do seriously object, for they say one thing and do another, in part, to say the least. This is hypocritical. Now after their claims are made, they proceed at once to manufacture creeds, articles of faith and denominational names by which they may be distinguished. They must have a name. Well, in this we would not object, providing they do not go out of the Bible to secure one, and by so doing deny their own claim that the Scriptures are a sufficient rule of faith and practice. Christians, disciples, holy brethren, sons of God, children of God, etc., are sanctified names, naturally growing out of the name of Christ, our great head or leader, and names, too, by which the various members of the church of Christ were originally known in the apostolic age. But these names are too insignificant, not comprehensive enough, for some dignitaries to be led by; they must have a name of their own make, and so they run; and the further they run out this credo-denominational thoroughfare, the more numerous are the isms, ites, ists, tists, and ents, till God's true servants are found weeping as did Paul over these illegitimate foxes that so disturb, spoil and destroy the peace of the christian church, and cause the rejecters of God's word to scoff at sacred things.

Is it any wonder that the professed church finds so many antagonistic influences to combat at every step it takes in these exceedingly perplexing and perilous times? I think not. I do most devoutly pray that all the true servants of Christ and children of God will cut themselves perfectly loose from all such sectarian hindrances, and be men; yes, christian men; men of full stature; who have ever the glory of God in view, and the salvation of perishing souls, rather than having men's persons in admiration; for such can not please God; for those who seek to please men rather than God are not the servants of Christ.

Whenever the sticklers for creeds and denominational names are accosted and reproved for their course of action, they meet you with a significant smile and say, Oh, it does not make any difference, if we have not got the spirit of sectarianism in our hearts. Their answer only forcibly reminds me of the following religious anecdote:

An eminent revival minister once held a series of meetings in ——, where he was very successful in leading many to Christ. During the effort many acknowledged the power of the gospel, and became obedient to the faith. Among the number was a certain rich, fashionable lady, dressed in her costly attire, blooming in her flowers, ribbons, gold rings, and bracelets. When she confessed Christ openly by obedience to the gospel in baptism, she overhauled her wardrobe and relieved her clothing and person from all superfluities, and adorned herself in christian apparel. She united with the church, and had her name recorded with others of like precious faith. She ran well for a season, but when that season of the year rolled around so prolific with the latest styles, her heart lusted after the beautiful, and she began to add piece by piece, article by article, until she had fully donned her original style of dressing.

The season for revivals having again returned, the eminent brother, under whose labors she had embraced the religion of Jesus, made this church another visit. As he entered the sacred desk and was looking over his numerous audience, he discovered this distinguished sister. He delivered his sermon with much christian earnestness, and after the benediction, while the congregation was receding, the friends of the worthy minister came along one after another, greeting him with much warmth of affection, and presently our sister extended her gold-glittering hand to her beloved minister, and expressed much joy at seeing him once more and hearing his excellent sermon. The first words that dropped from this faithful ambassador to her were—

"Sister, you are backslidden."

"Backslidden? why, no! I belong to the church, and am in good standing."

"Sister, I tell you you are backslidden."

"Why, no! brother, what makes you think so?"

"Sister, when you gave your heart to Christ about one year since, did you not lay aside all your gold and superfluities, and dress as a model of christian modesty and humility?"

"Yes, but—but—these innocent adornments make no difference if we have not got them in our hearts."

"Dear sister," said the beloved minister, "did you ever go to New York shopping?"

"Yes."

"Did you observe all along on Broadway that merchants had hung out in front of their stores various articles of merchandise?"

"Yes."

"What did it indicate? Was it not an indication that they had the same goods inside to sell?"

"I suppose so."

"Well, do they ever hang them on the outside until they get them inside first? So with you, you never put on these ornaments until you had first got them into your heart."

Be not conformed to this world, is the positive requirement of Jesus, though uttered by

Paul. Precisely so with creeds and denominational names. For Jesus, the church, and humanity's sake, give us the pure, original faith, hope, paths, platforms, principles, spirit, love, and practice. I am content with these, independent of all superfluities.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Munger.

Bro. Grant:—While you are at work on a large scale, and others in a smaller capacity, some little things may be interesting, as a variety. I have just returned from Vermont. On my way stopped at North Adams, and formed a religious society, which they have needed so long.

The work on the great Tunnel is progressing finely for such a gigantic undertaking. The central shaft, or well, is done, after killing some twenty men. It is thirteen hundred feet deep, and the heading began each way. The rocks were drawn up through this well, or shaft, by steam power. One man fell a few days ago to the bottom, dashing him to pieces. Last week a blast opened a pocket of water, which flowed so fast that business was suspended at this locality until more pumps could be got to work to take up the water. But there are four other headings where they are at work, gaining eight feet a day in all, about one and a half miles more to be done, and the hole is through the Hoosac or Green mountain, ready for the last-day chariots to pass. This, when done, will equal any temporal enterprise in California, or on this continent.

There is plenty of snow on the mountain this second day of April, and in the valleys below they are making maple sugar. Monday, April 3d, I visited a maple orchard with three hundred trees, which yielded from eighteen to twenty barrels of sap a day; making ten pounds of sugar to a barrel. The man at the sap works had just gathered his fifteenth barrel that day at three P. M., and ordered the buckets taken down, as they were all tired of "sugaring," for they had been at it from four to five weeks. This has been a great sap season in that vicinity. Price of sugar fifteen cts. a pound. Syrup, $1.75 per gallon, clear as strained honey. Some such facts may be equally as novel to the Californians, and to some other readers of the Crisis, as the account of their great vegetables you speak of. God's great world has many great things in it, and some small ones, both interesting to those who have not had the privilege of visiting in different places and seeing the wonderful works of God.

There are some of the best christians up among these mountains I ever knew. We are all glad to hear of your success in California (or Mars Hill). The Lord has wonderfully prepared your way through the Mission. You have good help we see, and keep praying for the work to spread. It seems the place was taken before the devil got his flint picked. Amen.

Bro. Sheldon, too, is acting prudently among the heathen down South.

Thus the cause is gaining, as more are inquiring for truth; and we older soldiers must, after thirty or forty years battles, stay near camp, watch, advise, cook, and dress wounds, and when the battle is over, all loyal to His cause will get their bounty without a petition; for God knows all his people that have fought the good fight and kept the faith. They will have a crown of life at His appearing and kingdom. Yours as ever, yet on the battle-field.

From Bro. D. D. Reed.

Bro. Grant:—The middle of Jan., I took steamer at San Francisco for San Diego, in the southern part of the State. Sunday morning went to the Methodist church, and then called on the pastor, who kindly gave me his desk. Scattered tracts and papers, and conversed with the people, and hope good was done. The people here are very poor, and were much discouraged. Had two dry seasons, and the past winter very dry, which has nearly ruined the settlers in the southern part of the State. It was truly the poorest country I have ever visited; every thing dried up, and nothing green but the cactus, which overruns the whole country. They have a beautiful blossom, some orange, and others pink. They bear fruit which is pleasant to the taste. One species grows so large, they cut them for wood to burn. Another kind they border their lots with for a fence.

My stay here was not long, as the climate did not agree with me. I took stage for Los Angelos, one hundred and forty miles, two days hard riding, through an unsettled country, except a few Spanish, who are bad-looking fellows. The land is owned by Spaniards, one man owning a thousand acres or more, and used for herding horses and cattle, which run wild and are caught with the "lasso." The drought has cut off the feed, and the whole country was covered with half-starved cattle, and their bones bleaching. It was a pitiful sight. Some own as many as twenty thousand head.

Los Angelos is an old Spanish town, and abounds with old adobe houses, with their courts, many in ruins, and inhabited by Chinese and a mixture of Spaniard and Indian. The principle business of the place is raising oranges and lemons, and the grape, from which they make wine in large quantities. The orange and lemon orchards were beautiful—the dark-green foliage and the rich yellow fruit and bloom at the same time.

Called on the pastor of the Methodist church, and he gave me his desk Sunday all day. The state of religion is so low in this country, they think it cannot be much worse. Had much liberty in preaching. Staid about a week and had blessed meetings. Good was done. I purposed to remain longer, as the pastor desired me to hold a protracted meeting, but was taken sick, could not fill my appointments, and grew so bad, I found that the sooner I got home the better. After I reached home was very sick with fever and dysentery; but we carried my case to the Lord, and he heard prayer and checked the disease, and is raising me up again. Thanks be to his great name who says, Cast all your cares upon me, who careth for you. As soon as I am able and the way opens, shall be out again preaching the glad tidings of Christ's soon coming.

The work is almost done. But few more will embrace the truth. I see by the report of the Minnesota State Conference there were but fifty-one added to the Advent churches in that State during the past year. There are some ten or fifteen organized churches, and eighteen ministers laboring faithfully to get the truth before the people. This looks like gleaning after the harvest; picking a few berries from the topmost branches. But we must keep sowing, for we shall reap if we faint not. There is to be a good deal of hard work done, and but little realized.

It reminds me of the gold diggers I visited last fall in the mountains. They filled their pans with dirt, sand, and stones, and when they washed it out, there would be only a few grains of gold, and sometimes none at all. So I thought it was with this last message. As it was in the days of Noah and of Lot, so shall it be when the Son of man cometh. "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Let us be faithful, for the Master soon cometh, and they that are ready will enter in.

Santa Clara, Cal.

From Bro. E. H. Eggleston.

Brs. and Srs. in Southern New York and Northern Penn.:—Since reading in the Crisis of Feb. 8th a "notice" by Bro. J. W. Taylor, and being very much interested in the matter, I would like to say a few words with regard to it. The cause of truth is slowly but steadily advancing in this section, but we cannot say as one remarked in the Crisis some time ago of the cause in the Eastern States, that prejudice and persecution had subsided in a great measure with respect to the coming of the Lord and its kindred truth. Not so here. We have to contest every inch of ground we gain, and fight hard, too; but we try to do it with "the sword of the Spirit." There has been much done within the last three or four years. The Lord has been at work among us; quite a number have embraced the truth; have come out from the sects,—some of them ministers, and are rejoicing in hope of the glory of God soon to be revealed. Praise the Lord! A few churches have been raised up, and we believe are prospering well. Besides these, there are brethren and sisters scattered here and there, a few in a place, who love the "blessed hope." This is a great field for labor. "The fields are all white and ready for the harvest," and "laborers are few." My prayer is that the Lord will send forth more laborers into his harvest. And I fear there are some who profess to be laborers who are not doing as much as they ought; are not active enough in the vineyard of the Lord. May they realize the responsibility that rests upon them, and go to work in earnest.

The Lord is coming! What we do must be done quickly. There is no time to be idle now. To those whom the Savior shall find giving meat in due season he will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord." The Macedonian cry—"Come over and help us," is being sounded in our ears from different parts. We have just received a letter from Bro. S. S. Cristman, of Syracuse, N. Y. He says there is a goodly number of Adventists in that city who are starving to hear the right doctrine preached, which is the coming of the blessed Lord in his kingdom. It is a great field of labor, but no minister. There are many who are not christians who are anxious to hear the doctrine of the apostles preached. He says he knows much good might be done there if the right man was among them. And the question is, Who will go to Syracuse and preach the gospel of the kingdom?

As to the new conference proposed, we have felt the need of this for some time. We want a concentration of effort. We want to use every available means in our power as christians for the spread of the truth, and to make ready a people for the coming of the Lord. May the Lord give wisdom, and may we direct our ways aright before him; have our lamps trimmed and burning, and we like unto men that wait for their Lord.

Spring Mills, N. Y.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. E. Burton writes:—"You are doubtless not aware of the work which is being done at Lakeville and Salisbury Centre, Ct. March 26th Elder H. K. Flagg commenced meetings at the Centre. One week he spread the truth before the people. I trust some received it in good and honest hearts, and it will spring forth and bear fruit yet to the honor and glory of God. He had good attention and a full house, and there seemed to be a great interest. Some from different denominations came in to hear. Bro. F. preached the prophecies to them. I trust it will set some to searching the Bible to see whether these things are so. There were a few dear ones in Jesus ready to work for the salvation of the perishing. God bless them and keep them unto the day of his coming and kingdom."

Bro. J. N. Thompson writes:—"The Lord is doing a great work in Bowdoin. There have been between thirty and forty backsliders reclaimed, and new ones have started for the kingdom. A few weeks ago, sometimes there would be only four or five out to prayer meeting and testify for Jesus, but last evening forty-six bore their cross. Still the work goes on. Brn. H. D. Reed and H. S. Mitchell are faithful in preaching the word. Pray for us."

Bro. C. C. Marston writes:—"The Lord is doing great things for the Advent people in Amboy, Ill. I have been preaching here nightly since the conference. Up to this date (April 3d) some have been converted, two baptized, three united with the church. Several more will unite soon. Last night six rose for prayers. The interest is on the increase. To God be all the glory. Pray for us."

Obituaries.

Colburn. Died, at Cambridgeport, Mass, Jan. 15th, 1871, Cephas Colburn, aged seventy-nine years and eleven months.

Bro. Colburn was born in Sterling, Mass., Feb. 15th, 1792. He entered the gospel ministry in the Methodist church, in early life, and his labors were blessed to the salvation of many, especially at Marblehead, where a powerful revival occurred. Failing health caused him to retire from the active ministry and devote himself to secular pursuits, but his interest in the work of God and in the blessed hope was unabated to the end. His loss is felt by the little flock in Cambridgeport, among whom he lived and preached the gospel, but their sorrow is mingled with hope,—"the hope and resurrection of the dead."

Words of comfort were spoken to his afflicted family and friends by H. L. Hastings, and he was laid away to rest in hope of life and glory when Christ who is our life shall appear. H. L. H.

Griffin. Died, of consumption, at Chicopee Falls, Mass., March 21st, 1871, Gertrude Stocking, wife of O. B. Griffin, aged twenty-five years.

She was the daughter of Daniel N. and Marietta Stocking, of Westfield, a child of many prayers, which, we trust, were answered in her life and in her death. Her hope was in God. Funeral services by H. L. Hastings. May God make the loss an occasion of profit to the afflicted ones who survive her. H. L. H.

Morton. Died, in Cushing, Me., Feb. 3d, 1871, Bro. William Morton, aged sixty-three years.

He was a great but patient sufferer, sustained by the hope of a glorious immortality when Jesus comes. His end was peace. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband and kind father. May the Lord comfort the bereaved. Funeral sermon by the writer. John R. Hall.

Giddion. Died, in Glassboro, N. J., March 30th, 1871, of dropsy, Abigail, wife of William Giddion, aged twenty-eight years.

Sister Abigail having received the Advent truth, and become about two weeks previous a strong believer in the sleep of the dead, died a witness for Jesus, of immortality by a resurrection from the dead. Funeral attended by the writer, at her request. S. Loudenback.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Paris, April 6. The Commune decrees the arrest of all persons accused of complicity with Versailles, and a jury of investigation will decide who shall be detained as hostages. Every execution of a National taken prisoner or of a civil parisian of the Commune by Versailles officers will be immediately followed by the execution of treble the number of hostages.

Cluseret reports to the Commune that the reorganization of the National Guard will give them 100,000 picked men. He also adds that at the present moment the policy of the patriots is to maintain a defensive attitude. Rochefort's journal is severe in its condemnation of the administration or affairs by the Commune.

Assy succeeded in escaping from Paris, after having been hunted from place to place by the Communists.

At the funeral of dead insurgents to-day there were three huge hearses with black velvet palls, each decorated with twelve red flags, containing the dead. Following them were 8000 National Guards and double that number of citizens. Women were marching in hundreds past and along the boulevards at a solemn pace. Many members of the Commune joined the procession. Each hearse contained thirty-three coffins, and twenty-three other hearses were in the cemetery filled with dead from the various hospitals. It was an awful scene—one huge grave for all. The bodies were lowered, one at a time, amid the shrieks of women and the shouts of men for vengeance on the assassins of Versailles. Pere la Chaise was one mass of people, swaying with passion and screaming, "Vive la Republique!" "Vive la Commune!"

Versailles, April 6. [World's special.] It is reported that Thiers, instead of following the advantages gained, and allowing the army to enter Paris, has commenced negotiations with the Commune and offering to concede many of its demands and to exempt the leaders from punishment in consideration of its recognizing the authority of the Assembly. The report causes intense excitement among the Conservative Deputies and in the army. The forces of the Commune are still in large numbers outside of Paris, but in extremely critical positions.

London, April 6. Bismarck has informed Thiers that all the restrictions concerning the number of troops for Paris are removed, and that he may occupy the city with 150,000 men if necessary. He also tells Thiers the present indecisive policy must end, or Germany will march into the capital and retain it until a staple goverament shall be established.

April 6—Evening. Direct communication by telegraph with Paris has ceased, the wires having been cut by the insurgents. The city is again isolated, and all dispatches have to be sent to points outside of the lines of the National Guards.

Paris, April 7. [New York World special.] The situation is hourly becoming more alarming. The Thiers' proposition to treat has inspired the Commune with fresh hopes, and it is believed that they have 100,000 men who will boldly fight the Government troops. They retain the conquered positions and make no advances for peace.

To-day a battle is raging in the fields between Chatillon and Vanvres. From the latter place the insurgents maintain an incessant fire from behind the fort. Crowds of women and children, frantic with grief, are searching each ambulance as it arrives for the bodies of their husbands and fathers.

The slaughter on both sides yesterday and to-day was fearful. Terror reigns, and the prisons are crowded. The churches and houses of the aristocrats are pillaged, and all the priests imprisoned. A great many murders have taken place. On this Good Friday there were no religious services in Paris. German intervention is the only hope.

The Insurgents have already commenced to put into execution their threats of retaliation on the prisoners taken. The Commune prevents the opening of the churches. Nearly all the cures have been thrown into prison. The reports that portions of the Prussian army near Paris have been ordered into the city are unfounded. Marshal McMahon, commander of the army of Versailles, has established his headquarters at Petit Trianon. General Vinoy has charge of the reserves.

Versailles, April 8. A circular issued by Thiers announces that yesterday the gens d'arms carried the insurgents' position at Courbevoie, and to-day the bridge at Neuilly was carried by the Government troops. Gen. Montadon was slightly and Gen. Pechot seriously wounded. The losses of the insurgents were immense and the positions captured are of decisive importance. The Assemblists have advanced to Porte Maillot and hold a position under the ramparts of forts D'Issy and Bicetre, which have ceased firing.

Paris has only provisions for two days, and the collapse of the insurgents is imminent.

Marseilles, April 8. The city is tranquil. Cremieux, Pallissier and some other members of the insurrectionary Committee have been arrested and imprisoned to await trial.

Versailles, April 10. The Government has resolved to enter Paris by storm at any cost rather than bombard the city. Fort Valerien fires mainly to clear the ramparts and prevent the artillery from being used to repel an attack. A partial breach has been effected in the fortifications. Yesterday's sortie against Chatillon was repulsed with heavy loss. An incessant fire is kept up from Forts D'Issy, Vanvres and Montrouge, but the damage is slight.

Gen. Vinoy will keep the command until Tuesday.

A deputation of Paris merchants to Thiers has returned without result. Conciliation is believed to be impossible.

Paris,—Sunday evening. [New York Tribune special.] There has been a cannonade all day. The Champs Elysees are completely deserted, and the National Guards are hiding in the cross streets, seeking protection from the shells, which fall in every direction, many close to the American Legation.

The result of the forty-eight hours' cannonade is that the Versailles troops have crossed the Seine and occupy Sablonville and Longchamps. The drawbridge and floor of Porte Maillot are broken.

The cathedral of Notre Dame has been sacked. Rochefort vainly endeavored to save it from pillage. Nearly all the valuables were plundered.

The Archbishop of Paris has been transferred from the Conciergerie to the Mazas prison.

Gen. Henry has escaped. He was sent to Belle Isle.

The Commune has made an indirect demand that the foreign Ambassadors take upon themselves the task of arranging the quarrel with the Versailles government, but the representatives of the powers are reluctant to accept the responsibility.

The Moniteur reports Delescluse under arrest; also that the ambulance service in Paris is insufficient, and the wounded are suffering greatly for the want of proper attention. Domiciliary visits will be made to-morrow to seek for refractory Nationals.

DOMESTIC.

Philadelphia, April 4. In the Court of Common Pleas to-day, several colored men were on the venire of jurors. A white man said that he refused to serve, and was fined by Judge Ludlow and ordered into custody. He exclaimed: "Get your money if you can. I will rot in prison before I will serve on a jury with a nigger." The Judge ordered the man kept in custody until the fine was paid. He said: "Every time you refuse to serve on such grounds I will fine you $200."

Memphis, Tenn., April 7. A special dispatch from Jackson, Mississippi, to the Avalanche to-night, says that a bill was passed by the Senate to-day authorizing the Governor to appoint a force of cavalry sufficient to suppress the lawless bands now existing.

Albany, N. Y., April 7. One of the most extensive fires ever occurring in this city, took place this morning. The large printing house of Weed, Parsons & Co.—Albany Evening Journal—on Columbia street, was entirely consumed, with nearly the whole block of small buildings on Broadway, between Columbia and Von Tromp streets, on the west side. The total loss will reach half a million of dollars.

In Brief.

—— Watts composed 697 hymns, and Wesley 600. About a tenth of them live, and are sung in every Christian church where the English language is used.——An enthusiast, who claims to have given years to investigating the lottery policy in the United States, says that there are 20,000 policy shops in the country, supplied by 61,000 players, who afford the proprietors, at a minimum estimate, $16,200,000 of profits yearly.——Henri, the young officer killed by the fire from Fort Mont Valerian, was the leader and organizer of the communist insurrection in Paris. He belonged to the canaille, and had risen from the very dregs of the population. Although not twenty years, he was a man of wonderful energy and possessed of great influence over the mob, his name having already become a word of terror to the Parisians, something as that of Marat was long ago.——By the terms of the preliminary peace treaty between France and Prussia, the former is obligated to pay the latter the enormous sum of $1,000,000,000 in hard cash.——A once reputable German poet, scholar, and philosopher, for many years the associate and friend of distinguished men both in this country and in Europe, is now serving as a porter in one of the suburban hotels near Detroit. His fondness for liquor brought him to his present condition. He ran through a fortune in about eleven years.—The Observer says that Bismarck is still favorable to the restoration of Napoleon.——More than fifteen hundred English Established Church clergymen have signed a paper, addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, expressing their disapproval of the admission of a Unitarian minister—one of the Bible revisers—to the communion at Westminster Abbey.

☞ The Boston Times says there is much complaint at the license given to card-playing on some of the lines of railroads. Some of the roads, and notably some of those leading from New York, are infested with gamblers and three card-monte players, who travel to and fro, fleecing unsuspecting passengers. It is even suspected that some of the conductors share with these gamblers the profits of their business, being thus bribed to "know nothing" of what is going on. Such knavery hardly excites our wonder when we remember the gigantic robbery practiced by the managers of some railroads upon their innocent stockholders; nevertheless, the evil demands a remedy.

☞ Father Taylor upon being asked at one time, "Why haven't you been made a doctor of divinity?" replied—"I suppose it is because my divinity has never been sick."

Notice.

The committee appointed at the last session of the New York Conference to decide upon the advisability of holding a State campmeeting in connection with the annual meeting of the State Conference in June, and to transact such other business pertaining to said meeting as may be necessary, will meet at the residence of Bro. N. McCullock, No. 4 Frank Street, Rochester, on Monday, May 1st, 1871. It is hoped that the friends in different parts of the State will feel interested in this matter, and any letters with pertinent suggestions or words of encouragement, may be addressed to N. McCullock as above.

For the Committee, J. H. Whitmore.

Notice.

Whereas it is incumbent upon the executive board of the Maine Second Advent Christian Conference to receive "complaints against the character and conduct of any member," and "if satisfied there is need of discipline for moral delinquency, may notify the accused to refrain from preaching, and the public from giving him countenance until the next session of conference, when proper investigation of the case shall be had";—under this provision we hereby notify the public that T. P. S. Hampson, having been charged with unchristian conduct, examined by and dismissed from the church in Biddeford, to which he belonged, and having had charges preferred against him before the conference, of which he is a member, and he having been properly notified of the same, and refusing to listen to the request of the executive board to refrain from public ministrations,—we deem it duty for the good of the public and the cause of Christ to give the above notice. C. Goud, F. A. Baker, E. M. Haggett, Wm. H. Mitchell, R. R. York, Executive members of the Conference. I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.

A TRUE LENT.

Is this a fast—to keep
The larder lean,
And clean
From fat of veals and sheep?

Is it to quit the dish
Of flesh, yet still
To fill
The platter high with fish?

Is it to fast an hour,
Or ragged to go,
Or show
A downcast look and sour?

No! 'tis a fast to dole
Thy sheaf of wheat,
And meat,
Unto the hungry soul.

It is to fast from strife,
From old debate
And hate,
To circumcise thy life.

To show a heart grief rent;
To starve thy sin,
Not bin—
And that's to keep thy lent.

BIBLICAL CHRONOLOGY AND HISTORIC DATA CONTRADICTED BY THE SCIENCES.

O. R. FASSETT.

The Biblical chronology as given us in the Scriptures, and reliable historic dates as written in received histories of our world, determine the creation of man upon the earth about six thousand years ago. But it is confidently affirmed by certain men of science within the last half century, that archæology, geology, and zoology, demonstrate to the contrary, and that there were "pre-historic ages," and a "pre-Adamic man." Says one writer—"Man began to exist at least as early as the quarternary epoch. This was the stone age, man's earliest epoch, as he knew only the use of a few simple tools and weapons of flint. It was followed by the metal age, after man had discovered the use of metals. These two periods are subdivided thus: the stone age began when man was contemporary with extinct animals, such as the mammoth. Its second period was when he was surrounded in southern Europe by existing migratory animals, such as the reindeer. The third period he used weapons of polished stone, and had domesticated animals. Then followed the metal age, the first part of which he fabricated instruments of bronze—the age of bronze; and subsequently he learned the use of iron, and the birth of civilization came in the iron epoch."—Primitive Man, by Louis Figuier.

It is admitted by those maintaining this theory that, "In undertaking to build up the exact status of such remote antiquity, much must be mere hypothesis, and much more will always remain problematical. We would be glad if these scientists would first determine facts which are reliable and irrefutable, and upon which they can agree without being at loggerheads among themselves, before they call upon the public to embrace their crude theories, or to give up their Bibles. But Prof. Alex. Winchell has overthrown the above hypothesis, and scattered it to the winds. He says:—

"Our researches show that man lived with the bear, the hyena, mammoth, and other animals now extinct, and some of which became extinct on the decline of the glacial epoch. It is not claimed that man lived before the glacial epoch, and the evidences of his contemporaneous existence with the reign of ice have been shown to be fallacious. But it is imagined that the close of the reign of ice dates back perhaps a hundred thousand years. There is no evidence of this. The cave drift materials accumulated at at the mouth of the Tiniere, in which have been found human remains, was estimated by Morlot to be from ninety-six to one hundred and forty-three thousand years old; but Dr. Andrews has exposed a curious mathematical blunder, the correction of which reduces the time to within five thousand years. We have no rule for the measurement of post-tertiary time which necessitates the admission of so high antiquity to our race. If we have been accustomed to think of the cave-bear as dating back to high antiquity, we now discover that he lived with man, and the reindeer, and other animals which still survive. . . . The fact is, we came ourselves upon the earth in time to witness the retreat of the glaciers. They still linger in the valleys of the Alps, and along the northern shores of Europe and Asia, while the disappearance of animals once contemporaries of man is still continuing. Not only did contemporaries of man become extinct during the age of stone; some survived to the twelfth, fourteenth, and sixteenth centuries, as already stated. The moa, of New Zealand, and Alpiornis of Madagascar, have become extinct within the epoch of tradition, as indeed has the mammoth of North America. The dodo, of Mauritius, disappeared in the seventeeth century; the great auk, of the Arctic regions, has not been seen for half a century, and every one must be convinced that the beaver, elk, panther, buffalo, and other quadrupeds of North America, are approaching extinction by perceptible steps.

The fact is, we are not so far out of the dust, and chaos, and barbarism of antiquity as we had supposed. The very beginnings of our race are still almost in sight. Geological events we had imagined to be located far back in the history of things, are found to have transpired at our very doors. Our own race has witnessed the dissolution of those continental glaciers which we have so long talked of as incidents of pre-Adamic history."

This theory of claiming "a hundred thousand years for the past duration of our race" is thus exploded forever, and Prof. Lyell can no longer say: "The real difficulty consists in tracing back the sign of man's existance on the earth to that comparatively modern period when species, now his contemporaries, began to predominate."

Dr. Sleigh, in his "Defensive Dictionary," sums up the argument thus:—"The age of the world is proved to be what the Scriptures say it is: (1.) By the paucity of mankind. (2.) By the great quantities of uninhabited land. (3.) By the late invention and progress of the arts and sciences. And (4.) by the universal deluge, and the traditions respecting it. The pretences which the Egyptians and the Chaldeans made to antiquity have been thoroughly refuted, and their absurdity made manifest. The former made their calculation by lunar years, that is, by months, and reckoned the dynasties of their kings in succession, which were contemporary. Herodotus mentions twelve Egyptian kings reigning at one time. Their chronogical accounts so differed from each other, that some computed thirteen thousand years more than others."

We think the Bible will stand all the tests of man's scientific researches to the end, as it has in all the ages and generations of the past. Once astronomy was thought to disprove the Scriptures; but this, one of the oldest and best understood of the sciences, is now considered to be in harmony with them; so it will be when these comparatively modern sciences are better understood. We have no fears, for "the word of God endureth forever." "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven." "Thy word is true from the beginning." "Thy word is very pure [tried, or refined]; therefore thy servant loveth it."

— Winter, which strips the leaves from around us, makes us see the distant regions they concealed; so does old age rob us of our enjoyments, only to enlarge the prospect of the eternity before us.

THE PRIMITIVE HOPE OF A KINGDOM.

[From the Corresponding Editor.]

Peter informs us that the disciples were begotten "again" or a "second time," unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." 2 Peter 1: 3. They could not have been begotten "again" unto a hope, till they had been previously begotten; and as they were begotten "again" at and "by the resurrection" of Christ, they had been begotten unto some hope previous to that event. It was the hope of a kingdom to come, under the supervision of the Messiah. They believed Christ to be the predicted Messiah, and, believing that, they confidently looked for him to reign at some point of time in his history; and in this they were correct, for the same prophet who predicted his birth, as clearly foretold his reign, in the same prophecy:

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even forever." Isa. 9: 6, 7.

While recognizing Jesus as this predicted Child, whose name should be called "the mighty God," or "Immanuel," "God with us," they could not evade the conclusion that he was destined to reign; for the prophet's affirmation was as positive concerning his reign as concerning his birth. And when they took a retrospective survey of his remarkable history, divine sanctions to his claim to the Messiahship, and consequently to the kingship, met them at every turn. They could call to mind the fact that an angel not only visited Mary to announce his birth, but to make the affirmation—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1: 32, 33. They could call to mind the scene at his baptism, when "the heavens were opened," and the voice of Jehovah came rolling down from the throne, saying, 'This is my beloved Son." They could remember the scene at his transfiguration, when a celestial voice from the overshadowing cloud of glory reaffirmed, "This is my beloved Son." They could remember the scene at his birth, when an angel in mid-heaven proclaimed, "To-day is born unto you in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord," at which time a whole multitude of the heavenly hosts serenaded the new born Jesus.

Together with these reminiscences, they were constantly witnessing his mighty works in casting out devils, healing the sick, giving sight to the blind and hearing to the deaf, and even raising the dead, all of which confirmed them in the conviction that Jesus was that predicted personage whose name should be called "The mighty God;" and if so, there was no escape from the conclusion that he was destined to occupy David's throne. They were right in looking for him to become King at some time, but owing to the fact that they had overlooked the predictions concerning his death, and had blended those predictions that related to his ultimate reign, with those that referred to his manifestation to the children of men, and were consequently premature in the expectations of the kingdom; so the hope of the immediate introduction of the kingdom cheered their hearts till the crucifixion.

This premature expectation is often alluded to. It was the existence of this premature impression that originated the request, "Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left, in thy kingdom." Matt 21: 21. It was the same impression that induced the disciples, as Jesus rode into Jerusalem, to exclaim, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord." Luke 19: 38. It was the same opinion that inspired their hearts when "Jesus perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a King" (John 6: 15); but Jesus knowing the time had not arrived for him to reign, concealed himself in a mountain. It was this impression that elated their hearts when "they thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear." Luke 19: 11.

This was the hope that animated Peter's heart prior to the crucifixion; and on the very night of the betrayal, Peter, with sword in hand, attempted to prevent the capture of his prospective King; but wicked men triumphed and led him away, and Peter presently sees him "crowned with a crown of thorns" by his enemies, in mockery of his claim to the kingship; and Peter begins to fear that that is the best crown he ever will wear. But his faith is presently put to a severer test as he sees Jesus nailed to the cross, and sees his enemies defiantly wagging their heads, and hears them tauntingly exclaiming, "Hail, king of the Jews." But his hope expires, like the blowing out of a candle, when Jesus really dies, and his enemies put him in the sepulchre, and roll a "great stone" and put a "seal" upon it, to keep him in death's embrace. Peter's expected king is dead, and buried; and Peter's hope died with him. His happy dreams of a coming kingdom are all thrown into the shade, and Peter is thrown into a quandary. Jesus is dead.

And though Jesus had made repeated allusions to his approaching death, their minds were so absorbed with the thought of his reign, that not one ray of light concerning his death had penetrated their minds, as is evident from this passage of Scripture—

"Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished. For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on; and they shall scourge him, and put him to death; and the third day he shall rise again. And they understood none of these things; and this saying was hid from them." Luke 18: 31, 34.

Whether they failed to recognize the fact that Jesus meant himself by the phrase "Son of man," or for some other reason, they understood not that he was destined to die; hence, they were enveloped in the deepest gloom while Jesus was dead, for the thought of his resurrection had not entered their minds. Their hope was extinct. They had confidently looked for him to reign. But now he is dead and buried. Their hope of seeing him elevated to the throne had faded away, and for three days and nights they were without the hope of a kingdom to come. But when the three days and nights expired, a bright winged messenger flies from the skies to the Savior's grave, paralyzes the guard of soldiers, rolls away the stone, and Jesus comes forth a deathless personage. The news spreads in every direction. Those who were early at the tomb carry the news to others, and the report flies like heavenly electricity.

Mary comes, saying he is not in the sepulchre. A new thought enters their minds: perhaps he lives again; for they had not before comprehended the thought that he could come to life again, and carry out the plan of setting up the kingdom. See Peter and John run—oh! how eagerly they run toward their Master's grave, half doubting, half hopeful; but soon Peter falls in the rear, perhaps conscience-stung with the recollection of having so recently denied his Lord, and the remembrance of that significant look that Jesus gave him that made him "weep bitterly," querying how he can face the Master if he really is alive. John waits at the tomb till Peter comes up, and not seeing Jesus standing by, Peter, determined to know the truth about the matter, "went into the sepulchre," and nothing but the grave clothes could be found; "and as yet they knew not the Scriptures, that he must rise again from the dead." Jno. 20: 9. But the "same day" Jesus appeared to them alive, and "the disciples were glad." Peter's "hope" lived again when Jesus revived; Peter's prospective king was really alive, to die no more, and could in due time establish the kingdom.

While two disciples were on their journey to Emmaus, Jesus appeared to them, and not knowing that it was Jesus, they say to him, "We trusted it had been he which should have redeemed Israel" (Lk. 24: 21); that is, they had relied upon him as their promised king, prior to his crucifixion; but not having understood that he was to be raised again, that event blotted out their hope for the time being. Jesus said to them, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" Thus he shows them that the Messiah's "glory" was to come after he had "suffered these things," and not before.

They had been "slow of heart" to believe what the prophets had foretold concerning his sufferings and death, and had fixed their minds only on his "glory" or reign; but now there is a general inclination to run into the opposite extreme, and repudiate the reign of Christ entirely, and believe only what the prophets have said concerning his death. How "slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." Why not believe what they have said about his reign, as readily as what they have said about his death? Jesus thus inspired their hearts with the assurance that the expected kingdom was sure to come at a future time, and thus were Peter and the rest of the disciples "begotten again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." But the precise time of the setting up of this kingdom was still a matter that Jesus had not enlightened them upon—perhaps they could not have endured the truth concerning its distance in the future, so soon after having their recent sad disappointment; so after having their hearts cheered with the delightful prospect of a future kingdom under the risen Messiah, and after Jesus had been in their midst "forty days, speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God," they felt intensely anxious to have the kingdom immediately set up; and remembering well Jehovah's declaration at the time the crown and throne of Israel was forfeited, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him" (Ezek. 21: 27,) together with Gabriel's declaration, "The Lord God shall give unto him [Christ] the throne of his father David" (Lk. 1: 32), they came to Jesus and "asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?' Acts 1: 6. Jesus still assures them that the kingdom should come, but the time of its introduction was not then disclosed to them: "It is not for you [now] to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power: but ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." And while the Master's voice was still sounding in their ears, "he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight." For the moment it seems as though their hope was again crushed; but God carefully arranged for this emergency: "Two men stood by them in white apparel," fresh from the throne of God, to cheer them with the announcement. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11. Had it not been for this, their hope might have been blighted again; but this testimony, coming from the lips of angels, elates their hearts with the sweet assurance that their contemplated King is destined to return again, having only gone on high to be the guest of his Father, and the mediator of the race "till his enemies be made his footstool." After reaching the celestial realm on high he sends back a "Revelation" to his disciples, in which he distinctly informs them that the seventh trump should usher in the kingdom, and also bring the judgment of the dead saints: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever: . . . . . thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged. Rev. 11: 15–18. Not only does this Revelation inform them that the Messiah's reign should begin at the sounding of the seventh trump, in connection with the resurrection of the dead, to be judged, but it also gives them various chains of events to be witnessed on the stream of time prior to that event.

Now the hope of the disciples is brighter than ever. It is a "lively hope." They erred, not in believing that "the government should be "upon the throne of his father David," but in looking for this event too soon. But, alas! how many are now looking for it at too late a date, or not at all. Soon the sounding of the seventh trumpet will bring the kingdom. Are we prepared to enter? Our "lively hope" is about to be realized. Let us not be slow to believe what the prophets have said about this matter. May our hearts be constantly animated with this hope of a kingdom at the return of the Messiah, and may we ever be found praying, "Come, Lord Jesus."

How much would neighbors rise in value, and how much would neighbors rise in beauty, if all should lay aside habits of criticism, and neighborhood scandal, and petty feuds, and ridicule! And if men should study the things that make for peace, and the things that make for happiness, everybody trying to make everybody else happy, what a revolution there would be!—Beecher.

COLPORTEUR'S NOTES.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Monday, Nov. 21st. Visited about thirty families in the town of A——, distributing tracts to all, and asking them to buy books. Many accepted the tracts readily, freely, but to buy a book!

Stranger. "What are your books?"

Colporteur. I have an assortment of the best written works on the Scriptures."

S. "Religious books! O, we have plenty of them."

C. "But I have such as perhaps you have not seen, containing very important information."

S. "I think the Bible of more importance than all men can say about it."

C. "That is very true. Do you believe in Christ, and go to hear his gospel preached?"

S. "I profess to be a christian, and go to hear preaching occasionally; but the minister don't seem to give us any information, and I have but little interest to attend meetings."

C. "Do you believe the gospel should be preached, so as to instruct the people in the truth?"

S. "Certainly I do, that is why the gospel is to be preached."

C. "But you have the Bible, and that is better than all that men can say about it, you think."

S. "Yes. But we need instruction by such men as are called to preach, and have made the Bible their study, and know more about it than we do. They ought to understand it."

C. "Exactly. And that is why I am offering books written by such men, and written on subjects in which but few ministers appear to interest themselves, or attempt to instruct others."

S. "What have you to sell?"

C. "The Plan of Redemption, Signs of the Times, Immortality, Berean's Casket, Reasons for my Hope, and other smaller books."

S. "I guess you are an Adventist."

C. "Yes, that is what I am called. I am looking for Christ's return, and that soon."

S. "I would like to buy some of your books, but have not money to buy much. I will take Reasons for my Hope."

C. "I hope you will find instruction in this book, and be profited by reading it."

This was the only sale in thirty families, but more than thirty tracts were given, and some words of exhortation and information, and many quotations of Scripture were also given.

"THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS."

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

John Bunyan lived about two hundred years ago; and his greatest work, the Pilgrim's Progress, has had a more extensive circulation than any other book except the Bible. I think that book was the first I ever read—certainly it is the first I can remember of reading. The poor sinner, dwelling in the city of Destruction, hears a warning voice bidding him "flee from the wrath to come." The place was to be destroyed by fire, and all that chose to remain there would also perish. Believing this, the man sets out on pilgrimage, and is inquiring the way to the celestial city, and asking the great question, "What must I do to be saved?"

He soon falls into the slough of despond, and being heavily burdened, begins to sink in the mire. Here he was forsaken by his neighbor Pliable, and left to enjoy or to suffer alone, for said he, "you shall possess the brave country alone for me." Christian in his struggles still aims to get toward the farther side of the slough, the side nearest the gate that stood at the head of the pilgrim's path. After a time he was lifted out, and his feet set upon solid ground, and he then went on his way. But he was soon turned aside by one Worldly Wiseman, who directed him to the house of Legality, who dwelt in the village of Morality, but he was brought to a stand by a high hill that hung over his head, from which came forth flashes of fire, which caused him to quake for fear. The thunders of Sinai, and the terrors of the law, and the fearful curse pronounced upon all who continue not in "all things which are written in the book" so affrighted him, that he looked for instant death.

But his friend Evangelist now comes to him and after reproving and instructing him, shows him more plainly the way in which he should go. "So, in process of time, Christian got up to the gate. Now, over the gate it was written "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Matt. 7: 7. He knocked, therefore, more than once or twice, and when the gate was opened, and he was stepping in, the one that opened it "gave him a pull." Being now fairly in the way he was told that there was before him an open door which no man could shut. He was shown a "narrow way" which leadeth unto life.

After a while he arrived at the house of the Interpreter, where he received much instruction and encouragement, and a blessing; yet he was not delivered from his burden. There was a wall on each side of the narrow path, and as he went on he came to a place where stood a cross, and below the cross a sepulchre. Here by the cross Christian was relieved of his burden, and as it was rolled from him, it fell into the open sepulchre, and was seen no more. Then was Christian glad and lightsome, and said with a merry heart, "He hath given me rest by his sorrow, and life by his death."

Proceeding on his way he saw two men come tumbling over the wall on the left hand of the narrow way. Their names were Formalist and Hypocrisy. But as they entered not in by the right way, so they neither found the celestial city, but were lost in the ways of danger and destruction. Christian ascends the hill of Difficulty, is overtaken by darkness, sees lions by the way, and went on trembling, hearing them roar, but they did him no harm. After resting at the palace Beautiful, he enters the valley of humiliation, where he has a terrible battle with Apollyon, but comes off conqueror at last, "through Him that loved us."

He also passes through the valley of the shadow of death, where darkness and danger greatly perplexed and distressed him; and afterwards meets with tribulation at Vanity Fair, where a fellow pilgrim is burned at the stake. But from the ashes of Faithful, Hopeful rises up to be the companion of Christian, illustrating the proverb, "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

We will not now trace the pilgrims through all the events of their journey, but many who read this may find their own experience illustrated in this wonderful book. The lines are all clearly drawn between the true and false professors. Various types of pretenders and time-servers are painted with a master hand, and also many different characters are found among true pilgrims. Not all are equally valiant for the truth, not all equally hopeful, not all equally well instructed, and not all equally strong. Such persons as Littlefaith, Feeblemind, Fearing, Ready-to-halt, Muchafraid and old Mr. Despondency, are as really and truly pilgrims, and get as joyful a victory at last, and as welcome admission "thro' the gates into the city" as the strong, the wise, and the brave.

Let the weak and feeble receive encouragement from this. And let not the strong man glory in his strength, or the rich man glory in his riches, or the wise man in his wisdom; "but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth; for in these things I delight saith the Lord." Jer. 9: 24.

WHAT KIND OF RELIGION?

J. W. THOMAS.

We read of three kinds of religion in the Bible—"our religion," "vain religion," and "pure religion." Reader! which kind have you? We may learn something of "our religion," as to its nature and effects, by glancing at the character of the apostle Paul previous to his conversion. He says concerning himself, that "after the straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee." How did he live? He gloried in his literary attainments, blamelessness in reference to the law, and no doubt like many Pharisees he made long prayers, and gave tithes of all that he possessed. But he had a narrow, bigoted, hateful, sectarian, bitter, persecuting spirit. Our religion was all the religion he had any faith in, and he wanted to kill and exterminate those who advanced views contrary to the law, though they manifested a much better spirit than the sect to which he belonged.

I wonder if there is any of this kind of religion in our day? Are there any very long-faced, sanctimonious church-goers, who are all wrapped up in "our party," and have a bitter, bigoted, selfish spirit? A thorough conversion to God set Paul all right, and it will do the same for others.

The next is "vain religion." Let James speak now—"If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, this man's religion is vain." How much of this kind there is in the land! Go to yonder prayer meeting. Hear that brother or sister sing, talk and pray. O how very religious they are. Surely they must be saints. Follow them home. How they scold, and fret, and find fault. See them go through the neighborhood. What tattling, whispering, slandering, backbiting, gossiping and evil speaking. That unruly member does run like a wild horse, and the whole community is in an uproar. Perhaps there is no one point where professors are more liable to fail than in an improper use of the tongue. Remember it is written that for "every idle word we speak, we must give account thereof in the day of judgment." Jesting, joking, and all corrupt and evil speaking is positively forbidden.

The third is "pure religion." How heavenly and divine this is. Lord, give me this kind. Let James testify again—"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." No person can have this religion unless he is a new creature in Christ Jesus. Old things must pass away, and all things must become new. The old selfish disposition must be subdued, and the heart must be renewed by the Holy Ghost. When once an individual has resolved to come out from the world and follow God fully, it will not be long before the fruits of this pure religion will appear. I would to God that more had this kind. How many poor widows and orphans would be relieved of their sufferings. How much money would be appropriated to a better purpose, which is now expended for needless and distasteful apparel. How many precious moments would be saved or improved in cultivating the mind, which are now wasted in sewing on useless gewgaws, or something worse. What a stripping there would be of jewelry, feathers, and flowers, and many other things which bespeak pride and vanity. How holy and heavenly the prayer meetings would be. With what delight and freedom would God's ministers preach when the plain truth was received into good and honest hearts. How welcome would be the news of Jesus' coming, if all possessed pure religion, and were unspotted from the world.

Reader! how is it with thee? Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

MANNA.

[From Bishop Hall's "Meditations."]

— Were it not for God's dear children, who are intermixed with the world, it could not stand. The wicked owe their lives to those few pious people, whom they hate and persecute.

— Jacob's heart was never so full of joy, as when his head lay hardest. God is often most present with us in our greatest dejections, and loves to give comfort to those, who are forsaken of their hopes.

— Ofttimes they who make conscience of greater sins, are overtaken with less. It is well and rare, if we can come forth of a dangerous action without any soil; and if we have escaped the storm, that some after drops wet us not.

— Religion does not call us to weak simplicity, but allows us as much of the serpent as of the dove: lawful policies, have from God, both liberty in the use, and blessing in the success.

— A good heart cannot endure to be happy alone; and must needs, unbidden, share with others in their miseries. He is no true Moses, who is not moved by the calamities of God's church.

— I see and acknowledge the harbor, that we must put into in all our ill weather. It is to thee, O God, that we must pour out our hearts, which only can make our bitter water sweet.

— Fruitfulness is the best argument of the calling of God. Not only all the plants of his setting, but the very boughs, cut off from the body of them, will flourish. And that there may not want a succession of increase, here are fruit, blossoms, buds; both proof and hope inseparably mixed.

— God has a hand of providence in the annoyance and hurt of the basest creature; how much less can the sting of an ill tongue, or the malice of an evil spirit, strike us without him?

— A good deal of the trouble of God's people arises from a mistaken apprehension of God. They judge of God by their own sense, not by his promise; by their own frame, not by his constant nature.

"A SHINING CHRISTIAN."

Elder Grant will preach to-day upon the above subject, and will tell how to be one. In this city we have had no such exponent of kindred views before, and it will probably be his last Sabbath with us, so we would invite all who would wish to sit under the droppings of his sanctuary to go hear him. He is a "war horse" in the cause. Instead of using menaces he uses entreaty. That he is so successful in the ministry, is not that he dwells so much upon the terrors of hell as that he descants upon the raptures of heaven. In his sermons he feelingly alludes to doing the best you can. He is bold and fearless. He would not shy at a locomotive even were Satan in person blowing the whistle. He invariably travels head up. If he has any defect at all, says one brother, "it is that he can't always be depended upon to stand without tying." If he ever did run away he never smashed his own buggy. He invariably runs his pole through the tail-board of the vehicle in front of him. "Woe is me, if I preach not the gospel," says the Elder, and he is biding his time to meet his opponent, Elder Johnson, who is in every way a foe worthy of his steel. If Mr. Johnson is not ready by one week to discuss the questions, the Elder will depart for his eastern home. This evening his subject will be "The reason of our hope." The revival interest still continues and scores have been converted.—Vallejo Daily Recorder.

Gems.

Hold the light for one another,
'Tis the Lord's command,
Seize thy shipwrecked drowning brother
With a manly hand;
Rouse him up to life and action,
Ply the means to save,
And by love's divine attraction,
Lift him from the wave.

— Oh, how great the difference between submitting ourselves to a complete set of rules and casting ourselves upon a beating heart; between accepting a system and cleaving to a person.

— Silence is a sweet eloquence; for fools in their dumbness are accounted wise.

— Seeking the good of others, gives a man tact, makes him amiable, and fills him with the most exquisite sense of propriety. He knows how to do good in the right way. There is ever so much Scripture against doing good with noise and racket.

— He that is ignorant in the truth, and led about with opinions, must needs err.

— God thinks more of the good than of the influential.

Not forever are we chastened
By the might of sorrow's hand,
Not forever pass we sighing
Through the stranger's weeping land.
There shall come a time of gladness,
When the heart may e'en forget,
In the melody of pleasure,
All the ills that grieve it yet.

— As the spokes of a carriage wheel approach their centre, they approach each other; so, also, when men are brought to Jesus Christ, the centre of life and hope, they are drawn toward each other in brotherly relationship, and stand side by side journeying to their heavenly home.

— Riches will decay, prosperity may change, but goodness doth continue till death.

—God loves to have us pray with earnestness. The best proof of earnestness is simplicity. Better in God's sight are the broken but heartfelt utterances of a child, than the high-flown utterances of some who think themselves wonderful in prayer.

— Some men need a tempest to save them from a wreck.

— The remedy of injuries is, by continual patience to learn to forget them.

We can never be too careful
What the seed our hands shall sow;
Love from love is sure to ripen,
Hate from hate is sure to grow;
Seeds of good or ill we scatter
Headlessly along our way;
But a glad or grievous fruitage
Waits us at the harvest day.
Whatsoe'er our sowing be,
Reaping, we its fruits must see.

— Sin produces fear; fear leads into bondage, and bondage makes all our duties irksome. Fear sin, and you are safe.

Closing Hours of Wesley.—On the 28th of June, 1790, John Wesley wrote: "This day I enter into my eighty-eight year. For nearly eighty-six years I found none of the infirmities of old age; my eyes did not wax dim, neither was my natural strength abated. But last August I found almost a sudden change; my strength, likewise, quite forsook me, and probably will not return in this world. But I feel no pain from head to foot: only it seems nature is exhausted, and, humanly speaking, will sink more and more until "the weary springs of life stand still at last." His last sermon was preached on Wednesday, February 23, 1791, from the words, "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near." He died on the following Wednesday morning, February 30, after a ministry of sixty-five years. For fifty-two years he preached generally twice each day, and often three and four times a day. It is estimated that his sermons numbered over forty-thousand five hundred. His closing hours were rich with holy joy and triumphant experience. Among his last expressions was this: "The best of all is, God is with us." His last word was, "Farewell."

Diligent in Business.—Rev. Dr. Ballard counsels: Go out of yourself, christian. Keep occupied. Do something that shows—that appears to the eye. Plant an orchard or a tree. Build a house, or a barn, or a store, or help to build a college, or a church, or a mission chapel. Have an object, and make the object appear. Bring it out of your mind and set it where it can be touched and handled.

Honor every handicraft and all handicraftsmen. Take off your hat in unfeigned respect to artisans, mechanics and laborers. Look at their work. "Consider" what they do and how they do it, as you consider lilies and all God's works. Be no monk. Shun speculative piety. Meditate, but meditate in order that you may do. Keep out of holes. Do not burrow in the dark places of asceticism and penances, and unbelieving self-righteousness. "Be diligent in business." This will help you to be fervent in spirit and better to serve God.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION PROMOTIVE OF HEALTH.

This was the firm conviction of that celebrated physician, Dr. Benjamin Rush, of the last century, and on this account he thought, even in the absence of other evidence, it ought to be considered "the benevolent religion." Dr. Rush was right in his opinion, as I shall now attempt to prove. I remark, then, that the Christian religion promotes health:

1. By keeping the mind clear. This was the special reason why Dr. Rush so highly valued it in this light. And certainly it is a good one. We all know that it is of great importance to the physical system that the mental faculties be kept unclouded and unobstructed in every respect. The brain or mental organ is so intimately connected with other organs of the system, and especially the liver and heart, that you cannot affect the one without affecting the other. Every physician will tell you this. To promote health in the physical system, then, the mind should be kept clear. The tendency of the Christian religion is to do this. Hence the expressions "Clothed [with salvation] and in his right mind;" "God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind," etc., etc. Truly, then, religion promotes health by keeping the mind clear.

2. It also does it by filling the soul with joy. If you wish to preserve health in a well man and secure it in a sick one, keep the spirits animated and cheerful. All medical writers and practitioners so advise. Well, nothing else will so effectually do this as the religion of Jesus. Let the vivid pleasure beaming from the countenances of afflicted and dying christians, filled with the grace and Spirit of Christ, and the exultant shouts of the thousands of martyred saints, whose blood has been drunk by the flames of inquisitorial fires, attest the truth of this assertion. Religion, then, promotes health.

3. Another reason for assuming that it does, is the fact that it secures temperate habits. Intemperance is more deleterious to health than any and all other considerations combined. Dr. Webster truly asserted that strong drink has destroyed more lives than "wars, famine and pestilence." But the truly religious man is a temperate man. He, therefore, is more likely to be healthy than other men.

4. Religion provides a shield from gluttony, debauchery, and revelry, all of which hasten their victims to effeminacy, sorrow and affliction. Is not religion, then, a talisman of hope to those wishing to promote the wholesome interest of their systems?

5. Religion prompts its possessors to study, and conscientiously labor for the good of their health. They do it, because they know it to be a duty. The irreligious man, it is true, will, to a great extent, do the same from motives of self-interest. In many cases, however, the cravings of his lustful passions will blind his eyes to such interests, and, as a consequence, he violates the laws of nature provided by God for the preservation of health, and makes a wreck of his physical organism. Not so with him who is deeply imbued with the religion of Jesus Christ our Savior. From a consideration of duty to himself, to his fellow-men, for whose salvation and best interests his religion prompts him to desire to live, to labor, and to his God for whose glory he knows he ought to strive to protract his energies and existence, he makes conscience of studying and striving to resist every temptation to violate the laws which God in mercy has thrown around him as safeguards from physical sufferings.

Are there not many reasons, then, for believing, with the great Dr. Rush, that the religion of Jesus is promotive of health? I might give more than I have, but the above are enough. With much confidence, then, may the ministers of Christ speak of his saving grace to their fellow-men, by saying, "It shall be health to thy navel and marrow to thy bones."—Prov. 3: 8.—Central Baptist.

Drinking with the Meals.—The common practice of "washing down" the food with coffee, tea, or water, cannot be too severely condemned. If drinks are hot, they injure the coats of the stomach; if cold, they absorb heat from the stomach, and thus retard digestion. In either case, the absorbents of the stomach must be taxed to dispose of the fluids before digestion can be properly performed. Besides all this, the practice of drinking with meals affords a temptation to slight the process of mastication, which is nearly always the case with those who indulge in it.

PROUD OF HIS MOTHER.

It was a cold night in winter. The wind blew, and the snow was whirled furiously about, seeking to hide itself beneath cloaks and hoods, in the very hair of those who were out. A distinguished lecturer was to speak, and notwithstanding the storm, the villagers very generally ventured forth to hear him.

William Amnesley, buttoned up to his chin in his thick overcoat, accompanied his mother. It was difficult to walk through the fallen snow against the piercing wind, and William said to his mother:

"Couldn't you walk easier if you took my arm?"

"Perhaps I could," his mother replied, as she put her arm through his, and drew up as close as possible to him.

Together they breasted the storm, the mother and the boy, who had once been carried in her arms, but who had now grown up so tall that she could lean on his. They had not walked very far before he said:

"I am proud to-night, mother."

"Proud that you can take care of me?" she said to him with a heart gushing with tenderness.

"This is the first time you have leaned upon me," said the happy boy.

There will be few hours in that child's life of more exalted pleasure than he enjoyed that evening, even if he should live to old age, and should, in his manhood, lovingly provide for her who, in his helpless infancy, watched over him.

HOW TO KEEP OUT OF TROUBLE.

"Robert," said a gay young gentleman, "I can't tell how it is, but you always seem happy. You never get into scrapes as I do; how is it, Robert?"

Robert was a poor, but pious man. He had few earthly comforts, and although he had to brave the cold wintry weather in gathering a few sticks to make his fire, yet with his faithful little dog at his side, and Christ in his heart, he always seemed contented and happy.

"Well, young master," replied Robert, "I'll tell you how it is that I have managed to keep out of scrapes, as you call them. I have endeavored to mind this good rule, Never to go anywhere, and never do anything, if I could not first kneel down and ask God's blessing upon it—Child's World.

IS THIS ALL?

Sometimes I catch sweet glimpses of His face,
But that is all.
Sometimes He looks on me, and seems to smile,
But that is all.
Sometimes He speaks a passing word of peace,
But that is all.
Sometimes I think I hear His loving voice
Upon me call.

And is this all He meant when thus He spoke,
"Come unto me"?
Is there no deeper, more enduring rest
In Him for thee?
Is there no steadier light for thee in Him?
O, come and see!

O, come and see! O, look, and look again!
All shall be right;
O, taste His love, and see that it is good,
Thou child of night!
O, trust thou, trust thou in His grace and power,
Then all is bright.

Nay, do not wrong Him by thy heavy thoughts,
But love His love.
Do thou full justice to His tenderness,
His mercy prove;
Take Him for what he is; O, take him all,
And look above!

Then shall thy tossing soul find anchorage
And steadfast peace;
Thy love shall rest on His; thy weary doubts
Forever cease.
Thy heart shall find in Him and in his grace
Its rest and bliss!

Christ and his love shall be thy blessed all
For evermore!
Christ and his light shall shine on all thy ways
For evermore!
Christ and his peace shall keep thy troubled soul
For evermore! —H. Bonar.

THE SEVEN TIMES, OR 2520 YEARS.

S. HALL.

It is lamentably true that ever since the expulsion of the first pair from the garden, alienation from God has been characteristic of our race. Every age and generation has been marked by about the same spirit of waywardness and insubordination. Even the Jewish nation, who for a special purpose were called and separated from the other nations, and to whom he gave such temporal blessings, was no exception. As a nation they forgot his mercies, they provoked his Spirit, they broke his covenant or agreement, they served idols, they shed innocent blood; for all which his anger was often kindled against them, till at length he brought upon them a chastisement for their sins which should continue for a period of seven times, as, earlier in their history he had declared by Moses he would do, in case of their prolonged disobedience.

I am aware that some have doubted whether the seven times in Lev. 26, are symbolic, denoting a period of 2520 years in which they should have the pride of their power broken, and they be scattered among the nations; and it seems that the principal reason for their doubt is, that after Moses had declared that this punishment would be inflicted if they persisted in their sins, it was three times repeated. But according to ancient or modern forms of promulgating laws and penalties, there is nothing at all unusual in this. And as this chastisement was not to be inflicted until they had continued for a long time refractory (several centuries, as the sequel shows), it would seem not strange that Moses, conceiving that the many judgments that would come upon them in the meantime for their sins might not reform them, should say to them from the Lord—"And if ye will not be reformed by me by these things, . . . if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins;" and though repeated, yet referring to the same punishment; that is, one continuous punishment of dispersion, oppression, famine, the sword, etc., of seven times duration.

Mr. Shimeall says—"That the passages in question are but a repetition of the same period, is evident from numerous scriptural precedents, in which a repetition of the same thing is most unquestionably employed to express but one period or one event. For instance: seven years of famine are revealed to Pharaoh by a repetition of dreams, which Joseph, in interpreting to him, declared were one, and added, 'and for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice, it is because the thing is established of God, and God will shortly bring it to pass.' The seventy years predicted captivity of the Jews, was reiterated four or five times by different prophets, and no one pretends that on that account it was to be as often repeated. And so Peter's vision of the great sheet let down from heaven, was three times repeated to him, without any one ever supposing that he had three separate visions. And the apostle John, under different forms, repeats the mystical 1260 days or years of Daniel four times over; and in the twentieth chapter of the Apocalypse, the one thousand years are repeated six times; when no one has ever pretended that he referred, in either case, to more than one period."

That the seven times denote the length and not the intensity of their punishment, seems clear; as we do not find that it increased so much in severity, but that, at the commencement of this alleged period, they would then be abandoned to the calamities from which they were aforetime so often delivered. A period of just half this length, or three times and a half—1260 years (this method of computing time is not claimed to be Jewish nor Chaldean, nor any other but God's, the same which he also hath fulfilled,) is afterwards given by Daniel, during which the church or true Israel would be specially subjected to a wicked persecuting power, on account of their firm adherence to the truth; and the angel seems to recognize both these periods in answer to the question—"How long to the end of these wonders?" viz.," That it shall be for a time, two times and a half; and when he shall have completed the dispersion [or scattered the power] of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." As if he had said—The time reaching to the end of these wonders will be sufficiently long to include the noted career of the little horn power already predicted, but whose rise will not be for some centuries yet; and when that period of time, two times and a half allotted to him, has passed, the end of the wonders will be nearly reached, but not quite; there will still remain to be completed that longer period of seven times, earlier given, in which He who liveth forever and ever will accomplish the threatened chastisement of dispersing or scattering the Jewish nation; then all these wonders will be finished. Said Moses—"And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from one end of the earth even unto the other." And the angel's declaration is, that at the completion of this scattering all these wonders will be finished. And with this seems to agree the saying of our Lord in his day respecting the Jews, that they should be led captive by all nations, and their city should be trodden down of the Gentiles till the times of the Gentiles should expire.

If, therefore, these seven times were to reach to the end of the wonders, and also to the close of the times of the Gentiles, we must, if we would know when that is, either inquire when they commenced, or else learn in some other way when the times of the Gentiles close; for it is at once apparent that the 2300 years measure the time of Gentile rule, till the sanctuary is cleansed, and 6000 years the time for the earth to continue under the curse, and 2520 years the subversion of the Jewish nation from a given point in their history to the end of the wonders in Dan. 12, they must all end at one time. For the first brings us to the to the deliverance of God's people from the oppressive and tyrannical governments of the Gentiles, and the release and purification of their inheritance from the curse. The second, to earth's jubilee or season of general joy and rejoicing; and the church has looked forward to this, more than to any other, as the time when it should enjoy its promised rest from toil and captivity. The third includes the time of trouble, out of which those written in the book are saved; the awaking and rewarding with everlasting life many sleeping in the earth; the shining of the wise as the brightness of the firmament; and the close of these three epochs is also marked by the punishment and overthrow of the wicked; thus making the events closing each period essentially the same, as each are connected with the establishment of God's kingdom on earth.

But let the question be asked, When did this long and final chastisement of the Jewish nation commence? Mr. Shimeall says, confidently, in 3480 A. M., but admits that this is required, that if 2520 be added, it will make 6000; thus making the seven times end with that period. It must be admitted, too, that this date is required that the seven times may end with the 2300 years; and that they do date from that year is probable, as that was the twelfth of the reign of Manasseh king of Judah; and that it was in his reign that they lost their independence, and the entire nation was rejected of God, the sacred writers clearly show.

Thirty-five years before this, in the sixth of Hezekiah, "the king of Assyria did carry away Israel [a part of the nation, the ten tribes] unto Assyria, . . . because they obeyed not the voice of the Lord their God, but transgressed his covenant, and all that Moses the servant of the Lord commanded, and would not hear them nor do them." But Judah and Benjamin, because of Hezekiah their king "who did right in the sight of the Lord," were not rejected at that time; the Lord defended them, and sent an angel who smote in one night one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians. It was in the reign of Manasseh who succeeded him, that the Lord withdrew his favor and protection from Judah and Jerusalem, not, however, that they were then carried captive to Babylon, except Manasseh; that did not take place for a considerable time; but for their wickedness the Lord then utterly rejected them as a nation. "And Manasseh seduced them to do more evil than did the nations whom the Lord destroyed. . . . Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another; besides his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin, in doing evil in the sight of the Lord. . . . Manasseh made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, and to do worse than the heathen whom the Lord had destroyed before the children of Israel. And the Lord spake to Manasseh, and to the people, but they would not hearken."

Their wickedness was of such notoriety that "the Lord spake by his servants the prophets, saying, Because Manasseh king of Judah hath done these abominations, and hath done wickedly above all that the Ammonites did, and hath made Judah also to sin with his idols; therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle."

And now the Lord brought against them the Assyrians under Esarhaddon, the last of the Assyrian kings, who took Manasseh, and bound him with fetters, and carried him away captive. That this, rather than when they were exiled to Babylon, was the time when God rejected them, is plain from Jeremiah's writings, as all will see by the burden of his message; and he began to prophesy in the thirteenth of Josiah, A. M. 3538, thirty years before their exile; and Nehemiah after citing the many deliverances God formerly wrought for his people, they as often casting his law behind their backs, dates the distress and trouble that had come upon them, from the times of the kings of Assyria.

Manasseh repented (but not Judah) and was restored to his kingdom; but he and they who succeeded him until the captivity, were held tributary, and though Josiah when he became king put away all the idols and abominations that were in the land, that he might perform all the words of the law, yet "the Lord turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah because of all the provocations of Manasseh. And the Lord said, I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel." And when finally the king of Babylon came up against Judah to destroy it, it was declared to be "according to the word of the Lord which he spake by his servants the prophets, that this came upon Judah to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh and for the innocent blood that he shed, which the Lord would not pardon." One of these prophets was Jeremiah, by whom the Lord said "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people; Cast them out of my sight. And I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, because of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem."

So much then is evident. Further, the prophet Isaiah told Ahaz, who began to reign A. M. 3424, that within sixty-five years Ephraim (the principal of the ten tribes, and the prophet Hosea had said that Israel and Ephraim and Judah should fall together) should be broken that it be not a people. We cannot learn just when this prediction was made, but from the first of Ahaz' reign to A. M. 3480, was fifty-six years. Isaiah did not say in just sixty-five years, but within that time; and though we are not by this pointed definitely to the year 3480, we certainly are to about that time; and when the Scriptures are so conclusive that the events connected with the close of these seven times concur, or synchronize, with the events which close the 2300 years, what shall we say? As it is clear and undoubted that our A. D. commenced A. M. 4126, it follows that A. M. 3480 was B. C 646; and the seven times commencing at that date, terminate in 1875 (as 646 and 1875 added, diminished by one, make 2520), the same year in which terminate the 2300 and 6000 years.

I believe there is a harmony here that is not the result of mere accident. And I do not doubt the correctness of these dates. Mr. D N. Lord, some twenty-five years ago wrote—"The first Advent was, according to the best-settled chronological data, about 4120 years from Creation." That is, in the year 4121; 4120 full years having passed; and a further investigation of the whole subject most conclusively evinces this to be correct, though our era does not date from this the true era, but from the fifth year after Christ's birth, in 4126.

But how was this "best-settled chronological data" arrived at, except by reckoning the time given in fragments in the Bible, from the Creation to the first Advent? And since both the learned and unlearned are able to do this without difficulty, it certainly seems to be a good foundation for a person's faith. The doctrine of the restitution is altogether sublime and glorious, and I believe that the times and seasons that relate to it are revealed to us that we may be ready for the blessed era. Dr. Goodwin, of two hundred years ago said—"The only use of our knowing these things is, to move us to prepare for them."

A GOD READY TO PARDON.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Thou art a God ready to pardon."—Neh. 9: 17.

Wonderful statement! Glorious truth! Ready to pardon? Yes, ready to pardon. What, after I have sinned so many times, and trampled his laws under my feet? after I have resolved, and promised, and fallen? after I have grieved his tender Spirit, crucified his Son afresh, and brought a reproach on his cause? after I have been turned out of church, and my brethren have lost confidence in me? Is it possible? Can it be? Will he pardon now? Yes, he is waiting and watching for your return.

Do you ask for evidence? See it in the provision he has made for the exercise of pardon. Behold the Lamb of God stretched on yonder cross! What does it mean? Is he dying to atone for his own sins? No. "I find no fault in this man," was the statement of the Roman judge. He was holy, harmless, and undefiled. No guile was ever found in his mouth. Why is it, then, that he endures such agony and shame? Ah! sinner, this is all for thee. "God hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." He "commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Can you doubt it?

See it again in the invitations of his word. Would you invite your friends to come and dine with you, if you did not love them, and were not ready or willing to receive them? Think not, then, that God is trifling when he sends his invitations to you. Listen to him now, and see if he is not ready to pardon and to feast you upon his bounties. "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land." Listen to him again, and take courage—"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." Is not this enough to convince you of his willingness to pardon?

But look again at the examples of his pardoning mercy. If he were ready to pardon such as David, Paul, Peter, Mary Magdalene, and many of the vilest, is he unwilling to pardon you? Behold yonder prodigal coming across the fields in tattered garments. How wretched and sinful he looks. Surely the father will not receive him. Ah! see the father running to meet him. Behold the embrace, the kiss, the joy. Bring the best robe, kill the fatted calf, and let us be merry, for my son was lost and is found, was dead and is alive again. Was ever love like this? See the sons and daughters of woe throng around the Savior. How he heals them all and bids them "go in peace and sin no more." Hear from his lips the tender, loving words—"Come unto me, . . and I will give you rest." "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." Will you not then come and find peace and joy such as the world cannot give? Come just as you are—wretched, starving, helpless, polluted sinner, and Jesus Christ will make you whole. Thy pardon is signed and sealed. Wilt thou not accept it? Jesus has paid it all. Look away from self to him, and find a remedy for all your wounds. On yonder throne in heaven I see him waving the crown of life. Will you not come and wear it? Come, and live forever. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon."

MAN'S CREATION.

H. E. PARRETT.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Gen. 2: 7.

This is the original record of the creation of man in the beginning, and as written under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. It cannot be gainsayed nor refuted successfully. There it stands defying the ingenuity and wisdom of the world to alter the fact. Human vanity and pride must come down to the conclusion that "we are dust," and animated with "the breath of life," are "living souls."

"Man, formed of the dust of the ground." Man's whole organism is of "dust"; his bones, his muscles, his nerves, all the tissues of his body, his internal organs, the brain itself, the organs of sight, of hearing, of smelling—man's whole constitution is of "the dust of the ground." How marvelous the transforming power of God, who has created every part of the human body, so diversified in character, of one material. And not only so, but "out of the ground formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air" (Gen. 2: 19); though "all flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds." 1 Cor. 15. Modern chemistry by analysis proves the above scriptural declaration to be true, and confirms the word of God. "The human body submitted to this test proves to be a combination of carbon, hydrogen, lime, and all those materials of which dust is composed." If we need further proof, the results of death in the dissolution and decomposition of the body are a confirmation. The archaic phrase "dust thou art," is verified with all the sad facts connected with the departed dead under the one sentence following the original transgression—"Unto dust shalt thou return." Here is a three-fold proof demonstrating man's constitution beyond all possible cavil.

"Breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (lives.) The plural noun is in the original. Not to intimate a twofold nature in man, or man a dual-being, as maintained; but because it is that "breath of life" (lives) which is common to all living, breathing animals, "all in whose nostrils is the breath of life." Gen. 7: 22. "For they have all one breath." Eccl. 3. On the dissolution of man in death, the scriptural declaration is verified—"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. 12. All that is constituted of "dust" returns to dust. That which is superadded to "man," "the breath of life," i. e., "the breath of the spirit of life," does not return to dust, but "unto God who gave it. Not in conscious entity; for there is no conscious entity in "the breath of life; the ruah, which God breathed into man's nostrils. If there is, as it leaves the body in death, then there must be in "the breath of life" of all living, breathing creatures; for "they have all one breath" (ruah.) Eccl. 3. "Man became a living soul." "Man"—"soul." When alive, "a living soul"; when dead, "a dead soul." Not an "immortal soul"; but simply "a living soul," like all living animals: "Every beast of the earth." Gen. 1.

"The phrase 'living soul' is repeatedly applied to the inferior order of animals; it would seem to imply the same, therefore, when spoken of beasts."—Prof. Bush. "A general term to express all creatures endued with animal life."—A. Clarke. "A generic term for living creature."—Prof. Stuart. "The idea is that God infused a portion of himself, of his own divinity, into the human body. If the proof is sought in the phrase 'breath of life' and 'living soul,' these do not prove anything, for both of them are applied, in the first chapters of Genesis, to brutes, and prove the same things concerning them."—Dr. Bagnal. "Adam became a 'living soul,' that is, a living man."—Columbian Bible foot-note. It seems as if the most proper idea resulting from these words is, that Adam became a living man."—Union Bible Dic. "A general term for all living animals, on the land and in the sea."—Bible Union Translators' foot-note.

Against all this astounding proof, men are trying to maintain what is utterly and hopelessly impossible, and they are destined to fail, to their eternal confusion; and that is, "the dual nature of man," or that man is a "dual being," "possessed of a body, and an immortal soul," or an "immaterial spirit" which survives the death of the body, and exists in consciousness independent of the body. The discussion upon this subject has brought down the argument to a very small point with the more intelligent and advanced advocates; and this will be seen by the following extract from the work of Prof. Dods—"Immortality Triumphant." It should be known that Dr. John B. Dods has written on the "Philosophy of Mesmerism," "Philosophy of Electrical Psychology," and has many other works now extant; besides, was invited to give a course of lectures before the members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Washington, for his great learning and eloquence.

The force of his argument will be seen to greater advantage when I quote the following Scripture, which lays the whole subject matter before us—"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall find it. For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matt. 16: 25, 26. Dr. Adam Clarke says:—"On what authority many have translated the word psuche in verse 25 life, and in verse 26 soul, I know not; but am certain it means life in both places."

"I extend my arguments," says Dr. Dods, "to the whole animal and vegetable creation, and include them in the vast and boundless theme of immortality. I desire it to be distinctly understood that whenever I use the term life, mind, or spirit, I mean one and the same thing, differing only in the degrees of intelligence, sensation, or motion in the individual existence to which I may apply them. I hold all life, whether animal or vegetable, to be a species of mind [the italics are his] in some one of the ever varied links composing the vast chain of being, and consequently immortal.

If mind is not an immortal substance or being, but the result of an organized brain, then death is certainly the end of man, and human immortality is but a visionary dream!"

Yes, here is the issue: "Mind [i. e., life] is not an immortal substance or being." This is a thing which can never be proved. Our argument founded on Scriptural declaration is "triumphant" above his "immortality triumphant."

But he proceeds: "This is making mind to be the effort of an organized brain, even as motion is the effect of the mechanism of a watch. Destroy the mechanism of the watch, and the motion is gone. Destroy the organism of the brain, and mind is no more! Surely this is a contemplation of gloom as profound as the end is melancholy."

Of course it is; for death is a dread calamity which has befallen us as a race for sin; and without hope in God, and the resurrection, we might well despair. But we do not despair now "as those who have no hope." Thank God, Jesus lives; and because he lives we shall live also. He is risen the first-fruits of them that sleep. But is not the brain the organ of thought? If it is not, why do we have to carry about such a quantity in our heads? If it is, then with its destruction the mind must cease. "In that very day his thoughts perish." He still remarks: "As life therefore possesses an independent existence, as an organized substance of exceeding subtlety, so it must be the cause of organism."

Where would such a thought lead, carried to its legitimate conclusions? The life of an animal, and of a plant, or vegetable, is its own creator! Furthermore, "the life" of "a vegetable," and "all animals," he regards as an "immortal," "organized substance." Then when a vegetable dies, its life exists as an entity with "a degree," as he says, of "intelligence!" When any animal dies, as a horse, dog, cat, serpent, worm, insect, "the life" exists as "an organized substance!" Of course he, and all others, are driven to this very point; for "life" is "the soul," and the soul is the life of any animal.

All we have to do, then, is to determine whether the life of anything living is an "immortal, conscious, organized substance, of exceeding subtlety," or not, whether in the body or out. If it is, then we may glory in "immortality triumphant," without a Redeemer, and all living animate existences being "immortal, will survive the destruction of the corporeal fabric, triumph over the ruins of death, pass into a future state, clothed in an electrical body, and expand and brighten in mental and moral capacity without end." pp. 39–41, 48, 88.

Surely, what strange fancies will not men take up with when they war against the word of God, and in their boasted wisdom reject "the foolishness of God," which "is wiser than men." Give me the Bible still, rather than human philosophy, and the vain reasonings of men; and give me the blessed hope of "a better resurrection," through a glorified coming Redeemer, at the last day, to die no more.

WHAT IS YOUR HOPE WORTH?

Are you expecting the Lord? Are you living in this expectation? Is it a deep seated, abiding, cherished hope? Is it a hope that tells upon your character, your life, your daily actings in public or private, your opinions, your whole man? Does it quicken you? Does it purify you? Does it keep you separate from the world? Does it keep you calm in the midst of earth's most exciting events, or most untoward changes? Does it give you a new view of history as well as prophecy? Does it show you the vanity of time's politics, human schemes of reform and earth-regeneration, the sinfulness as well as hollowness of man's principles of mere expediency, by which he would govern the world without a Bible, without a Christ and without a God?

Let you belief in the Lord's coming be a calm, steadfast, earnest, unfluctuating belief that influences your whole being, and spreads its glorious brightness over your whole life, turning all its shadows into sunshine, and making you to see a meaning, a purpose, and an order in the most untoward events, the most disorderly and confused of earth's scenes. Let your expectation of the Lord's coming be a calm and healthy one; not one that excites, but one that tranquilizes; not one that unfits for duty, but one that nerves you more firmly for it; not one that paralyzes exertion, but one that invigorates you for it; not one that makes you indifferent to present duty, but one that makes you doubly in earnest about everything that your hand findeth to do; not one that stops liberality, and prayer, and work, but one that increases all these a hundred fold; not one that dwells exclusively on the future's dark side,—the judgments that are at hand,—but one that realizes the glory and the joy of Messiah's approaching victory and triumphant reign.—Dr. H. Bonar.

ELIJAH AND THE WIDOW'S SON.

J. W. TAYLOR.

In 1 Kings 17, we have the record of the prophet Elijah raising the son of a widow; and in verse twenty-two it is stated—"And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah, and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived." This is thought to teach the immortality of the soul and its consciousness in death, from the fact that it left the child when he died, and came back again when he revived. But not a word is said about the soul being immortal, or of its being conscious in death; all this is assumed.

The first impressions made upon our minds are the hardest to be eradicated, and especially if those impressions were received from our parents. When we come to read the book of God for ourselves, we are apt to read it through them; and hence, whatever doctrine has been early inculcated, we can read on almost every page of the Bible. So if we have had the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul impressed upon our minds, when we read such passages as the above, we think, of course, our position is vindicated. But if some heathen philosopher had not put the doctrine into words, who would? God through a long line of prophets has taught his people the doctrines and principles that he desired them to believe and practise; but not once through them did he ever mention the doctrine under consideration.

Whenever the prophets speak of the dead, they speak of them as being unconscious. They never mention the "immortal soul" once; they never once speak of "soaring away" to "worlds unknown," or of writhing in the agonies of hell. Why is it so? If the doctrine be true, why did not God teach us the fact through his inspired prophets, instead of heathen philosophers?

I asked a man the question not long since, why it was that the doctrine was not mentioned in the Bible, if it was true? He replied that he thought it was so plainly taught that it did not need to be mentioned! This, thought I, is the most logical conclusion I have ever seen drawn. Let orthodoxy ever hereafter console itself with the happy thought that its darling theory is so plainly taught that it does not need a single declaration from the Bible to prove it; does not need a single demonstration from philosophy or common sense to vindicate it. Of how much value such a theory must be; and what a consolation to those who hold it; for if it did need a declaration from the word of God, or a demonstration from science or philosophy to prove it, it would remain unproved eternally.

But it seems that some are dissatisfied without a demonstration of some kind; so they go to work to give one thus—"The soul is a simple essence, invisible, without interior or exterior surface, intangible, uncompounded, can not come in contact with matter, incomprehensible, incorporeal, cannot be extended nor distended, indissoluble, indestructible, and consequently immortal"! I have ransacked the misty shades of heathen mythology, and scanned the labored arguments of Platonic philosophy, and never did I find a profounder demonstration of the ghostology of modern times, than the one above presented.

But while it is so plainly (?) demonstrated that the soul is immortal, it has to be admitted that it cannot perform a single function without the aid of the physical organs. It cannot see, they tell us, without the organs of sight; it cannot hear, without the organs of hearing; it cannot speak, without the organs of speech. These facts we know; for a blind man informs us he cannot see; and a deaf man cannot hear, nor a dumb man speak. All these are dependent on the physical organs, although they are attributed to the soul; thus showing that while the soul stays in this tenement of clay, it is quite a dependent creature, and cannot well get along without the physical organism. And "thought" and "intellect," although attributed to the soul, are also dependent on the physical organs. For intelligence is manifested just in proportion to the development of the organ of the brain. Hence we see one man possessing a greater degree of intellect than another, even down to the idiot, who possesses no more than the brute. Also "thought" may be suspended by a pressure on the brain.

And now we inquire, If the soul is dependent on the physical organism for thought, intellect, sight, hearing, and speaking, while connected with matter, by what principle can it be demonstrated that it can ever perform these functions without the physical organs? I aver there is not a single principle known in philosophy or common sense, by which such a demonstration can be made.

But to return to the text. If it is a fact that the soul of the child was conscious, and enjoying the bliss of heaven, how unjust it was in Elijah to call him back, or pray him out of heaven. To be sure, nature will "mourn departed friends," notwithstanding it is supposed they are happy beyond the stars; but it surely would have been much better for the prophet to have consoled the bereaved Zarephathite with the assurance that her child was now an angel, basking in the sunlight of unsullied glory, than to have prayed him back to mingle again with the evils of earth, and perhaps stumble and go down to ruin at last. Orthodoxy has but little confidence in the papish notion of praying souls out of purgatory, but surely it looks more merciful than to pray them out of heaven.

The word here rendered "soul" is nephesh, the Hebrew word for "life," and is thus rendered in many places in the Old Testament. By comparing Gen. 2: 7; Ps. 104: 29; 146: 4; Eccl. 3: 19–21, and 9: 5, 6, together, it will be seen that all that was added to man at his creation was "the breath of life," and that when it is taken from him he becomes unconscious. In the seventeenth verse of the chapter under consideration we read—"And it came to pass after these things that the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick, and his sickness was so sore, that there was no breath left in him." The "breath of life," which God added to man, and which causes him to live and act, is now taken from him, and he is dead. Elijah prays for it to come back again, and the Lord hears his prayer, and the life of the child comes back again, and he revives.

CHURCH DIVISIONS.

The Calamity.

A. A. PHELPS.

1. They are detrimental to piety. In his letter to the Galatians, Paul reckons "variance," "emulations," and "strife" among the "works of the flesh." To the Corinthians he deals out the following merited rebuke—"Whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions; are ye not carnal and walk as men? For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?" Christ is the "Prince of peace." The "children of God" were to be known as "peace-makers," and not as mischief-brewers and general disturbers. The spirit of strife, therefore, savors more of carnality than of Christ. As individuals, we have often proved how easily the tender Spirit of God is grieved by indulging too freely in the spirit of contention. It has chilled our love, checked our zeal, and been greatly damaging to our spirituality. The hot-bed of strife is unfavorable to the development of the christian graces. Church-members who are always contending with each other, are poorly prepared to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." The melting, drawing, uniting spirit is characteristic of Christ's religion; but the chilling, driving, dividing spirit is eminently characteristic of the devil's religion. When partyism comes in piety goes out. They cannot coalesce. Quarreling churches are never noted for the depth of their devotion. When bitter contention turns the eyes from Christ, spiritual declension is the inevitable result. Piety pines where pugilism prospers.

2. They are fatal to usefulness. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Ps. 133: 1. If unity is "good and pleasant," division must be evil and undesirable. For this reason Paul exhorts Christians to "avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law: for they are unprofitable and vain." Titus 3: 9. Life is too short and time too precious to justify our engaging in what is "unprofitable and vain." The apostle is so deeply impressed with the magnitude of this evil, that he urges us to shun not only the criminal result, but also its personal instigators. "Mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them." Rom. 16: 17. Why are they to be avoided? Because "where strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." Jas. 3: 16. Every body knows that genuine Christianity produces better fruit. What confidence can the world repose in a church that is marked by intestine feuds and party strifes? Common sinners instinctively decide that such a church needs to be converted itself, before attempting to convert anybody else. And the decision is eminently in harmony with good sense. It is hardly worth while to press the subject of religion upon the attention of men, unless they can be converted to a higher standard of moral purity than many jangling churches exhibit.

But besides the bad example of a contentious spirit, look at the terrible waste of energy involved. It is sad enough to see Protestantism divided into different denominations, according to the various doctrinal, practical and ritualistic issues that have arisen. It is sadder still that these denominations should be divided and sub-divided into petty schools and puny sects, which often have more to do in perpetuating the passions and whims of certain man-worshipers, than they do in representing great ideas and vital principles. But the saddest fact of all is, that the members composing these different sects should have so little of Christ and so much of self, that they often spend more time and energy in demolishing each other, than they do in earnest gospel efforts to rescue perishing sinners from the flames that are soon to be kindled. What sorry evidence we give of that yearning solicitude for a ruined race which every disciple of Jesus ought to possess, when we allow our attention to be diverted and our sympathies to be dried up by a mere matter of opinion. Alas for the day when a church lets in the devil of division to such an extent that its members are mainly employed in firing into each other, instead of turning their batteries against the common foe! With such an expenditure of moral forces, there is neither time nor disposition to wage an aggressive war against the hosts of sin and Satan. How sad the waste of energy—how deplorable the barter of time—how terrible the destruction of usefulness—how unspeakable the CALAMITY, attaching to church divisions!

CALIFORNIA PARAGRAPHS.

We are now (March 31st) holding meetings in San Jose (pronounced San Hōsa), in the noted Santa Clara Valley, about fifty miles south of San Francisco. The Santa Clara Valley is some fifty miles long and twenty miles wide; surrounded by mountains from two thousand to four thousand feet high, covered with beautiful flowers, which are sometimes so abundant as to change the color of the mountains to the eye of a beholder at the distance of ten miles. California is noted for its beautiful and abundant wild flowers, which grow most luxuriantly; and also for its great quantity of nice fruits. The Santa Clara Valley is considered the garden spot of the world. Those who have traveled extensively in different parts of the world say they have found no place equal to this. The whole valley is like a rich garden, and at the present time looks like an immense fruit orchard interspersed with beautiful flowers. We never before saw such handsome orchards of peach, pear, plum and cherry trees; apricots, extensive vineyards, strawberry beds, fig and almond trees, most of which are now in full bloom, and look promising. The fruits here grow very large and fair. We saw strawberries in the open field as large as the end of your thumb. They are expected to be ripe in two weeks. Here strawberries are reckoned by the tun. We never saw such nice fields of them before.

This delightful Santa Clara Valley was formerly occupied by the Spanish Catholic Jesuits; and there are numbers still remaining, some of whom are wealthy. They have superior schools and colleges here, where many Protestants receive their education. They took possession of this valley over seventy years since. In the Spanish language "San" and "Santa" mean the same as the word "saint;" "San" being applied to a man, and "Santa" to a woman. San Jose (Hoza) would be Saint Joseph, in English. Santa Clara, St. Clarissa. San Francisco, St. Francis. They named prominent things after some of their saints; hence we find "San" and "Santa" very common where the Jesuits had possession. They still have a strong influence in San Jose and Santa Clara, on account of their colleges. San Jose is the county seat of Santa Clara Co., and contains some ten thousand inhabitants. They have a very nice court house, elegantly finished. A fine building for the State Normal School is now being erected in the centre of a public square, given by the city for that purpose. This valley is specially adapted to make homes for wealthy men, who wish to have a paradise around them, and feast on delicious fruits of their own raising. The farming land, away from the city, is worth $100 and $200 an acre. They sometimes cut five crops from one plowing and sowing. After the first year's sowing, the wheat will self-sow the land for four successive years, and the fifth year, they sometimes reap thirty-five bushels to the acre. Each year they harrow in the self-sown seed. Farming in the valley is carried on upon a grand scale. With a gang of plows, and a team of four or six horses, they plow from five to seven acres a day. With Pitts' thirty-six inch Separator, and twelve horse power threshing machine, they have run through three thousand and ten bushels of wheat in fourteen hours. In one hour they threshed two hundred and ninety-five and a half bushels. One machine threshed sixty-five thousand bushels in one season. One man has a dairy consisting of between three and four thousand cows, in Marin Co., Cal.

They do not feed their cattle, horses, nor sheep, in the winter, or any season of the year, unless they are kept from the fields by labor or for other purposes. Beef cattle are not stall-fed. Beefsteak is not more than half as high as in Boston. One can live here as cheaply as in the eastern cities; but we do not think it is any better place for a poor man than in New England, or the western states. The land here is too high for the poor man to purchase.

We never saw before such handsome weeping willows as grow in this valley. They have now a very handsome, brilliant green color, and their weeping branches hang quite to the ground, being from ten to twenty-five feet in length, looking like leafy cords hung around the tree in rich profusion. Trees, shrubs, and all vegetables, grow here very rapidly, but the Australian Gum tree surpasses all. We took pains to gather some facts from a gentleman who had several. We examined one set out seven years since, which was then about three feet high, and half an inch in diameter, which is now estimated to be seventy feet high, and measures four feet and six inches in circumference. We measured it with our own hands. These trees taper very gradually from the base. They are shaped much like slender pines. Many are being set out to ornament the grounds, but the cedar cones surpass all others in ornamental beauty for a door-yard, or park. Many of them are ten or twelve feet in diameter at the base, and are kept trimmed in the shape of a boy's top, or a sugar-loaf. Their foliage is very dense. These cones are quite common. No handsome yard is considered complete without them. They abound also in the public parks.

Santa Clara is three miles from San Jose, and the two are connected by a pleasant street called the "Alameda," or covered way. It is said that in 1799 the Spanish Jesuits planted three rows of willows by the side of this street, connecting Santa Clara and San Jose, which in time grew to form a beautifully shaded and arched way for carriages and footmen. The third row of willows was for the purpose of making a shady foot-path. A large number of those trees still remain; but, like some other old things, have lost much of their beauty. It is proposed to set out a new lot of trees, and make the street more than ever inviting. Besides the other interesting trees in this valley, we find the almond trees, fig trees, olive trees, and palm trees.

The climate of this valley is very healthy, and for pleasantness is probably unsurpassed by any other spot in the world. The temperature is very even the year round. In the winter, they have warm air from the South, and but little fire is needed. There is very little wind during the winter months. All seems quiet and calm. When the summer weather comes on, the nights are cool, and the people use about the same bedding as in the winter. By nine or ten o'clock in the morning, a cool, refreshing breeze—most delightful—commences, and continues till towards evening, during the summer, almost with clock-work regularity. The atmosphere is very clear and invigorating. The mountain sides, now visible from my window, are said to be eight miles away, and fifteen miles to their summits; yet I can hardly be made to believe that they are over two and a half miles off because they are seen so distinctly.

The only thing lacking here is rain. During the winter months they receive their rain for the whole year. "The rainy season," as it is here called, would remind one of our New England April showers. It will rain for an hour or two, and then the sun will come out with a charming smile. During the past winter they have not had their usual amount of rain; consequently, it is expected that the wheat crop will be a failure. The California wheat is said to be the best in the world. In consequence of the dry summers, they are enabled to gather it in the nicest order. When they have plenty of rain during the winter and spring months, there is probably no spot in the world where farmers can do better than in the Santa Clara Valley. They seldom have rain from April till late in autumn. During the dry season, vegetation looks very desolate. Many of the wealthy farmers have wind-mills attached to pumps, which raise water from artesian wells sufficient to afford much relief to the thirsty trees and vegetables; but outside of the influence of these wells, autumn fields usually present a very sad appearance to a farmer's eye. This year it is expected that the wheat crop will be a failure, and be cut for feed, thus producing about one fourth the usual value of a good crop of wheat. There is a good fruit prospect.

While at San Jose, we called on Sr. Smith, the widow of Dr. Smith, of Me. She is pleasantly situated with her daughter, and still loves the "blessed hope," taking an active part in our meetings. We also had very agreeable interviews with Bro. and Sr. D. D. Reed, at their home in Santa Clara. He was taken sick at San Diego, and came home to recover his health. He is now nearly well. His faithful labors have been blest on the Pacific coast. He purposes to remain here and continue to preach the gospel of the kingdom. We also formed a pleasant acquaintance with Bro. H. H. Hendricks and M. M. Norton, who have preached among those known as "Campbellites;" but they have embraced the Bible teaching on the state of the dead, the coming of Christ, and the destruction of the wicked, which has resulted in their separation from the church with which they were connected. They assisted us in our meetings at San Jose, and so did members of other churches. The interest continued to increase till the close. The last evening, between twenty and thirty rose for prayers. The people were very urgent to have us remain longer; and we felt sorry that our arrangements would not permit. We had two quite severe shocks of earthquakes during the progress of our last meeting, causing many to rush out of the house much terrified. No special damage occurred. We thought of the time foretold, when the Lord will arise to shake the earth as it has never yet been shaken.

Monday morning, April 3d, we returned to San Francisco, and had two more excellent meetings in the afternoon and evening. The interest seemed to be as good as ever. These were among our best meetings in the city. The truth and light are still spreading, causing the lovers of Jesus to rejoice as they have never done before. Eighty spoke after the sermon, and, as usual, some twenty rose for prayers. The work is still onward. To-day, April 4th, we are to go again to Vallejo to spend three evenings and then return to San Francisco. We may go to Nevada, Cal., next week.

WORTH KNOWING.—We clipped the following from the San Francisco Daily Examiner, April 3d, 1871:—

"EVANGELICAL ADVENTISTS.—We have received the annexed communication all the way from the Hub. We lay it before our readers for the benefit of all interested:—

Boston, 59 East Brookline street,
March 24th, 1871.

To the Editor of the Examiner:—Dear Sir: With this note, I mail you two copies of the organ of our body, the Advent Herald, the oldest prophetic journal in America, and a copy of the 'Faith of Evangelical Adventists.' Materialism being introduced into our ranks has divided us, the largest part siding with that view. But the original body has shown its disfellowship with the error in adding to the original name. Adventist, the term 'Evangelical.' This was done in General Conference in 1858. As we are ignored by the materialistic portion, I think it just, at this time, to acquaint you with these facts, which you will use as you think the cause of truth demands. Respectfully, C. CUNNINGHAM,
Pastor of the Evangelical Advent Church, Boston, Mass."

Comment is not needed, as the text is very simple, and easy to comprehend.

CHINESE THEOLOGY.

Among the Chinese we see the effects of a belief in the immortality of the soul. Mr. Moule, who has resided several years in China, says:—

"They believe every one has three souls. At death one of these passes to judgment, one remains in the family shrine, and the other goes with the corpse to the grave. These spirits require food and clothing; and this want is to be met by burning gold and silver paper imitations of money. The spirits of those not buried, wander about in misery and become ghost-beggars; and, to prevent annoyance from this source, it is said $150,000,000 are annually paid in all the empire to one called 'the King of Beggars.' Forbidding such worship, Christianity is charged with perpetuating the misery of the dead. It seems the Chinese also have faith in a purgatory—a most lucrative mine to their priesthood, as to the Roman Catholic, and furnishing a sort of bridge between them."

The more we understand heathen theology and the results of believing that man has an immortal soul, the more we are satisfied that it is Satan's crowning doctrine; and that the terrible error should be exposed and rejected by all the friends of Jesus. It is the great root of heresy; the foundation-stone of all false systems of religion. Let every one remember that the words soul and spirit, when applied to man, are not once qualified by such words as "immortal," "everlasting," "undying," "endless," or any other equivalent words. What is not taught in the Bible cannot be a Bible doctrine. The immortality of the soul or spirit is no where taught in the sacred Scriptures. Then why believe it, and continue its defense?

CHINESE CLEANLINESS.

The Chinese are noted for a want of cleanliness in their dwellings, though there are, no doubt, some exceptions. Their rooms are small and crowded. They seem to take life easily, and are contented with very plain and simple fare. It costs them but little to live. The following is from a San Francisco paper:

"Ross Browne says the highest aristocracy of Pekin, so far as the essentials of comfort and cleanliness are concerned, do not live in a style much better than that of a Chinese hog-butcher. His statement is confirmed by that of Mr. Sinclair, British Consul at the port of Foo-chow-foo, who has made a long report to his Government on the subject of British and foreign trade with China, having special reference to the practicability of the grand introduction of English cottons and woolens into the Chinese market. Mr. Sinclair says that the heavier garments of the Chinese are worn for generations without renewal, while one washing a season suffices for a shirt. Mr. Sinclair states, on respectable authority, that the Emperor himself has not more than two or three shirts in his wardrobe."

When the Chinese women appear on the street, they have a tidy appearance; but the men have a greasy look, not at all inviting.

PENALTY FOR SIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CRISIS:—I frequently read the Crisis, and with much interest; but must confess, I am puzzled with the subject of "man's nature and destiny," as advocated by your paper. I agree with you that death, in its primary sense, is the penalty of the law. That when Adam returned to the earth as he was, it was then that the penalty was completely executed. Now just here begins the perplexity, to me, in the arguments of yourselves and correspondents. If I rightly understand your reasoning, the penalty was partially executed, inasmuch as it is decreed that all men, without regard to character, must rise from the dead. If all men must rise from the dead, will not Adam unavoidably be included by the all? Now why must Adam rise again from the dead? To die the second death, you answer. Did he not pay the full penalty of the law when he died? Did God say that anything beyond death should be inflicted for his sin? If Adam rises again from the dead, having endured all, to the last extremity, that God threatened to visit, by what law, logic or example, can he be remanded again to prison?

ALBERT CLARK.

We do not teach that "the penalty was partially executed" on Adam, but fully. We teach that the penalty threatened and executed upon Adam was for his first sin, and that alone. No mention is made of any other. The penalty is attached to that single act of disobedience. There is no intimation that the punishment was to be eternal, or to continue for any particular period of time. After Adam's first sin, we believe he was still on probation, and had the same privilege of securing eternal life through Christ that we have at the present day. If his probation closed at the time he committed his first sin, then he was not accountable for what he did during the several hundred years that he lived afterwards. But such a conclusion is not reasonable.

We believe the death of Christ, the second Adam, had special reference to the first Adam, as the representative head of the human race in this world. Said Paul, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive"; hence he "is the Savior of all men," inasmuch as he will raise all from the dead; "specially of those that believe." 1 Tim. 4: 10. We believe the first death has never been the final penalty for sin, with the exception of Adam's case; and then it was for the first sin he committed. If he committed other sins after that, they were independent of his first sin and its penalty; and require some other adjustment not specified in the first law given to Adam. If he did not sin but once, he did better than most of his posterity.

We have said, we believe the death of Christ had special reference to Adam; in that he "brought" him from the power of death, and consequently all his posterity; as when one buys an apple tree, he includes in the purchase all the fruit the tree will ever bear. The purchaser does not agree to give a certain amount for each particular apple, but so much for the tree; so Christ gave his life to buy Adam from the law of death that held him for his first sin; and in thus buying the original tree, all the fruit that it may bear is at his disposal; therefore, he "is the Savior of all men," because he will restore all men from the death caused by the sin of Adam; and then he will bestow a special salvation upon "those that believe." Those who do not have part in the special salvation must die "the second death." "The second death" is the final penalty for all sin, for which there has been no repentance.

We believe Adam will certainly be raised from the dead, and all his posterity; when it will be decided who shall be worthy of everlasting life.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

The following from Henry Ward Beecher gives, as we believe, a correct view of the Holy Spirit:

"Here, then, it seems to me, is the simple doctrine of the Holy Ghost, stated in brief—viz: that it is the influence of the divine mind, of the whole being of God, as it were, sent down in the realm of rational creatures, hovering above them as a stimulating atmosphere, and as food for the soul; and that when man rises into this atmosphere which is the nature of God diffused in the world, they come to a higher condition of faculties."

"The divine Being is not merely a person, superlative, infinite, who sits enshrined, and, as it were, hidden in the centre of his vast domain. We are taught that there is an effluence of spirit-power, and that the Holy Spirit pervades the universe. It is to the personality of God what the light and heat of the sun are to the sun itself. For, though the sun is in a definite sphere and position, and has its own globular mass, yet it is felt through myriads and myriads of leagues of space, and is therefore present by its effects and power. And though God is not present, and heaven is the place where he dwells, yet the divine influence pervades the universe. The mental power, the thought power, the spirit power of the divine mind impletes the rational universe."

"This divine Spirit; or, if I may say so, the diffusive mind of God which pervades all the realms of intelligent beings, and which is the atmosphere that the soul is to breathe—the medium of its light, the stimulus of its life—acts in the first place as a general excitement. It develops the whole nature of a man by rousing it to life. We are familiar with the gradations of excitement."

But few writers have expressed the truth on this subject in a clearer manner.

DESTRUCTION.

The following was handed to us in San Francisco, and was read to a large audience in the Music Hall. It had been said by some that when we preached the destruction of the wicked, we take away the motive for repentance.

"San Francisco, March 6th, 1871.

ELDER GRANT:—It is held by some persons that the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked destroys the motive for repentance. Well informed persons generally think it a terrible thing to be entirely destroyed—to cease to be. About four years ago, Dr. Ballou, the pastor of the Universalist church of Philadelphia, preached a sermon against the doctrine of annihilation. He remarked in the course of his sermon, that of all the doctrines of future punishment it was the most horrible; and the thought of being reduced to nothing was terrible. He said he would rather go to hell, and roast there for awhile, if he could at some future time be restored to the favor of God. He said he would go further, and say he would go to hell, and suffer eternally, rather than go nowhere. There was in the congregation a lady (a member of no denomination), who remarked that she had been taught to believe in the doctrine of the future punishment of the wicked; but the more she thought of the doctrine of annihilation (if it was true), it would have a tendency to make her repent at once, for the idea of being reduced to nothing was terrible. Yours,

One who has not embraced the Doctrine."

☞ WE take the following from the San Jose Daily Independent of March 29th:—

The name of Elder Grant has become familiar to every one in California who takes the trouble to read the newspapers. The peculiar manner in which he handles his subject excited curiosity at first by its novelty, and then followed the deepest and most intense interest, which led people to his lectures in such crowds as were never before witnessed even in San Francisco. The Elder arrived in San Jose yesterday, and last night delivered the first of his series of lectures on the

"PROPHETIC HISTORY OF THE WORLD,"

in which he seeks to prove that the prophecies of the Bible were not mere utterances of crazed men, but the direct result of inspiration. He commenced his lecture last night with the book of Daniel, and illustrated the prophetic interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. His discourses are very systematically arranged, and illustrated by an immense chart, covered with figures, and the symbolical representations seen in different visions as RELATED IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The most prominent among these is the immense image, with the head of gold and feet of clay, which was the object on which Daniel's skill as an interpreter of dreams was first exercised. This was the subject of the Elder's lecture last evening. He took each subdivision of the image in its turn, commencing at the head, and showed the rise and fall of the Babylonish, Medean and Macedonian empires. To-night he will talk concerning the

"STONE CUT FROM THE MOUNTAIN,"

and will illustrate his lecture with the signs and symbols on his chart. Quite a number were present last evening, notwithstanding the shortness of the notice, and the hall will probably be crowded to-night. His lectures will be continued during the week, and will commence at half past seven each evening. The Elder desires all, without reference to sect or denomination, to hear his lectures, and to make inquiries in regard to the matters on which he discourses.

THIS AFTERNOON.

At two o'clock a lecture will be given to the members of the different religious denominations. The Elder also requested that the church members would assemble at the hall this evening, at seven o'clock, to engage in a short prayer meeting before the opening of the lecture.

"THE TRANSITION."

For some time we have been expecting to see Spiritualists settle down into a position very similar to that of the ancient Greeks and Romans; becoming indifferent to all sacred things, and even to spiritual manifestations, rejecting whatever is beyond the mere human. They have tried Spiritualism, and chased its bursting bubbles, till they are tired of the pursuit. When they began, they believed what the lying demons told them, and really expected to find something in Spiritualism better than Christianity. They had backslidden from the Lord, and wished to find some easier way to be saved, than by the cross of Christ. After a long and weary journey of a miserable road through the winding labyrinths of error, fables and lies, growing "worse and worse," they have concluded to halt and fall back on "humanity," and try to save themselves. Satan has accomplished his object in leading them away from Christ and the Bible, and now says, Do as you please.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

PERVERSION OF THE GOSPEL.

The modern substitute for gospel, in some respects, resembles the true gospel, containing enough gospel to give it a gospel coloring. Milk and water, though three quarters water, resembles pure milk, having a similar color. In a similar manner the gospel is diluted, and filled with ingredients that actually result in a perversion of Heaven's great message to a world of perishing mortals. In the modern gospel salvation is preached, but instead of the salvation of the entire man at the judgment day, it is the salvation of a mere ghost, and that at the hour of death. A kingdom is pictured out, but instead of being a kingdom of physical men in an immortalized and glorified state, it is simply a kingdom of disembodied saints—mere creatures of imagination—and that previous to the judgment; and Jesus, in his resurrected state, is recognized as their King—a material King reigning over immaterial subjects. It would be more in harmony with reason and revelation to have the subjects possess bodies, as really as the King; but this would make the coming of Christ, to raise and change the saints, a prerequisite to their entrance into the kingdom, agreeing with Paul's statement—"Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3: 20, 21. This "change" will qualify physical men to enter the heavenly kingdom.

If merely disembodied men are to be saved, we must have a kingdom of disembodied subjects; and then, to have harmony in the arrangement, there should be a disembodied king, instead of a resurrected personality. But if physical men are to be saved, we must have physical subjects in the kingdom, under a physical king; but as a prerequisite to the salvation of physical men in the kingdom, the resurrection must bring a "change" of a physical nature, for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," therefore it must experience a change to immortality, by which process this "vile body" becomes a "spiritual body," like Christ's; but this locates the kingdom after the resurrection.

A perverted gospel differs from the genuine in several respects; (1) it proposes to save bodiless men, thus making the resurrection needless; (2) it proposes to save them before the judgment, thus rendering the judgment a useless arrangement; (3) it proposes to save them in a realm never promised to the saints—a kingdom beyond the skies, instead of "the kingdom under the whole heaven" (Dan. 7: 27), or "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 34. Such is a perverted gospel in contrast with the genuine. The pure "gospel of the kingdom" is preferable.

W. S.

A KINGDOM OF DISEMBODIED SOULS.—Such a kingdom is recognized by the theology of the age, but is nowhere portrayed in the Bible. When Pilate inquired of Jesus, "Art thou a King then?" Jesus replied, "To this end was I born." But if Jesus was simply to be King over disembodied souls, why need he ever have been born "to this end"? Why not have reigned over disembodied souls without a body, instead of being "born" as a prerequisite to his reign? But there is a propriety in this statement, when we understand that he is to reign over physical men—over resurrected saints, instead of shadows, or personal ghosts. It would look reasonable that physical subjects should have a physical King, and "to this end" Christ was "born"; but if death subtracts a personal soul from the saint, and transports it to some remote realm, Christ could have reigned over them just as well without being "born," and a great deal more appropriately.

Again: we read that God "hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Acts 17: 31. Here we learn that Christ's resurrection was the Divine assurance of his judgeship; or, in other words, that he was raised from the dead in order that he might be judge. But if death does not kill the real man, why could not Christ have been judge without a resurrection, just as well as with a resurrection? And, indeed, if disembodied men are to be judged, and sent to a kingdom of disembodied personalities, would it not have been more appropriate to have had a disembodied judge? And if the resurrection of Christ must precede his judgment, even if he had commenced the work of judging men as soon as raised from the dead, what becomes of the doctrine of a kingdom of disembodied men previous to Christ's resurrection? When we remember the judgment is at Christ's appearing, and is a judgment of material men, all is plain. Paul's preaching "another king, one Jesus," was regarded a message "contrary to the decrees of Cæsar," as such a kingdom as he preached would interfere with Cæsar's claims, which could not have been so construed if he had been preaching the reign of Christ over a kingdom of disembodied men in the skies, away from Cæsar's realm.

W. S.

WILL MORTAL MEN DWELL IN THE KINGDOM OF GOD?—A candid inquirer desires to know what proof I have for my position that there will not be mortal men in the kingdom of God? It is not strictly our duty to prove a negative, as we should not be expected to believe without evidence: it ought to be enough to say, understandingly, I do not believe a specific theory for want of proof: but as in this case it is an easy matter to prove a negative, we will present a sample of our scriptural reasons for repudiating the sentiment referred to.

1. At a certain time the judgment books are to be "opened" (Dan. 7: 10, Dan. 12: 1, and Rev. 20: 12–15), at which same time the dead are to be raised, and then God's "people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book"; and that gives deliverance to all the saints, so they will not be left in a mortal state; and at the same opening of the books it is said, "Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire"; and that certainly disposes of the entire race of men, both dead and living, leaving neither saint nor sinner to live on in the kingdom of God in a mortal state. "Every one" written in the book will be "delivered"; and "whosoever" is not written there will be consigned to the lake of fire. None of the righteous are left, for they are "delivered," having had their names registered in the "book of life," and "whosoever was not found written" there, instead of being left in a mortal state, perish in the lake of fire. Now it is certain that "every one" that is written, and "whosoever" is not written, takes in the entire family.

2. The new birth spoken of by the Savior, whether it signifies conversion, or a birth to immortality, must precede an entrance into the kingdom. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God . . . . cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3: 3, 5. If conversion is meant by this birth, unconverted mortals are denied an entrance into the kingdom, and all converted mortals are to be immortalized at the coming of Christ; but if reference is made to a birth to immortality, then mortals are here directly deprived of an entrance into the kingdom: so with either view, the text excludes all mortals from a dwelling in the coming kingdom.

3. The statement of Paul negates this theory—"Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. 15: 50. "Flesh and blood" is sometimes used as a synonym of carnal nature. With either view, the statement amounts to an utterance that mortals cannot enter the kingdom. If it means mortality, the denial is strong. If it means carnality, then carnal nature must be subdued by grace before entering the kingdom; and all who thus gain a victory over carnality will be immortalized when Christ comes. The term "inherit" cannot refer to a natural claim, on the principle that property falls to children, for none are entitled to the kingdom of God on that principle; we can "inherit" it only on the same principle that we "inherit eternal life"—not by virtue of a fleshly claim, but in consequence of entering into divine relationship by imbibing "the spirit of adoption," and this entitles its possessor to immortality when Jesus comes; for "if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your MORTAL BODY"—then immortalized humanity, with Christ, will inherit the kingdom.

W. S.

QUERY.—A correspondent wishes to know whether the position taken by some of our brethren on 2 Cor. 5: 6–8, will stand criticism before our enemies; namely, that the church is there referred to by the term "body," in this statement—"To be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord"?

We think not—

1. Because this text teaches that when we are "absent from the body," we are "present with the Lord"; and it is not true that when absent from the church (either by death or otherwise) we are present with the Lord.

2. We are not to be "present with the Lord" till he shall come; and then, instead of being "absent from the" church, the entire "church of the first born" will be together—not a saint "absent." There is no such thing as being absent from the church while "present with the Lord," for when "present with the Lord," the church, too, will be present, and not absent.

Paul's statement—"We are always confident, ... and willing rather to be absent from the body," cannot be construed to indicate a desire for an absence from the church on the principle of translation in Paul's lifetime, for it is not true that Paul was "always confident" of such a translation, for he died and was buried.

3. But when we understand the body to mean the mortal body, which we are to be absent from, by being "clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life," in which immortal state we are to be "present with the Lord," without the mortal body, it having been transformed into a spiritual body,—all is plain. Not till immortalized can we be "present with the Lord," and then we shall be "absent from the [mortal] body," possessing in its stead a "spiritual body," but not a bodiless spirit.

IDOLATRY AND ERROR ABROAD.—The Interior thus speaks of the decrease of idol worship:

SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.—In speaking of the wonderful triumphs of the gospel in the South Sea Islands, the report of the London Missionary Society says: "In no part of the world have the triumphs of christianity been more marked than in the islands of Polynesia. It would be difficult, probably impossible, to find any chapter in the history of the church describing an overthrow of idolatry so rapid and so complete as that which has taken place in the South Sea Islands. Sixty years ago there was not a solitary native Christian in Polynesia; now it would be difficult to find a professed idolater in those islands of Eastern or Central Polynesia where Christian missionaries have been established."

The same paper thus speaks of another locality:

"The population of Syria is about two millions. Of these nearly one-half claim to be Mohammedans. They believe, of course, in the Koran, deny the divinity of Christ, and while giving a quasi assent to the claims of the sacred Scriptures as coming from God, maintain that Christians have greatly corrupted them. The Druses, dwelling around the southern half of Lebanon, and on the plains south of Damascus, number one hundred thousand. Their religion is part Mohammedan, and part the system of Zoroaster, and that of certain other ancient sects, with some notions borrowed seemingly from Judaism and Christianity. The Nusairiyeh, perhaps a remnant of the old Canaanites, occupying the mountains north of Tripoli, number some two hundred thousand. To these must be added the roving Bedouin, living like his fathers for many generations past, and exercising, for the most part, a religious faith like them. Then of the Oriental churches, nominally Christian, the Maronites, descended from the ancient Syrians, have two hundred thousand, the Papal Greeks, of pure Arab stock, fifty thousand, and the Orthodox Greek church one hundred and fifty thousand."

Thus while idol worship is being diminished, God-dishonoring errors still have a firm grasp upon millions of earth's inhabitants. Nor is error confined to the channels of Mohammedanism and Catholicism. Millions who profess the religion of Christ, while protesting against Catholicism, are mere formalists, besides being destitute of the truths of revelation. Taking all these things into consideration, the religious picture of the world is now far from being beautiful, and is not ominous of the world's conversion, but rather indicative of a storm of wrath like that which overtook the Sodomites. Beyond that scene of ruin faith sees a new earth, peopled with resurrected and immortalized saints. W. S.

WHAT DOES "DESTROY" MEAN?—The term "destroy" is often applied to the future fate of the wicked; and it either means, in Heaven's vocabulary, just what it does in our own, or it has a different meaning. If it has a different meaning, let us learn what it is, and then stick to it, for God does not mean one thing by a word at one time, and the very opposite by the same word at another time. What, then, is the Bible meaning of the word destroy? We are told by theologians that when applied to the wicked, the word is not used in its ordinary sense, but signifies preservation—just the opposite of what it means when used in ordinary conversation. Well, if that assumption is correct, let no one desert the rule when put to the test, but accept the result. If that is really the Bible signification of the word, let us by way of experiment carry the same meaning to the same word into this text: "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil"—that is, that he might preserve the works of the devil, according to this definition. This would involve the thought that if it had not been for the manifestation of Christ, the works of the devil would finally have become extinct; and that Christ came to prevent this ultimatum by preserving the works of the devil. How do theologians like the workings of their own definition of destroy? Take your own coin. W. S.

LETTER FROM A GERMAN BRO.

The following letter was sent to Bro. L. Reimer, Phila., who translates it and sends to the Crisis:—

BELOVED:—After a long delay, and not knowing whether I should apply to you again or not, I take up my pen in the name of the Lord, in order to explain to you my present position and the cause of my long silence. You had the kindness to send me a package of your German tracts, which I distributed in my congregation. But no sooner had I done so, when an uproar ensued, in consequence of which I was compelled to leave my congregation in Lewisville, being branded with those handsome names, as heretic, perverter of the Scriptures, etc. Nevertheless, I had the consolation of having sown the seed of truth among the children in the school; and I live in hope that it will soon bear its fruits, though with the old people I cannot do anything. They engaged a new preacher, and I had to go. This brought me into straitened circumstances, my salary being scarcely sufficient for the support of my family; and now, after being dismissed, I had not means enough to get my wife and children out of the place, where every body was against us.

In this distress, nothing remained for me but confidence in our heavenly Father, of whom I know that he not only can deliver, but also will do it. I left my family under the care of God in Lewisville, and wandered as it seemed to me at that time forsaken and despised by all towards the Ohio river, and here, where I now am, I found a situation as teacher. My salary, though small, was yet sufficient for the support of my family, which I brought here about a week ago.

I now intend to follow up the work of the Lord with energy; the few tracts which I had left I have already distributed here, and have done much good through them. There are two large families here who have received cheerfully our or rather the Savior's doctrine, and have done all for me and my family. It is true I hear also in this place the names, "heretic," and "perverter of the Scriptures," and even among Americans they talk about false interpretations of the Scriptures; yet in spite of all this I carry every where, by the grace of God and the power of truth, the victory over my enemies. The two German preachers, Lutheran and Methodist, warned their members against me, and forbade them to hear me; and as by this I am made inaccessible to many families, I would like to reach such through tracts; and I live in great hope soon to organize a German Advent church here.

From this you see that I am not able to fulfill my promise to give five dollars towards the German tract fund. Forgive me, therefore, and I hope in a short time to make it all up.

As I live on the Ohio river, I intend to visit all the settlements and towns, and preach among them. In order to do this effectually, I would like to have more tracts, but leave it to you to send such at the present time gratis, or respectively on trust for the good of the Lord and his cause. Enclosing ——, I surely hope to hear soon from you, and remain in Christian hope of the soon return of our Master, your brother in Christ, G. A BRENNER.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. B. P. MANNING writes:—"I am in great want of some help at this time. I thank the dear brethren for their help in the past. But I shall never be able to do any more in the field of the Lord. Do remember me at this time, as the Lord has prospered you. I am sick, and suffer for the need of help."

BRO. R. WALLACE writes from Nova Scotia:—"The Crisis is indeed a blessing to me. I knew the path before I saw it, but I saw it dimly. It is now plain. I had been for many years a member of a Baptist church, but did not believe in immortal-soulism, and when I began to persuade my brethren to hearken to the word of Inspiration, and cease from man, the minister directed that I should be excluded, and he was obeyed, without charging me with an immoral act. This is sectarianism here. But I lend the Crisis to all that will read it, and I think it has friends among the young people; and there is seed sown that will bring forth fruit in spite of the enemy. Some friend sends me the Bible Banner. I value it and am thankful, but wish them to know that I have no means to compensate them. When warm weather comes, I shall try to get subscribers for it. I am an old man of nearly eighty-four years, and my sight is dim; can only read in day-light, and can hardly write intelligibly, as both hand and powers of mind seem to be at fault."

BRO. L. E. PENDLETON writes:—"Our conference at North Searsport, Me., was a season of interest and profit. The conference commenced March 10th, and ended the 17th. Sinners were converted. Wanderers came home, and many saw the light more clearly. Bro. J. G. Hook was present, and his faithfulness and love have left a blessed memory behind him. We all thank God for this little pentecost, and the union between brethren is more perfect than I have ever seen it before. Preaching brethren are invited to call and 'preach the word' to the children waiting for 'our Life' to appear."

L. A. DAVIS writes:—"Will not some of God's faithful servants come to North Rutland, Mass., and preach the word? There has been but one Advent sermon preached here for several years. I feel anxious to have the people hear on this subject. There are but three believers in the place, and we need some one to help us bring the truth before the people. Any one coming to Holden could extend his appointments to this place. It is but eight miles from there. The Lord send some one."

BRO. J. T. OWGLEY writes:—"Two weeks ago we buried two souls in the likeness of the Master's death, burial and resurrection, in Pittsburgh, Pa.

FLINT. In Hartford, Conn., April 7th, 1871, Emma C., wife of Frank E. Flint, and daughter of H. H. Dickinson, aged twenty-eight years.

Our much loved daughter is dead, and our hearts are deeply wounded by the blow; yet we bow in submission. She was amiable, cheerful, devoted, self-sacrificing, a true Christian, looking for the Coming One and an endless life in the resurrection of the dead. She never caused us a sorrow. To know her was to love her. Her faith was practical in its effects. Scarcely six months married, her husband is stricken and crushed. We sorrow not as those who have no hope. H. H. D.

YOUNG. Fell asleep in Christ, at Wallingford Farms, Conn., March 11th, Mary R. Young, aged eighteen years.

The subject of many prayers and pious instructions from a devoted mother, this young sister gave her heart to Jesus four years ago. With a sweet spirit of resignation she fell asleep, leaving behind Christian advice to her relatives as a priceless legacy to the sorrowing ones. A bright immortality awaits her "at the last day." She leaves a father, mother and brothers to mourn her early departure. Among her letters the following lines were found, written while at school:—

TO MY MOTHER.

Mother! how dear that word!
Its faintest echo thrills my very heart;
As if it were an angel's voice I heard,
Unconsciously I start.

A thousand pleasing things
It bids at once before my vision rise,
And back to mind in all its freshness brings
An earthly paradise.

My mother and my home
Are hallowed terms that blend in union sweet;
And though away from both I often roam,
Yet glad return my feet.

I joy to view the place
Blest by a cherished parent's tenderest care,
While memory loves each early scene to trace,
And fondly lingers there.

Mother, 'tis evening now,
And I am far from childhood's place of glee;
But as my hand supports my aching brow,
My thoughts go forth to thee.

I think of those glad days
When I was 'neath thy care, a playful child,
And thou didst watch my little sports and ways,
And on me sweetly smiled.

Oft, at evening hour,
Thou kindly bad'st me to thy side repair,
To tell me of the great Creator's power,
And teach me some sweet prayer.

Those lessons taught by thee
Were not forgotten then, nor are they yet;
Waymarks they've been, in evil hours, to me,
To shun temptation's net.

And through life's gathering cares,
My heart with gratitude shall e'er rejoice,
That Heaven hath blest me with a mother's prayers,
A mother's warning voice.

Most bitterly I mourn
That I should e'er have caused thee once to grieve,
Or thy fond heart with anguish to have torn:
My penitence receive.

I know thou lov'st me still,
And oft in my behalf dost humbly pray
That Heaven may shield me from each threat'ning ill,
And crown with joy my way.

May blessings on thee rest,
Mother, till life's fast waning day be o'er;
Then may we join the ransomed and the blest,
Where parting is no more.

FRENCH. In South Woodstock, Vt., March 26th, 1871, Bro. George French sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, aged fifty-five years.

The intelligence of no death has brought to us such feelings of sadness and gloom as has the tidings of this dear brother's decease. His home has been our pilgrim resting place for years. We had associated together in the closest relationship of heavenly love. His presence in the congregation so marked with interest, his faithfulness in social worship, his constant kindness of heart as a husband, father and friend, so ready in anticipating whatever would minister help or comfort to those around him, had greatly endeared him to our heart. Unusual devotion characterized the months previous to his illness, and in his sickness it was peace and trust in God. We visited him often, and hoped against hope for his recovery. The king of terrors had shot a poisoned arrow. He has fallen. We weep. A broken-hearted wife weeps. Affectionate children weep. Many people mourn. A community is sad. But there is hope. The morning comes. He will live again. "I will raise him up at the last day," saith Jesus. Then "God shall wipe away all tears, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." H. F. CARPENTER.

COLE. Sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 13th, 1871, at West Stewartstown, N. H., Algernon L. Cole (father of Eld. L. F. Cole), aged fifty-three years.

Bro. C. sought the Lord and learned to love his coming and the kindred truths, some thirteen years ago, and with his companion was baptized by the writer, and together they have walked as the heirs of the grace of life. Living a christian, death found him not unready. With sweet smiles and words of hope, he cheered the death-room, and left a solace upon the hearts of loved ones so lasting that they do not feel a spirit of repining at so great a loss. On one of the hills of Canaan, Vt., we laid him down to rest, till our great Joshua shall come to lead his gathered hosts to the eternal Canaan, to die no more. J. ALBERT LIBBY.

RANDALL. Died, in Bolton, P. Q., March 27th, 1871, of dropsy, Joseph Randall, aged forty-eight years, five months.

Our deceased father sought the Lord when but fourteen years of age. Soon after he embraced the doctrine of the immediate personal appearing of the Savior, and since that time has ever been the firm friend and supporter of the Advent cause. The prospects of soon obtaining our rest was his constant theme. He leaves a wife, three sons, and a daughter, to mourn his loss, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. A suitable discourse was preached to a large circle of relatives and friends, by Eld. J. Chapman, from Psalms 17: 15. A. F. R.

SMITH. Died, in South Hope, March 13th, 1871, of consumption, Vesta O. Smith, daughter of Daniel and Jane Howard, aged twenty-five years, eleven months, four days.

Her faith was strong in God. Although she was a great sufferer, yet she would say to her father, "This is the happiest part of my life." She expected to awake in His likeness when he comes.

Funeral services were attended by A. Walker. Words selected by her, from 1 Cor. 15: 19–22. A. W.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

VERSAILLES, April 13. The arrival of Gen. Fabrice, German Administrator, at St. Denis, is consequent upon the receipt of notification from the Versailles Government of its intention to make a supreme effort for the capture of Paris.

The Maillat gate is an utter wreck. A battalion of Nationals from the quarter St. Gurgis has forcibly resisted an attempt to compel them to go to the ramparts.

Grousset, the Communist Delegate Minister of Foreign Affairs, says that conciliation is impossible.

A quantity of guns have been seized in the shop of an American dealer.

Two American contractors have offered to buy the column of Vendome and to cast it into cannon. The Assembly has adopted—145 to 124—a resolution giving to each arrondissement of Paris the right to elect four members of the Municipal Council. The Left vainly protested against the action of the majority.

Gen. Cathelineau, commanding a Breton Legion, has established his headquarters at Rombelliand.

The losses of the insurgents in the combats of last week aggregate fully 9000 men. Some of the insurgent commanders have proposed to the Versailles Government to deliver up the gates of Paris and forts d'Issy and Vanvres on the payment of two and a half million of francs. The offer was declined.

The delegates from the party of conciliation have returned to Paris. The conditions of peace proposed to them by President Thiers were, that Paris first lay down her arms and then a municipal franchise will be granted the city.

The Commune, considering the column in the Place Vendome a barbarous monument, a symbol of brute force and false glory and a negation of fraternity, have decreed its demolition.

VERSAILLES, April 13. All the insurgents taken prisoners are sent to Brest. A party of them on the way murdered one of their guards, and eight of them were shot for it next day.

Three gunboats shelled Sevres and St. Cloud to-day.

A National Guard was shot this morning for killing his Captain. He confessed to shooting five other officers.

Petroleum shells have been prepared for throwing into Fort Valerien.

The Church of St. Roche was seized by the Nationals and the people were ejected. A crowd collected in the street and a woman denounced a man attired in plain clothes as a Priest. The crowd took the man's part, and the woman was beaten terribly. This is the first sign of reaction in favor of the Priests.

The churches are carefully searched and all valuables found are seized and will be converted into coin. The Chief of Secret Police has been arrested.

The Commune is trying to enforce the order against the departure of persons without passports. Even women are prevented from leaving the city. Notwithstanding the precautions taken, upward of 300,000 people have left since the troubles commenced. The supply of milk has ceased, and the prices of provisions are rising.

The Government reports that the Commune has razed the buildings from the Rue Beethoven, under Trocadero, for one kilometre. This perhaps is exaggerated. Immense quantities of gunpowder, connected by wire with torpedoes, have been laid down in many of the streets. A party of travelers from Versailles to St. Denis were fired upon yesterday.

It has been ordered by the Commune that only the red flag shall be carried by the Nationals and hoisted over all the places occupied by them. All other colors are suppressed.

Forts d' Issy and Vanvres have been supplied with American mitrailleuses. The Paris and Lyons Railway has been cut.

VERSAILLES, April 17. A summons has been issued by order of the Government, calling upon the Communal Council and the insurgent leaders in Paris to surrender to the Government within the space of twenty-four hours, and to lay down their arms. On the event of refusal, or non-compliance, the Government will immediately prepare for a grand attack.

Thiers issued a circular on the evening of the 16th as follows: "The Paris insurgents are emptying their houses and selling their furniture. The Government continues to temporize for the purpose of collecting an irresistible force and allow the Parisians to reflect. The insurgents say we shoot prisoners, and intend to overthrow the Republic and the suppression of the subsidies of the National Guards. These statements are false. There was some cannonading to-day, but it was without result. Otherwise military affairs are quiet and nothing of interest has occurred. The Versailles forces are within less than a mile of Porte des Ternes."

The quartier of the Champs Elysees has been exceedingly damaged by shells, which are still falling thickly. The building occupied by the American Legation was struck by fragments of a shell Saturday, nevertheless, Mr. Washburne continues to reside in Avenue Josephine.

Barricades have been ordered to be erected immediately in the quarters of the Tuilleries and Belleville, which will render Paris impregnable to the assaults of the Versaillists.

It is reckoned that during the last two days the Versaillists lost one thousand killed and fifteen hundred wounded.

All persons are now allowed to leave the city without a permit, except men between nineteen and forty.

Provisions are rising in price.

All the gates except those opposite the enemy are open all day.

The sale of horse flesh has again commenced, and there are other signs of a scarcity of food in the city.

A well-known American banker has offered to purchase the column in the Place Vendome, and to transport it to Central Park.

There are provisions enough in Paris to last only three weeks.

THE NAPOLEON COLUMN.

It has been decided not to demolish the column in the Place Vendome, but to displace the statue on its apex.

DOMESTIC.

THE BIBLE IN ST. PETER'S.—A son of Dr. Cote, the well known missionary in Canada, has written to his sister in this city that he lately read and distributed copies of the New Testament beneath the dome of St. Peter's at Rome, and that the people eagerly took them. The prelates of the church came forth and unsuccessfully attempted to prevent the distribution. The police were called upon to drive the heretics from the "sacred" place, but when they found that Mr. Cote and friends were doing nothing more than scattering the word of God, they not only refused to arrest them, but asked for copies themselves, saying, "This is what we have long wanted." Truly a wide and effectual door is now opened in Italy for the triumphal entrance of the truth.—Christian World.

BIBLES IN EUROPE.—"The European war has furnished an opportunity for the wide circulation of the Word of God among those who could not otherwise have been reached. Between July 25th, and November 5th, 1870, the Cologne, Frankfort and Berlin depots had put into circulation 430,159 Bibles, Testaments, or portions, in no less than six languages. The agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in France, states that the circulation has been great beyond anticipation; no less than 657,000 copies of Bibles, Testaments, or portions: of which above 180,775 were in French, and 1484 in Arabic. Roman Catholic soldiers received the Word of God gladly, and promised never to part with it.

THE KU-KLUX BILL.—The bill for the suppression of the Ku-Klux outrages in the South has, after much debate and many amendments, finally passed the Senate. One of the most important amendments to the measure, and which was passed by a vote of 29 to 25, provides that cities, counties or towns in which the Ku-Klux outrages are committed, may be assessed for the damages thus done to persons and property.

INFLUENCE OF CLIMATE UPON MAN.—It is not generally known, but it is nevertheless true, that a pure, moderately dry air generally produces great mental sprightliness, especially with full-blooded persons. A cloudy and moist atmosphere, on the other hand, produces mental relaxation, and, with many, melancholy. This explains why suicides so often happen when the sky is overcast. The depressed mental state is thus farther enhanced. Villeneuve reports that of every ten suicides which were committed in Paris during two years, nine took place in the rainy season. The influence of the climate is also well exemplified in the case of mountaineers. They are quicker, more active and excitable. The Swiss naturalist, Desor, in a recent essay, describes the climate of North America as very changeable and dry. After having explained a number of phenomena produced by the climate in general, he depicts its influence upon the inhabitant of this country. He derives from the climate his activity, acuteness, his tall stature, his eagerness for gain, his practical talent, and his love of adventure. It is also well known that the inhabitants under a preponderating clear sky possess more talent for art, while those under a gloomy sky have more propensity for speculation and thought.

☞ MR. BEECHER the other Sunday undertook to give out his text, but could not find it. He had made a wrong entry. Most ministers would have been embarrassed or confused. Not so Mr. Beecher. He hunted round awhile, frankly told his people what the trouble was, and took the edge off by remarking that he had "known a great many ministers to lose their text after they had begun their sermon, but he had lost his before he commenced."

In Brief.

—— New York possesses about 15,000 Italians, and over 30,000 French natives.——The Hoosac Tunnel was nearly 406 feet nearer completion on the last day of March than it was on the first.——Col. Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, grandson of Jerome Bonaparte, (brother of the first Napoleon), and of Mrs. Patterson of Baltimore, has arrived in this country, where he was born and educated. He has firm faith in the re-establishment of the Napoleonic dynasty.——In Albany on Sunday night, the Rev. Mr. Waters while preaching, stopped a few moments and then said: "I am rarely, if ever, annoyed by people talking. I am not to-night; but I am afraid the congregation is." "You would have heard a pin drop" during the balance of the sermon.

☞ A Boston paper mentions an individual who "clasps his hands so fervently in prayer that he can't get them open when the contribution box is passed round."

KEYS.—I have in my possession just discovered a bunch of nice keys that are not mine. When, where, how, and from whom, I got them I have no conception whatever. I fear this freak of absent-mindedness has caused some one trouble, which I deeply regret. Will some one enlighten me as to the owner? and I will return at my own expense. H. F. CARPENTER.

CHRISTIAN TRUST.

Oh, what a load of struggle and distress
Falls off before the cross! The feverish care;
The wish that we were other than we are;
The sick regrets; the yearnings numberless;
The thought, "This might have been," so apt to press
On the reluctant soul; even past despair,
Past sin itself,—all, all is turned to fair,
Aye, to a scheme of ordered happiness,
So soon as we love God, or rather, know
That God loves us. Accepting the great pledge
Of his concern for all our wants and woe,
We cease to tremble upon danger's edge;
While varying troubles form and break anew,
Safe in a Father's arms, we smile as infants do.

"LITERAL INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE."

A PARTIAL REVIEW OF "THE END OF ALL THINGS."

No. 5.

DR. H. L. WILLARD.

"On another occasion," says Mr. James Grant, "when Christ was preparing his disciples for his departure from this world, Peter put the question to him, 'Lord, whither goest thou?' What was the answer of our Lord? It was this—'Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now, but thou shalt follow me afterwards.' We know that the place to which Christ went when he left our world was heaven; and if therefore his disciples are to follow him thither, the glory and bliss of heaven—not any glory and bliss which can be enjoyed in this world—must be the hope of the individual believer, and of the church in her collective capacity."

[Right here I wish to go back a little and examine the words of our Lord and Peter. The brother habitually quotes only so much of a passage as will, by its isolation, convey the idea he attempts to establish, while he leaves out the entire connection, and pays no attention to the subject which the passage may be used to illustrate. I therefore claim that he handles the word of God unfairly, for by taking this method of proving a doctrine, one can easily establish the fact that Jesus not only upheld, but commanded us to commit, suicide. Example. "And [Judas] went out and hanged himself." Matt. 27: 5. "Then said Jesus, . . . Go thou, and do likewise." Luke 10: 37. Now this is just as fair, and just as scriptural, as many of his quotations; but I leave it to him if this is the way to read God's blessed word?

Now we will turn and see what Peter said and what Jesus replied, also the circumstances under which they spoke. It appears that Jesus and his disciples had been at supper, at the conclusion of which he gave Judas the sop. Upon receiving the sop, Judas went out; and having gone out, Jesus began talking with his disciples. In John 13: 23 he says, in connection with the foregoing—"Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me; and as I said to the Jews, Whither I go ye cannot come, so say I now to you. . . Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards. Peter said unto him, Why cannot I follow thee now?" We find the direct answer to this question in the second and third verses of the next chapter (which is but a continuation of the same subject), in our Lord's words as follows: Because "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I WILL COME AGAIN [what for, Lord?] and receive you unto myself, THAT WHERE I AM, THERE YE MAY BE ALSO." It appears therefore from this, that the disciples will not be with Jesus until he comes again. After he ascended into heaven, the disciples could not follow him as they did on earth; and as they cannot go where he is, they must of course wait until his return, at which time they will be permitted to go whithersoever he goeth. That this is true, hear what St. John saith—"And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion [not a mount Sion, but the mount Sion, viz., the one on this earth, near Jerusalem—the only one we know anything about]; and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand." Well, John, who are these? "These are they who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." Rev. 14: 4. That "if," used by Mr. G., is well put in. We perfectly agree with him that "if" the disciples follow him thither, i. e., to heaven, they will undoubtedly enjoy the "glories and the bliss of heaven"; but as we are distinctly told that where he—Jesus, went they could not go, we most emphatically assert and believe, that the hope of the disciples was for the returning of the Lord Jesus from heaven the second time, and not that they ever would, or ever could, go to heaven. Why could not Peter follow his Master? Because his Master was going away. When can Peter follow him again? When his Master returns.]

"Then, again," says Mr. G., "in the course of the same address, which may be said to have been our Lord's farewell address, he said to them—'In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.' Now we know that Jesus here spoke of heaven, not of the earth, however glorious and happy it might be at some future time. His Father's house in which there are many mansions is the same house as that of which Paul spoke to the Corinthians when he said, 'For we knew that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens.' If our Lord had meant that the hope of his disciples should have for its object his return to reign on earth in glory, instead of saying 'I go to prepare a place for you,' he would have sought to have comforted their hearts, in the depths of their distress at his departure from them, by saying—'I come to prepare a place for you.' He did, it is true, say that he would come again. But for what purpose? to remain with them on earth? No; but to receive them to himself; obviously meaning that he would take them back with him, on his return to our world, to the place which he had gone to prepare for them.

[One thousand dollars reward will be paid for each and every word found in the Holy Scriptures which will, either directly or indirectly, say that Jesus will return to heaven again with his disciples, after he comes the second time. I am astonished that Mr. G. makes such an admission, for it completely overthrows his whole argument. In one place he says that the disciples are now in heaven, and right here he claims that our Lord at his second coming returns for the express purpose of getting them and taking them with him back to heaven. Now it is a philosophical fact that nothing can wholly occupy two distinct places at the same time. How then can the disciples be both in heaven and on the earth at the same time? I claim, therefore, that Mr. G. stands impeached by his own evidence; hence his testimony is worthless. It is a pretty hard thing to carry water on both shoulders.]

"'I will come again,' were his blessed words [quotes Mr. G.] 'and receive you unto myself, that where I am [that is, in heaven, where he was going] there ye may be also.'"

[How Jesus can be "there"—i. e., in heaven, as Mr. G. claims, and yet be on the earth personally when he comes after his disciples, is something so far beyond my ideas of anything possible, that I give it up. Now look at our Lord's words a moment, and see if the word "there" means heaven. He says, "I will come again." Where is he when he "comes again"? On the earth. What does he do while on the earth? He receives them—the disciples—unto himself; what for? "That where I am, [not where he was going to be, but "where I AM"—where? On earth.] THERE [on the earth] ye may be also" (with me).

The objection may be urged that if the disciples are already on the earth, it would be meaningless in our Lord to say that when he comes they would still be on the earth, especially if they never left the earth. To this I would say that there will be a host like the sands of the sea for multitude, which, although on the earth, will not be with our Lord, but will be "cast out," "overthrown" and "destroyed," when they see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob sit down in the kingdom of God.]

"But leaving the sayings of our Savior as bearing on the hope of the church, let us [says Mr. G.] glance for a moment at what is said on the same subject by the apostles. In the first and second verses of the fifth chapter of his Epistle to the Romans, Paul says—'Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.' The expression 'glory of God' so manifestly means heaven, that I know of no one who ever understood it in any other sense."

[Well, here is one who understands it in a very different sense, and he is by no means alone.]

"It certainly cannot be made to apply to a millennial state of the earth. If, therefore, Paul, speaking for himself and the believers in Christ, who were at Rome, rejoiced in 'hope of the glory of God,' the hope of the church must have heaven, not any possible condition of earth, for its object."

[I feel that it is but a repetition of what has already been clearly proven, to reply to such passages as the last one given by Mr. G.; but lest any man should say that we could not "get around it" without doing it violence, I propose to examine all that he sees proper to bring forward, to the end that he may know that the word of God does not contradict itself, but that it points as clearly as the noon-day sun to the time when the Father's will shall "be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

LETTER FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

TO THE CRISIS:—Last Sunday, at the Mina St. church, I listened to a discourse by the Presiding Elder of the Southern Meth. Conf., in which the "kingdom" was thoroughly spiritualized away, in good old-fashioned style. As the pastor plentifully approved the sermon by distinct (though feeble) "amens," I conclude that our worthy friend finds it difficult to get out of the wilderness of doctrinal unbelief. But, as Elder Sheldon says, you must give these good men time. Little children and infidels seem to apprehend and embrace the truths of literal scripture with great ease, compared to the acceptance by men and women long wedded to Orthodox creeds.

It seems to be hard for Orthodox folks to reach the conclusion in the truth, that they are just as much bound to believe right as to do right. When the relation of faith and action is perfect, then the one appears blended in the other; the response in works to the righteous will be instantaneous. A very erroneous though very honest faith confuses and demoralizes. The ancient saying, "No matter what a man believes so long as he does right," is a paradox. The correctness of the doing is obviously proportioned to the correctness of the faith;—this is obvious on a little candid reflection. Truth is Light; light on a man's daily path. All truth, especially religious truth, is illuminating. Let this be emphasized by a repetition: A man does right in the approach to perfection in proportion as his thorough, heartfelt faith is accurate and just.

And the truth gives us the weapons with which to combat all error. And so far as we vary from the truth contained in the "whole counsel of God," do we impair our ability to combat wholesale and unmitigated falsehood. I state in a positive and negative form that which has been illustrated in the debates that have recently been held, on successive Sunday afternoons, in this city, at Dashaway Hall. The question has been on the Divine origin and authority of the Holy Scriptures. It appears to me that on the Orthodox creeds the infidels and spiritualists have the decided advantage of the argument. If, as the creeds tell us, God is without body, parts, or passions, and is omnipresent, how can we conceive him otherwise than a Principle throughout nature? And if that principle has a manifestation more intense in one portion of nature than another, then, manifestly, man is the divine creature of earth. Then follows all the argument of those who reject the Revelation of the Bible. And on this basis their logic, the reasoning of the infidel and the spiritualist, is inexorable and irresistible.

Thousands hold to their genuine allegiance to Christ, because their secret, unconscious faith is better than their creed. An omnipresent Being, who has neither body nor passions, is a passive and, so far as its operations are concerned, an utterly incomprehensible principle. You march to the conclusion of an all-pervading principle, and then as you pursue the inquiry on the same plane, mist rises and deepens upon mist. And in harmony—it may be so called—with this theory of God, comes the heathen's idea of the intangible soul. A heaven of ether. Myriads of "human souls" in space beyond space, themselves uncompounded and indivisible, mingling together like vast, invisible fog-banks,—a speculation of theology at once most pitiful and ludicrous.

Now comes a clear Revelation from a literal God, and it shines from the east even unto the west. If God is a principle in nature, then there is no need of a Revelation, a Book Revelation,—then, indeed, is such revelation impossible. All the revelation there can be is a revelation made up of human inferences from the objects in nature. And this is no revelation; for the deductions will be as various as the dissimilarities of human countenances. From a literal being, who is Creator, the children may rationally expect a literal revelation. And so runs on the glorious argument, which renders the Book a reasonable and delightful and perfect gift of the God of the Universe to the mortals of earth.

Let us stand by our doctrinal truths, which to-day distinguish us to a great extent from other portions of the church of Christ. Do not let us hide them, nor sneak around an open confession and advocacy of them, when our judgment tells us it is the proper time for us to speak. Let not our courage in this respect be whittled away by a too sensitive complacency—cutting us off from declaring the truth on a pretext of charity. Cowardice is too often concealed under the long robes of a false "religious good-nature."

Well, I reckon this kind of talk is out of my line or proprieties. You expect a letter from me, if anything, telling of details of Mission progress. Do not know as you expect that even. May suffer, tolerate it. I told the Elder my expectations were to the effect that an order would shortly be voted mustering me out of the volunteer corps. Your readers may exclaim in Chinese phrase—"Heap too much California gab." I guess so.

The Elder has just departed for San Jose. New invoice of tracts just received. San Francisco agency changed from Burke & Co.'s to White & Baur's, 843 Washington St., opposite post-office. White & Baur have business connections throughout the State, and will send circulars to and obtain orders from booksellers in the different cities and towns in the interior. I have visited several towns in the interior lately, on my secular business, and wherever I have announced that I have heard Grant in San Francisco, I am subject to earnest inquiries as to his doctrine.

The Elder having done a good work in the Presbyterian church in Vallejo, Rev. Dr. Cunningham has gone up from this city to spend a week; to see to it, I imagine, that the converts unite with the Westminster Catechism denomination.

Rev. Dr. Scott has concluded his eternal-torment discourses, which were weak rehearsals of the old pleas for his Calvinistic Article of faith. He was put forward as the biggest gun, but I think I could have selected several younger men in the ministry here who could have produced some original sophistries in behalf of the Orthodox hell. If Dr. Scott's sermons and Elder Grant's replies and reviews could be printed in one pamphlet, and scattered through the city, there would not be a doubt expressed as to the Elder's decided advantage in the argument, whatever the religious opinion or faith of the critic might be. The Dr. was positively so weak, that I felt sorry for him. One of his own congregation told me that there was too much water for the milk in the Dr.'s eternal-misery preaching. And the religious newspaper man who puffed the Dr.'s talk admitted to me that he had not heard a word of any of the eulogized discourses. This is a queer world.

There is a large and inviting field in California for earnest preachers of Advent doctrines, and the Bible truths in regard to man's nature and destiny. It is sad to think that when Elder Grant leaves us, there will not be a preacher of our peculiar faith in this city, nor in northern or central California. But the journals and tracts and books will continue to preach here, and effect an abiding good. C.

"SCIENCE AND RELIGION."

WILLIAM A. PENN.

The above heading was the title of a lecture, which it was our privilege to hear recently from one of the most eloquent pulpit orators in the Erie Conference of the M. E. church. I was strangely affected by the occasion. At one moment, when a strain of truth came rolling out, the heart would swell with rapture; but so sudden were the changes from fact to fiction, that a constant agitation of feeling was produced in my heart.

The speaker began his lecture by a direct drive at the infidel world, in the way of contrasting their fruits with that of the christian world. In this special train of thought, he hurled hot shell in a most effective manner into the ranks of infidelity. Presently he hurled his battery around, and made a drive at the dyspeptic few who think the world is retrograding morally.

In this dash, he swept the world's floor with the broom of Christ, and showed (to his mind) that the vast enterprises of the day were the engines of Jesus, each and all driving the thundering train of human industry on to its final aggrandizement. The belting of the world with railroads was all the work of Jesus; each new line traversed was surveyed, chartered, and stocked, by King Immanuel.

He had also harnessed the lightnings and chained the thunderbolts, and amid the network of electric pathways he flew from shore to shore; now amid the coral reefs of ocean depths, then through mountain passes and across grassy plains, from deserts wild to icy zones, he dashed with fearless tread and noiseless wing, as the unseen force of all great enterprises of the day.

I do not say that the above gives the words of the speaker verbatim, but the essence of what he said. These wonderful achievements were all the work of Jesus for the enlargement of his kingdom, until "all shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest."

We could not help but wonder how the active agents who are handling all these complicated affairs with such a relish, could do it without the spirit of Jesus, if it was his work. According to the lecturer, it was all the work of Jesus; and if his work, then he delighted in it; and how could all these agents love it without his spirit? and if they were loving the work of Jesus, and so cheerfully doing all they could of it, it would seem too bad to have him damn nine tenths of them, after they had been so faithful in doing his work. I think a discriminating mind could have easily seen that the legitimate result of such a system must be universal salvation; or, at least, salvation to all the workers for Jesus.

As the engineer grasps the throttle valve to the locomotive, and with screaming whistle, jingling bell, and rattling train, he drives through valley and plain, the music he makes only says, Clear the track, I am working for Jesus. So the conductor and brakeman, with the contractor and supervisor, the stockholder and superintendent, and all hands in and out of the ring, are working for Jesus.

So with each and all the grand enterprises of the world; every active agent is in the employment of Jesus, striving with all their might to advance his heavenly kingdom.

When we hear such unscriptural reasoning, and see the amount of talent and energy devoted to it, we are not at all surprised that the cause of the lowly Nazarene is so unpopular, and those who are willing to stand by it are so few.

Who of the world's ambitious throng, however vile, could not gather new courage from such a popular lecture to drive with fresh energy his lucre-loving enterprises? Who could listen to such logic without flattering himself that Jesus would not allow his workman to suffer damnation? No one but he whose mind and heart are enlightened by divine truth.

I wonder not that the world is asleep with regard to its true state, while I think of the deceptive lullabies which are constantly hushing their troubled consciences. The unmistakable characteristics of "blind leaders of the blind" hang out in bold relief in every avenue of human life in this day and age of the world. O that the sunlight of gospel illumination may radiate around our pathway as a people, and keep our feet from sliding. As we near the portals of heavenly rest, we shall doubtless hear new strains of satanic music blended so softly that, unless we are constantly filled with a loftier tone of heavenly music, we shall be entrapped unawares. Let us watch.

EXTRACT FROM ST. AUGUSTINE.

As there are persons to be met who delight to fight against the gospel, and who make it one of their special studies to show the "changeability" (as they conceive) of God, by pointing to things which he has in certain dispensations commanded, and afterwards abrogated or replaced by others, it will be well to be prepared to meet them. The following extract from Augustine is to the point, and worth consideration. In his "Confessions" of his ignorance before conversion, he says:—

"Nor knew I that true inward righteousness which judgeth not according to custom, but out of the most rightful law of God Almighty, whereby the ways of places and times were disposed according to those times and places; itself meantime being the same always, and every where, not one thing in one place, and another in another; according to which Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and Moses, and David, were righteous, and all those commended by the mouth of God; but were judged unrighteous by silly men, judging out of man's judgment, and measuring by their own petty habits the moral habits of the whole human race. As if in an armory one, ignorant what were adapted to each part, should cover his head with greaves, or seek to be shod with a helmet, and complain that they fitted not; or as if on a day, when business is publicly stopped in the afternoon, one were angered at not being allowed to keep open shop, because he had been in the forenoon; or when in one house he observeth some servant take a thing in his hand, which the butler is not suffered to meddle with; or something permitted out of doors, which is not permitted in the dining-room; and should be angry that in one house and one family, the same thing is not allotted everywhere, and to all. Even such are they, who are fretted to hear something to have been lawful for righteous men formerly, which now is not; or that God, for certain temporal respects, commanded them one thing, and these another, obeying both the same righteousness: whereas they see, in one man, and one day, and one house, different things to be fit for different members, and a thing formerly lawful, after a certain time not so; in one corner permitted or commanded, but in another rightly forbidden and punished. Is justice, therefore, various or mutable? No, but the times, over which it presides, flow not evenly, because they are times. But men, whose days are few upon the earth, for that by their senses they cannot harmonise the causes of things in former ages and other nations, which they had no experience of, whereas in one and the same body, day, or family, they easily see what is fitting for each member, and season, and part, and person; to the one they take exceptions, to the other they submit.

These things I then knew not, nor observed; they struck my sight on all sides, and I saw them not. I indited verses, in which I might not place every foot everywhere, but differently in different metres; nor even in any one metre the self-same foot in all places. Yet the art itself, by which I indited, had not different principles for these different cases, but comprised all in one. Still I saw not how that righteousness, which good and holy men obeyed, did far more excellently and sublimely contain in one all those things which God commanded, and in no part varied; although in varying times it presented not every thing at once, but apportioned and enjoined what was fit for each. And I, in my blindness, censured the holy Fathers, not only wherein they made use of things present as God commanded and inspired them, but also wherein they were foretelling things to come, as God was revealing in them. . . . .

Those actions which are offences against the customs of men, are to be avoided according to the customs severally prevailing:* that a thing agreed upon and confirmed by custom or law of any city or nation, may not be violated at the lawless pleasure of any, whether native or foreigner. For any part which harmonizeth not with its whole is offensive. But when God commands a thing to be done, against the customs or compact of any people, though it were never by them done heretofore, it is to be done; and if intermitted, it is to be restored; and if never ordained, is now to be ordained.—Com. by W. K.

* "For when it was the custom, it was not an offence; and now it is therefore an offence, because it is not a custom; for some offences are sins against nature, some against custom, some against positive command. . . . This being so, whatever heretics, Manichees or others, censure the fathers of the Old Testament for having more than one wife, are more than sufficiently answered; if they can but understand that that is no sin which is not committed against nature, in that they took these wives with a view to posterity only; nor against custom, in that it was the practice of those times; nor against any positive command, in that they were forbidden by no law."—Augustine.

IMMERSION.

Elder Grant, the great religious revivalist, led many people into the water at Vallejo Sunday afternoon. The Recorder says:

"In the afternoon, at five o'clock, Elder Grant was announced to perform the ordinance of immersion. Accordingly, we hasted to the banks of our 'Jordan,' and waited for the coming of those to be baptized. Multitudes of people gathered upon the shores of our Bay to witness as they did of old, when 'they came up out of the wilderness.' All we wanted was the loaves and fishes, to make the sequel complete. At last the time arrived, and those that resolved to 'take up their cross' followed to the shore. With cane in hand, the 'apostle' walked into the water, and felt for good bottom. Standing up to his waist in water, he proclaimed the doctrine and the truth. For his zeal everybody entertains the highest admiration. By more than two thousand people he was listened to with profound interest. Taking his converts by the hand, the brethren and sisters on the shore singing a joyful song, he led them into the water to the waist, and after taking a careful hold of the head and body showed himself to be a religious Sampson in plunging them under the water. With the strongest he is strong, and with the weak gentle. Too honest to flirt in the face of the community a purchased title, he has sailed his ship upon independent merits. He is his own Bishop. He is not only his own Ecumenical Council, but his own Pope. Unfettered by entangling connections, he runs his gospel ideas independent either of Presbytery or Synod. He is thorough in theological attainments. He troubles neither Koran nor Talmud, Volney nor Rosseau. Eternal death is the reward of the believers of those. He may have dogmas, but 'he is an Israelite in whom there is no guile.' Many professed Christianity at his last meeting, and his abiding with us has been productive of much good." The Elder is now here and holding services in Murphy's Hall.—San Jose Independent.

A SOUL ETERNALLY LOST.

Dear Crisis:—I found the following lines in an old paper, and thinking them a pretty good specimen of modern theology, I send them to you.

"Let him know that he that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins."

"Infinite years in torment must I spend,
And never, never, never have an end?
O, must I dwell in torturing despair,
As many years as atoms in the air?
When these are done, as many [illegible]
As blades of grass on hills and dales that grew;
When these are gone, as many left behind
As leaves in forests, shaken by the wind;
When these are past, as many thousands more
As grains of sand upon the ocean shore;
When these run out, as many millions more
As moments in the millions past before?
When all these doleful years are spent in pain,
And multiplied by millions, yet again,
Till numbers drown the thought; could I suppose
That then my wretched years would close,
This would afford a hope; but, oh! I shiver
To ponder on the dreadful word—forever!
The burning gulf, where I blaspheming lie,
Is time no more, but vast eternity!
The growing torments I endure for sin
Are never more to end, but always to begin.
O that the hand that cursed with the lash,
Would bless me back to nothing—with a dash!
Unjustly, I the sin avenger hate,
Blaspheme this awful God, and curse my fate;
'Tis just, since I, who bear the eternal load, Contemned the death of an eternal God."
—Guide to Holiness.

Why did James speak of saving a soul from death, if it was impossible for that soul to die? Again, this imaginary soul, after lamenting its own indestructibility, and shuddering and shivering at the thought of an eternity of anguish, and hopelessly wishing that it could be "blessed back to nothing," then it speaks of "the death of an eternal God!" So it seems that God can die if souls cannot!

How hard men strive to pervert the plain, simple gospel plan of salvation! That terrible wail of a lost soul was printed in the Guide to Holiness. Would it have a tendency to make christians live holier or love God better, to paint such a picture of avenging wrath? Or would it serve to win the hearts of poor sinners to love a God whose anger was so terrible that nothing short of endless torment could satisfy his vengeance? Such theology is a libel on a loving, merciful and holy God. R. T.

THE DAYS OF NOAH.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

We read in Gen. 6: 5—"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." "The earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence." Verse 11. Here is a picture more perfect and complete than any uninspired pen could draw, of the state of society, the grade of morality, and the development of character among men before the flood. "The earth was filled with violence." Not merely an occasional outrage; but so frequent, so common, so continual was the report of these things, that they were expected as a matter of course, or, as it were, a part of the regular occurrences of every day. Aside from the corruption and violence and extreme wickedness of the people, their doings were similar to those of men in other times. So also the people of Sodom ate and drank, "bought and sold, builded and planted, married and were given in marriage," and if anything more is needed to fill out the picture, we may find it in our own times, for "as it was in the days of Noah," and as it was in the days of Lot, "even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Luke 17: 30.

Is there violence in the earth now? Or corruption? or excess? or wickedness in any form? Yes, in all forms, open or secret, early and late, by night and by day; in the darkness and in the light. And those who know the most of the deeds that are done in our days, know but a small part. You must know all that is done in one of the great cities, and then multiply that by a million, in order to approximate somewhat toward a correct estimate of the result of the doings of one day.

Surely, "as it was in the days of Noah," and "as it was in the days of Lot," so it is in our day. And so it shall be "in the day when the Son of man is revealed." No doubt the people in the days of Noah had heard the prophecy so often that it seemed to them as an idle tale, not worth their notice. And so it is now. Men have heard of the near approach of the "end of the world," "the day of judgment," "the coming of the Lord," the great day in which "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up;" they have heard of all this so often, that they are no longer startled and alarmed as formerly, but rather ask where is the promise or evidence of the coming of that event?

Thus doubtless it was in the days of Noah. They heard the constant preaching of a coming deluge for a hundred and twenty years; and if it is true that "actions speak louder than words," then the hammers of the workmen who were building the ark proclaimed the same with every blow. Now you hear the proclamation of the end of time, as it were of the angel standing on the sea and land, crying "with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth," that there shall be "time no longer;" and "another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

With all these witnesses, and with signs in heaven above, and in the earth beneath, signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars and on the earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, and men's hearts failing for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken; we feel it our duty to add our testimony, and declare to you that we believe the testimony of God in regard to these things.

Never before has there been a moment of such solemn and awful import, of such imminent and impending danger as the present. Never before did the word NOW have such emphasis—"Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." "Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." O, sinner, will you hear? And will you heed the warning? Then "harden not your heart," for the Lord himself has declared, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me." Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus.

MORE LIGHT.

For some time we have had in our possession facts to show that the most noted performers in the Spiritualists' dark circles do their works by trickery. The following is a sample:—ED.

THE DAVENPORT BROTHERS EXPOSED.

Hoxie's Hall was filled to overflowing. At the proper time Mr. Fay, one of the performers, advanced to the front of the stage with a paper containing the names of the committee, and requested them to come forward. Messrs. Bell and Lowrey soon made their way through the audience and were greeted with tremendous applause as they bowed to the audience. Ropes were given to these men; they examined them thoroughly, and then went at work with a vim to tie the brothers tight. This being done they explained to the audience how many knots, etc., they had made, and in their opinion all was satisfactory. The cabinet doors were closed by Prof. Fay, and in eighteen seconds sounds from a violin, guitar and tambourine were heard distinctly by the audience as coming from the cabinet. The doors were opened by the Professor, and the committee, after an examination, found the ropes and knots the same as they had been tied. While closing the door, Mr. Bell was struck on the shoulder with some unknown object, but Mr. Lowery saw it and instantly went to Mr. Bell's side, and whispered to Mr. Bell, who began to go through the same motion. Out came the object. Mr. Lowery sprang like a cat and seized the hand, and wrenched it carefully off, throwing it in the audience. Upon examination it was found to be a paper masked hand, as thin as writing paper, and fitting so closely in the cabinet that it was impossible to observe it. It was worked by wire, perfectly at the will of the operators. Cheer upon cheer was given for the committee. The brothers were raging with madness, but constant calls from the audience convinced them that they must either play or pay, and accordingly the cabinet was thrown aside and the dark seance was announced. The Professor stated before hand if any tricks were attempted he would not proceed with the entertainment. A table was brought forward and several musical instruments laid upon it, and the Professor and one of the brothers were tied, a quantity of phosphorus was rubbed on a guitar, and the lights were extinguished. Total darkness reigned. Presently sweet sounds came from the guitar and the phosphorus was seen running here and there in the air. All believed the guitar sailing here and there—they might catch the cabinet trick, but the dark scene was a stunner. While the supposed guitar was swinging in the air one of the audience, named Brooks, pulled from under his coat a dark lantern of immense power, which he instantly shot on the flying guitar, and to all present it appeared nothing, only one of the attaches of the show held a pole six feet long, on the end was nailed a small piece of flour barrel heading. The guitar was lying at the table in the same position, only the phosphorus was not on it. To describe the scene that followed would be folly. Mr. Bell then stated that their cabinet tricks were done by simply bringing their tied hands over their head, and then they were almost free to ring bells, blow horns, etc. We don't think the Brothers will book this city on their next route.—*Cor. SCORNFUL SADIE.

"She wears that dress to Sabbath school!" What scorn there was in the tone of the speaker! She was one of a group of girls who passed me on their way to school, and the most interesting of the lively party. Thick, clustering black curls fell from beneath her hat; bright black eyes sparkled with animation; her cheeks rivaled blush-roses; and her pretty mouth seemed only fitted to speak words of gentleness, and good will: but she looked as if she were aware of her beauty, and valued the gift highly; and her dress was certainly good enough to wear to Sabbath school, though she would doubtless have scorned such thought.

I heard that one sentence only, and those merry girls went their way, and I went in an opposite direction; but those words went with me. I began to picture a certain Sabbath school, where Sadie Bradford sat by the side of the girl who wore her school-dress on Sunday; and I saw plainly the haughty young miss, arrayed in velvet, silk, and costly furs, cast contemptuous glances at the simple clothing worn by her classmate. The dress was clean, whole, and quite pretty; and, moreover, Etta Day had no father to pay large bills at a dry-goods store. When she had a new dress, Etta knew that there were twenty other ways in which the money might have been expended, and that some comforts must be sacrificed in her home that she might be supplied with books and clothes while attending school: so she made no complaints, but went bravely forward, studying diligently, that in time she might be competent to instruct others, and, with the money received for her labors, lighten her mother's burden.

I knew something further about Etta Day. I knew that Christmas was at hand, and that she was very desirous to make her mother a present. Feeling assured that a new winter-dress would be the most acceptable gift she could offer, she had managed to earn small sums of money between school-hours, until she found she had the requisite amount. Very proudly she purchased it, and hid it away, that it might be a perfect surprise to her mother.

All the while, her own wardrobe was so limited, that one dress must be worn alike on the Sabbath and on other days.

Ah! if that young girl could not clothe her form in rich attire, her heart was richly adorned. Around it she wore the beautiful robes of love and self-sacrifice; and God and the angels know the value of such adorning. Sadie Bradford—who could look admiringly on her, when her pert, haughty manner made all around her feel uncomfortable, showing that her heart was inwrapped in the garment of pride? Yet there are too many who are willing to follow her example; assuming a haughty air, and looking down on those who cannot make so good an appearance.

There are some like Etta Day, though they are hidden ones, of whose deeds the world has little knowledge: but, though overlooked by the proud and worldly, they are happy in their humble sphere; because, while forgetting to exalt self, and trying to benefit others, happiness steals into their hearts, and God smiles upon them; for "he resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble."—Well-Spring.

THE BOY THAT PAID HIS DEBT.—The following, from a New York paper, will interest our little readers:—

The other day a little son of a well known bank officer in Wall street lost his purse while coming from Central Park, and a stranger, seeing his discomfort, paid his railroad fare, three cents. The boy, thanking him, said,

"If you will tell me your name, sir, I will bring it to you to-morrow."

"Oh, no," said the gentleman, "never mind about it."

The boy persisted, saying his father never allowed him to run in debt.

"I will not give you my name," replied the gentleman, "but I live at No. — on — street."

The next morning the door bell rang at that house, and our little hero told the amused servant maid his errand.

"Which of the gentlemen is it?" said she; "there are several in the family."

The boy twisted on his heel, and after a moment's thought said, "Have you a photograph book in the house?"

She brought it; and turning over its pages, he said, pointing to one,

"That's my man. Please give him these three cents, and tell him the boy who borrowed it in the cars yesterday left it to pay his debt."

"This is for your Health."

SPRING SICKNESS.

There are a great many people who are subject to a "bilious attack" every spring, and who expect it as a matter of course. Now there is no more need for people being thus sick in the spring, than at any other time of the year, if they only knew how to live. This periodical sickness can be prevented simply by regulating the diet. Not that all persons who have been subject to such attacks year after year, for a long time, can always overcome the difficulty at once. We are all such creatures of habit, that when anything becomes established in this way, there is a strong tendency to its return at the regular time, even after the producing cause has ceased to operate: consequently in bad cases it sometimes takes several years to overcome it entirely. Under a proper regimen the attacks will grow less severe every year, until they entirely disappear.

During cold weather people eat larger quantities than usual of carbonaceous food, such as fat meats, sugar, butter, bread, cakes and other preparations of white or superfine flour, nuts, fats, syrup, etc. Of course, a much larger quantity of carbonaceous food is required by the system in cold weather than in warm, but as a general thing people eat too much of it, clog up their systems with the excess and overburden the excretory organs, particularly the liver, in vain efforts to get rid of it. Those who take a great deal of out-door exercise are usually enabled to work it off, and seldom suffer much in consequence, except in hot weather: while those who lead a sedentary in-door life suffer most. When warm weather comes on in the spring, people require much less carbonaceous food, but instead of changing their diet as the weather changes they continue to eat the same kinds of food they have been eating during the coldest weather of the winter, and the consequence is that the already overburdened liver is unable to bear up under this extra load, and utterly refuses to perform its function until it has had a chance to rest and to throw off its accumulated burdens.

Now, to prevent this state of things two things are necessary. First, people must eat a less proportion of carbonaceous food at all times. Second, as the weather grows warmer in the spring they must eat a much less quantity of it than they do in cold weather, and substitute instead more vegetables and acid fruits. Every family should have a large supply of canned fruits and green vegetables to use at this time of year. For a single article there is nothing so good as tart apples, and they should be used in unlimited quantities.—Herald of Health.

☞ The Herald of Health says—"Children should never be forced to eat, but should be placed in such relations to life that they would always have a good appetite when the regular mealtime comes, and relish plain, healthful food. Give children an abundance of out-door exercise, fun and frolic, make them regular in their habits, and feed them only upon plain, nourishing food, and they will never need complain of their lack of appetite; but keep them in school five or six hours a day, and confined to the house the rest of the time, frowning down every attempt at play, feed them upon rich food, fine-flour bread, hot biscuits, pies, puddings, cakes, etc., let them eat candies, nuts, fruits, and any thing else they can get hold of at any and all hours between meals, give them tea and coffee to drink, and you need not expect that they will have an appetite, but you may expect that they will be pale, weak, and sickly, . . . and if you force food down their throats without changing their conditions of life, you need not wonder if they leave you to mourn their early death. . . . . The true way is to so change the conditions of life as to create a demand for food, then force will not be required to make the child eat."

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

AT LAST.

"Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni."

They told me 'twas a garden, with the sweet, bright flowers in bloom,
To me it was only a sepulchre, hidden in blackest gloom;
No resurrection anthems filled the odor-laden air,
Only one sound crept heavenward, a heavy, hopeless prayer.

I knew that there were angels in the dark and mystic cave;
But I looked for One, their Master, the good, the strong to save;
I cared not for the shining wings—He only unto me
A refuge, and a Savior, and a comforter could be.

But I could not find the Savior, and the morning was like night—
The garden held not Jesus, who only is the Light—
I wandered, vainly looking for the Friend whose well-loved face
Could change the darkened tomb into a glad, well-lighted place.

And then I heard a whisper. He only spoke my name,
And swift into my spirit a flood of rapture came.
I knew him when he called me, and, "Master," I replied,
O, having found thee, Savior, I can part with all beside.

Now earth is all a garden, 'tis here no dismal tomb;
I do not walk in darkness, He scatters all the gloom;
And gladly I am passing to the land where death shall be
As a forgotten angel, and Christ shall speak to me.

DR. N. L. WILLARD.

[Paul says that he is "in hope of eternal life." Titus 1: 2. How do you get eternal life, Paul? By a resurrection from the dead; "for if the dead rise not, then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 18. You expect to die, then, do you? Yes; "for I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth"—from the time of my departure—"there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." What day, Paul; the day of your departure, or death? No, for the crown is laid up for me, from that day onward; but it shall be given to me at the appearing of the Lord Jesus,—"and not to me only, but to all them also who love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 6–8. Well, that is very singular. But, Paul, you say you "rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Do you mean by this expression that you hope for it in heaven, or on the earth? "On the earth, of course." Why so, Paul? Because Isaiah says (35: 1, 2), "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert"—are there "wildernesses," "solitary places" and "deserts" in heaven?—"and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." Does it do so now? "It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon" (are these three well known places in heaven?); "they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God."

Yes, but that is all figurative language, you know, Paul. It means something else. You don't believe it yourself, do you, that is, believe it just as it is written? "I confess unto thee that I believe all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Acts 24: 14. But if you won't take Isaiah as authority, hear what God Almighty himself says: "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. 14: 21. "Therefore, the redeemed of the Lord shall return ["from the land of the enemy," Jer. 31: 16], and come with singing unto Zion [not go into heaven], and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads. They shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away." Isa. 51: 11. Does "sorrow" and "mourning" exist in heaven? If so, that may be the place. But Isaiah says just as much about Jupiter, as he does about heaven. Why may it not be Jupiter? But no; the inspired penman speaks of the earth, where the "redeemed of the Lord" shall live, and where "they shall reign for ever and ever." Rev. 22: 5.

Now I ask in all candor, what is to be done with all these scriptures, if the hope of the church is a home in heaven? It will not do to say these passages are all "figurative," to make them agree with that implied meaning of Paul's expression. Opposites are never taken figuratively to represent opposites. Fire is never used to signify water; nor is the earth ever used to represent heaven, especially in their present conditions. I think that there is enough plain, positive scripture given here to fully explain Paul's words, even admitting them to be of doubtful meaning (which I do not); therefore I hold, claim and maintain, with all the tenacity and energy of my nature, supported as I believe by the light of divine truth, that Paul's hope, and Peter's hope, and Daniel's hope was for the coming of the "Ancient of days," when "the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7: 27.]

"Not less explicit as to the heavenly nature of the church," continues Mr. G., "is the language employed by the inspired writer of the Epistle of the Hebrews. Referring to those who 'have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before them in the gospel,' the inspired penman proceeds to say—'Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail.' That the place here spoken of is heaven, or the holy of holies in celestial realms, is made sufficiently manifest, if there could have been a doubt on the point, by the verse which follows: 'Whither,' it is added, 'the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus'; for we all know, to our unspeakable joy, that Jesus Christ as our advocate and intercessor hath entered heaven for us."

[Which fact precludes the necessity of our going there. Now if Mr. G. fully understood the type, of which Christ's entering into heaven as our great High Priest is the antitype, he could not, I think, fail to see how he destroys the type, by insisting upon putting the saints in heaven at any time, and particularly now, while the High Priest (Jesus) is making intercession for us in the very holy of holies itself.

In the type Paul says, "The priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God." Heb. 9: 6. Observe, two or more priests (plural) could go into this first or outer tabernacle at any time. "But into the second [or the Holy of Holies] went the high priest ALONE, once every year; not without blood, which he offered for himself and for the errors of the people." Heb. 9: 7. Upon the hem of the high priest's robe were fastened golden bells. "And it [the robe] shall be upon Aaron to minister; and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the Lord, and when he cometh out, that he die not." Ex. 28: 35. It was death to any priest, let alone common men or the people, to enter the holy place; and it was only when the high priest had purified himself by the most thorough ablutions, and anointed himself with the holy oil, and clothed himself in the sacred vestments of his divine office, that he dared approach the presence of Jehovah.

During his absence in the holy place, the people, all of the people, "waited" outside. They did not rush in to hear him, see him, to assist him, or to make supplication for themselves. They "waited." What for? They waited for him to complete the great act of making an atonement before the Almighty for the sins they had committed. What did he do when he had accomplished this? Did he tell the people to all come in where he was? No, indeed; he "came out and lifted up his hands and blessed the people" where they stood.

Now, as was the type, so must be the antitype. Jesus, the holy Lamb of God, was the sacrifice, and is now the great High Priest. He now stands "alone" in the very Holy of Holies, before the great white throne, in the presence of the Majesty on high, where, having presented his own precious blood as an offering for the sins of the world, he stands as our Mediator and all powerful Intercessor. Alone, he pleads our miserable and awful condition, for he alone can succeed. Therefore the reason why he told his disciples that where he went they could not go. "No man hath at any time seen God," says St. John. What, then, shall we think of that unblushing presumption which dares to even assert that such miserable, crawling worms of the dust as we are, good, bad, and indifferent, go at death, at the rate of seventy every minute, into the awful presence of the great Eternal? If angels and cherubims stand with veiled faces before that face "from which the heavens and the earth fled away" (Rev. 20: 11), how and where can we find words to convey a proper expression of the idea of such insufferable egotism and conceit as is manifested by those who believe this awful delusion. This belief would be blasphemous, were it not so grossly ignorant.

But, thanks be to God, the light of his holy word shines with such brilliancy upon this glorious subject, that those who hunger after the truth as it is in Jesus, can make no mistake. We have an Advocate and Mediator who hath entered heaven "for us," and "who is able also to save them to the uttermost that come to God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. For such a high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, SEPARATE from sinners [not with a lot of sinners like us in heaven] and made higher than the heavens." Heb. 8: 25, 26. For this, therefore, we live and "serve the living and true God," and "WAIT for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivered us from the wrath to come." 1 Thess. 1: 10. Yes, we are among those who stand outside of the holy of holies, "waiting" for the High Priest to finish his ministrations before the Father of Lights, where we expect him to "come out" from thence and bless his people. This is our hope and expectation. This was Paul's faith, and the faith of all of the apostles and prophets, since the promise was made by the Almighty.

The idea of a hope which had for its object a home in heaven, never so much as even entered the apostle's mind, for he knew that such a thing was absolutely impossible, if the antitype was to be as the type. If it was not to follow the type, then the type ceased at once to be a type, and became only a meaningless, senseless ceremony. But we know that Paul was very exact in the use of his words, using only such words as would convey his [illegible] meaning, and nothing more. Therefore I boldly assert that Paul's hope, and the hope of all of the sacred writers, together with the church of God, in her collective capacity, was a hope for the RETURNING of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, by whose coming again eternal life, with all the countless blessings incident thereto, will be the reward, to be given to those "who by patient continuance in well doing" sought "for glory, honor, immortality."

In concluding this partial review of a work by one of the most able writers in England upon the popular idea of "The Hope of the Church" and a "Literal Interpretation of Scripture," I confess my temerity in thus daring to dispute his reasonings and arguments, knowing as I do that when I speak for tens, he speaks for thousands. But God hath chosen the weak of this world to confound the mighty,—therefore with the smooth little stone picked out of the living stream of God's holy word, I hurl it in the name of Israel's God at the head of this giant delusion.

By reason of frequent and constant interruptions, lack of ability, and doubts as to the results for good, my ideas have been very crudely expressed, and my arguments but poorly adduced. It was not that I could not find scripture enough to combat Mr. G.'s views, but that I discovered such an overwhelming flood of evidence against him, I found myself at a loss to decide which to use, and which to leave out. I could not quote all, nor was it at all necessary. There is no wisdom in loading a columbiad to kill a crow. Therefore I have given such scripture as I first found, and my ideas as they presented themselves at the time of writing.

As a parting shot, however, at the "home in heaven" theory, let us hear the blessed hope of king David, which is so beautifully expressed in his last prayer:—"Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name forever. And let the WHOLE EARTH BE FILLED WITH HIS GLORY. AMEN, AND AMEN." Ps. 72: 18, 19.

HEATHEN DOCTRINES TAUGHT IN CHURCHES.

In this paper the positions taken by the generality of the acceptors of the Scripture doctrine, that immortality is only in or through Christ, against the supporters of the common doctrines, are presented in as compact a form as possible. To those who oppose, we would say, do so in the words of Scripture; and, at the same time, refer them to the data hereafter given, which will enable them to perceive that upon one great leading principle is founded Heathenism, Roman Catholicism, and Protestantism; and the chief aspects which this principle takes are presented with only such references as are absolutely needed.

I. The immortality of the soul, or of man.

There is not one passage of Scripture which states that the soul, or man, is naturally immortal.

Whence, then, originated the fiction of natural immortality? For scriptural answer, see Gen. 3: 4. For proof of its heathen character, let the following speak for itself:

"Ne'er was the time when I was not, nor thou, nor yonder kings of earth:
Hereafter ne'er shall be the time, when one of us shall cease to be.
The soul, within its mortal frame, glides on through childhood, youth, and age,
Then, in another form renewed, renews its stated course again.
All indestructible is he that spread the living universe;
And who is he that shall destroy the work of the Indestructible?
Corruptible these bodies are, that wrap the everlasting soul—
The eternal, unimaginable soul. Whence, on to battle, Bharata!
For he that thinks to slay the soul, or he that thinks the soul is slain,
Are fondly both alike deceived. It is not slain—it slayeth not:
It is not born—it doth not die; past, present, future know it not;
'Ancient, eternal, and unchanged, it dies not with the dying frame.'"

This language is found not in the Scriptures, but in the old Indian sacred writings, "The Bhagvat Geeta." Reference: Pococke's India in Greece, p. 150, in note, where reference is given to Adeling's Sketch of Sanscrit Literature, by Talboys, p. 157. See also Wilkins' Translation, pp. 35–39.

Coming a little further down the stream of time, we find Plato declaring, "Every soul is immortal: for whatever is continually moved is immortal; but that which moves another and is moved by another, when it ceases to move, ceases to live," etc., etc., p. 321. The difficulty is to select passages from Plato, quotations to a similar effect coming easily to hand. See Bohn's edition, pp. 66–114.

It is this Babylo-Platonic dogma that has been upheld by the different bodies professing to be the Christian Church for so many centuries. How does John Wesley speak? "I am now an immortal spirit, strangely commingled with a little portion of earth; but this is only for a while. In a short time I am to quit this tenement of clay and remove into another state,—

"Which the living know not,
And the dead cannot—or they may not tell!"

See Wesley's Sermons, vol. 2., pp. 721-729, also pp. 629-632. In "The Parochial and Plain Sermons" of John H. Newman, B. D., vol. 4, pp. 283-4, very similar language to that used by John Wesley, occurs. De Ponte, in his "Meditations on the Mysteries of our Holy Faith," a Roman Catholic work, pp. 140, 141, etc., speaks with the same voice as Wesley and Newman; and with them agrees Ernest Renan; for in his "Life of Jesus," he dedicates that work "to the pure soul" of his sister, and asks her whether she recalls "from the bosom of God where thou reposest, those long days at Ghasir;" and this writer, pp. 295, 296, speaks about "the origin of the legends relative to the resurrection" of Christ. In truth, while the fiction of the natural immortality of the soul is accepted, the main support of the doctrine of Christ, the resurrection—is denied. See pp. 66–69. And in a Swedenborgian tract, this doctrine is also denied in strong language. For it is stated, "It is also clear, from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, as well as from other parts of the New Testament, that man's eternal destiny is fixed directly after death, and that the state of existence into which he then enters, is the state in which he will continue for ever. The body he has put off he will want no more, and, consequently, he will never re-assume it; for he has now entered upon a state of existence to which it is not at all adapted, and for which it was never intended!" See p. 5, et seq. of "The Scripture Doctrine of the Resurrection, or the Life after Death."

After reading these extracts, and turning to the Scriptures, it is surprising to find nothing of the kind in them. In order to do so, words must be altered or modified in meaning; ellipses made or supplied, to the manifest contradiction of the plain, literal sense of various passages. In concluding this section, let the termination of the argument for natural immortality be well weighed. It is said, the soul is naturally immortal, and is the man. This being so, man cannot die. How then does he die? Moreover, Christ was a man, and died for sin, or made atonement for sin. Inasmuch as the soul of Christ was his manhood, and, according to popular belief, could not die, how did he die making atonement for sin? So that in all fairness, we may say, the supporters of the natural immortality of the soul really deny that man does die, that Christ died, and that he died to make atonement for sins.

II. The next position taken by the supporters of this fiction is: The soul at death goes at once to the glories of heaven,—or to the torments of hell.

But in this, as in the former instance, there is not a single Scripture statement to that effect. Death in the Scriptures is compared to sleep. See Job 7: 21; Ps. 17: 15; 90: 50; 13: 3; Dan. 12: 2; Matt. 9: 24; Acts 7: 60; 2 Pet. 3: 4; 1 Cor. 15: 6.

True, the heathens taught that the soul was judged at death. In the Avesta, the religious books of the Parsees (Bernard Quaritch's edition, 1864), pp. 141–3, we read as follows:—

"89. Creator! where are those tribunes, where do they assemble, where do they come together, at which a man of the corporeal world gives account for his soul?

"90. Then answered Ahura-Mazda: After the man is dead, after the man is departed, after his going, the wicked, evil-knowing Daevas do work (?). 91. In the third night, after the coming and lighting of the dawn. 92. And when the victorious Mithra places himself on the mountains with pure splendor. 93. And the brilliant sun arises. 94. Then the Daeva Vizaresho by name, O holy Zarathrustra, leads the souls bound, the sinful living of the wicked Daeva-worshiping men. 95. To the ways which were created by time, comes he who is godless and he who is holy. 96. To the bridge Phinvat (comes he), the created by Ahura-Mazda, where they interrogate the consciousness and the soul regarding the conduct. 97. Practised in the corporeal world. 98. Thither comes the beautiful, well-created, swift, and well-formed (soul.) 99. Accompanied by a dog. 100. This leads away the souls of the pure over the Haraberezaiti (Alborj). 101. Over the bridge Phinvat it brings the host of the heavenly Yazatas. 102. Vohu-mano arises from his golden throne. 103. Vohumano speaks: How hast thou, O pure, come hither? 104. From the perishable world to the imperishable world? 105. The pure souls go contented. 106. To the golden thrones of Ahura-Mazda, of the Amesha-cpentas. 107. To Garo-nemana, the dwelling of the Amesha-cpentas, the dwelling of the other pure." See also the Khordah-Avesta 38, where, speaking of the condition of the wicked soul after death, it states that toward the end of the third night after death, "there goes the soul of the wicked man to the impure place, recollecting itself continually by the stench;" and "the fourth step takes the soul of the wicked man, and arrives at the darknesses without beginning."

In "The Path to Heaven," a Roman Catholic manual of devotions, we read in the recommendation of a departing soul, p. 736, the following words: "As thy soul goeth forth from the body, may the bright company of angels meet thee; may the judicial senate of apostles greet thee; may the triumphant army of white-robed martyrs come out to welcome thee," etc.; and in the Hymnal, at the end of the book, hymn 52, it is said:

"Yes, heaven is the prize!
Death opens wide the door;
And then the spirit flies
To God for evermore."

Where is the difference between the ideas brought before us in these extracts, and in the Wesleyan hymn commencing:

"Happy soul! thy days are ended,
All thy mourning days below;
Go, by angel-guards attended,
To the sight of Jesus, go," etc.!

But evidence that the vast majority of mankind believe and hold these ideas, is so cumulative, that it is really unnecessary to quote extract after extract in order to prove similarity of belief among various nations, and at various epochs of history. We cannot, however, do better than quote some of S. Baring Gould's M. A., remarks, in his "Curious Myths of the Middle Ages;" article, "The Fortunate Islands;" bearing directly on this subject. "It is curious," he writes, "to note how retentive of ancient mythologic doctrines relative to death, are the memories of the people. This Keltic fable of the 'Land beyond the sea,' to which the souls are borne after death, has engrafted itself on popular religion in England. The following hymn is from the collection of the Sunday School Union, and is founded on this venerable Druidic tenet—

'Shall we meet beyond the river,
Where the surges cease to roll;
Where in all the bright for-ever,
Sorrow near shall press the soul?' etc.

So is a hymn from the Countess of Huntingdon's collection—

'I launch into the deep,
And leave my native land,
Where sin lulls all asleep;
For thee I fain would all resign,
And sail for heaven with thee and thine,' etc.

Or I might quote a poem on 'The Last Voyage,' from the Lyra Messianica, which one would suppose was founded on the Gaelic legend told by Macpherson—

'On! on! through the storm and the billow,
By life's chequered troubles oppressed,
The rude deck my home and my pillow,
I sail to the land of the blest,' etc.

"It would be a study of no ordinary interest to trace some of the doctrines of modern popular Protestantism back to the mythologic systems. The early fathers erred in regarding the ancient heresies as bastard forms of Christianity. They were distinct religions, feebly tinged by contact with the religion of the cross. In like manner I am satisfied that we make a mistake in considering the dissent of England, especially as manifested in greatest intensity in the wilds of Cornwall, Wales, and the eastern moors of Yorkshire, where the Keltic element is strong, as a form of Christianity. It is radically different; its framework and nerve is of ancient British origin, passing itself off as a spiritual Christianity."

And, "I have instanced the belief in angelic music calling away the soul as one heathen item in popular Protestant mythology.

'Hark! they whisper! angels say,
Sister spirit, come away!'

Another is embodied in the tenet that the souls of the departed become angels. In Judaic and Christian doctrine, the angel creation is distinct from that of human beings, and a Jew or a Catholic would as little dream of confusing the distinct conception of angel and soul, as of believing in metempsychosis. But not so dissenting religion. According to Druidic dogma, the souls of the dead were guardians of the living; a belief shared with the ancient Indians, who venerated the spirits of their ancestry, the Pitris, as watching over and protecting them. Thus, the hymn, 'I want to be an angel,' so popular in Dissenting schools, is founded on the venerable Aryan myth, and therefore of exceeding interest; but Christian it is not."

Also, "the doctrine of the soul being transported at death, finds no place in the Bible or the liturgies of any branch—Greek, Roman, or Anglican—of the Church Catholic. Yet this was the tenet of our Keltic forefathers, and it has maintained itself in English Protestantism, so as to divest the doctrine of the resurrection of the body of its grasp on the popular mind."

Sufficient, however, has been placed before the readers on this section to enable them to perceive the identity of speech in conflicting religious bodies. In concluding, we would ask if it is true that the final destiny of the soul is determined at death, and the award then made,—what necessity is there for a resurrection of the dead? And, why speak of the judgment of those who already have been judged? So that—easily it may be seen—the fiction of going to heaven or hell at death does away with the need of a resurrection or of future judgment, and again makes entirely useless the need of Christ's death and resurrection.

III. The final position to be noticed is, that man, or the soul, being naturally immortal, suffers, being wicked, after resurrection, or after death, eternal torments. But for this, as for the former instances, no passage of scripture can be found in which the eternal torment of the wicked is declared or set forth to us as a truth to be believed. There is not a single declaration in Scripture to the effect that the wicked will be raised immortal. The righteous are said to be raised immortal; but where is this said of the wicked? And, if eternal torments commence after death, and not after resurrection, where is the Scripture warrant for the statement? Eternal torments can only be inflicted on those who have eternal existence. But eternal existence is the same as eternal life. If the wicked have eternal life, from whom comes it? Of the believer in Christ only it is said eternal life is through Jesus, the Christ, after the resurrection. In the judgment before God (Rev. 20: 11-15), those not found written in the book of life are cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death.

Very unanimous are the generality of religious teachers as to the eternal torments of the wicked. In the "Bhagvat-Geeta," Wilkins' translation, p. 32, it is said: "The Sankar provideth hell both for those which are slain and those which survive; and their forefathers, being deprived of the ceremonies of cakes, or water offered to their manes, sink into the infernal regions." And, pp. 117, 118, "There are these three passages to Narak (or the infernal regions), lust, anger, and avarice, which are the destroyers of the soul: wherefore a man should avoid them; for, being freed from these gates of sin, which arise from the influence of the Tama-Goon, he advanceth his own happiness; and at length he goeth the journey of the Most High. He who abandoneth the dictates of the Sastra to follow the dictates of his own lusts, attaineth neither perfection, happiness, nor the regions of the Most High."

Plato, in "The Gorgias," speaking of the punishment of the soul after death, says, "But those that are benefited at the same time that they suffer punishment both from gods and men, are such as have been guilty of curable offences; their benefit, however, both here and in hades, accrues to them through means of pain and torment; for it is not possible to be freed from injustice in any other way. But those who have committed the most extreme injustice, and have become incurable through such crimes, serve as examples to others; and these are not benefited at all, as being incurable, but others are benefited by beholding them suffering for ever the greatest, most bitter, and most dreadful punishments for their sins, being suspended in the prison of hades altogether as examples, a spectacle and a warning to the unjust men who are constantly arriving." Bohn's Edit. p. 230; see also pp. 227-232, pp. 121-123. Does not this agree with the purgatory of Roman Catholicism?

Mahomet, in the Koran (see Sale's translation, W. Tegg, publisher, London), p. 275, thus describes the ultimate destiny of mankind: "There are two opposite parties who dispute concerning their Lord; and they who believe not shall have garments of fire fitted to them, boiling water shall be poured on their heads; their bowels shall be dissolved thereby, and also their skins; and they shall be beaten with maces of iron. So often as they shall endeavor to get out of hell, because of their torments, they shall be dragged into the same; and their tormentors shall say unto them, 'Taste ye the pain of burning.' God will introduce those who believe and act righteously into gardens, through which rivers flow; they shall be adorned therein with circlets of gold and pearls, and their vestures therein shall be silk." P. 275; pp. 436, 476, etc.

De Ponte, Roman Catholic, in his Meditations, pp. 211-218, gives full accounts of the torments, tormentors, and the tormented in hell. He says of the torment: "After it has continued fifty thousand years, there remain other fifty thousand millions to pass; and these being passed, there remain others, and then others, without number or end." Compare with this, page 750 of the "The Path to Heaven," from which is taken the following: "Never to see God—to be burning in flames for ever—the blood boiling in our veins, the marrow in our bones—to be trampled on by devils—to have all that is hideous for ever before our eyes—to have rage, anguish, and despair eternally rooted in our heart, without comfort or mitigation. Oh, what a life!" See also Cardinal Wiseman's "Lectures on the Principal Doctrines and Practices of the Catholic Church." Lecture 11. "On Satisfaction and Purgatory;" and J. H. Newman's "Parochial and Plain Sermons," vol. 4, sermon 6.

John Wesley thus writes (Sermons, vol. 2, see pp. 74-76): "Suppose him to be just now plunged into 'the lake of fire, burning with brimstone,' where 'they have no rest day or night, but the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever.' Why, if we were only to be chained down one day, yea, one hour, in a lake of fire, how amazingly long would one day or one hour appear. I know not if it would not seem as a thousand years. But (astonishing thought!) after thousands of thousands, he has but just tasted of his bitter cup! After millions of millions, it will be no nearer the end than it was the moment it began," etc. And, again (Sermons, vol. 2, see pp. 268–270), "There is no grandeur in the infernal regions; there is nothing beautiful in those dark abodes; no light but that of vivid flames; and nothing new, but one unvaried scene of horror! There is no music but that of groans and shrieks: of weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth; of curses and blasphemies against God, or cutting reproaches against one another," etc. (Italics ours.)

John Wesley, in speaking of the souls after death, says (vol. 3, Sermons, p. 235): "It is, indeed, very generally supposed, that the souls of good men, as soon as they are discharged from the body, go directly to heaven; but this opinion has not the least foundation in the oracles of God." And James Bennett, D. D., in "The Congregational Lecture," "The Theology of the Early Christian Church," see pp. 216–221, says: "Either the fathers were false teachers, or the church that boasts of them has been taking money for selling smoke; for, after all that has been paid for mortuary masses, the souls, both of the righteous and the wicked, are just where they were, in hades, waiting for the resurrection at the judgment day." But this, by the way.

Hymn 241, in "The Path to Heaven," is entitled "The Four Great Truths;" and the fourth great truth is,

"The good with God in heaven above
Will ever happy be;
The wicked in the flames of hell
Will burn eternally.
All this, and all the church doth teach,
My God, I do believe;
For thou hast bid us hear the church,
And thou canst not deceive."

(Italics ours.) Yet, strangely enough, hymn 242, entitled, "Life Eternal," declares,

"Life eternal! life eternal!
Depth of depth of bliss unknown;
Life eternal! life eternal!
Thee I seek in Christ alone."

Yes; this is the truth which the disciple of Christ—the worshiper in spirit and in truth—most heartily accepts. His life is hid with Christ in God. "And this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

How is it that, in the account of the Acts of the Apostles, we cannot find a single instance in which an appeal is made to eternal torments in order to terrify their hearers into embracing their doctrine? True, future judgment and punishment are declared to be in store; but where is it said to be endless torment?

Enough has been stated to show the similarity of Heathen, Roman Catholic, and Protestant teachings on what are considered essential doctrines. If, indeed, these doctrines be according to the word of God, it is our duty to promulgate them; but if not, and we are sure they are not, how imperative that their falsehood should be exposed, and the truth fearlessly proclaimed. It is time, indeed, that the quibbles as to vestments and incense—the old clothes of priestcraft—were cast aside, and attention given to the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, faith, and truth.—Rainbow.

THE BEGINNING.

O. R. FASSETT.

It is written, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Gen. 1: 1. This is a period far back in past eternity, undefined and indefinite. It is the starting point of divine revelation to man, and inscrutable to the finite mind. The beloved John begins the history of Immanuel where Moses begins the genesis or cosmogony of our world: "In the beginning was the word." John 1: 1. This, however, was before all creation: "The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made."

In the book of Proverbs, wisdom personified says—"The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was." Prov. 8: 22, 23. From which we learn that this beginning includes in its mysterious compass the past "everlasting" ages dating from the origin of all things. "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting" ("the days of eternity," margin.) Micah 5: 2. Here we are lost in contemplation. Here research is in vain. The finite mind cannot fathom the eternity past, nor the eternity to come.

It is affirmed, however, by those who would be wise above what is written, that the Mosaic record makes the period of the creation about six thousand years ago; whereas geological facts demonstrate that the globe has had an existence many millions of years, and ages even. "That the beds which form the crust of the globe have been divided into five groups—the primary, the transition, the secondary, the tertiary, and the quartenary rocks. Each of these strata was millions of years forming."

It will be seen from the scriptural account of the epoch of the creation, that there is no intimation given that it was six thousand years ago when the globe was formed, but that it was anterior to this; and when God fitted it up as the residence for man, it was already in a chaotic state, as verse second declares: "And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep." Hence the "Comprehensive Dictionary of the Bible" on the word "creation" has the statement—"It is now generally agreed that neither in Gen. 1: 1, nor elsewhere in the Scriptures, is any definite time assigned as that of the first creative act. . . . It is now also the prevalent opinion among the best geologists as well as Biblical scholars, that the discoveries of modern science are not at all irreconcilable with the declaration of Scripture. . . . Many (Chalmers, Buckland, etc.), have held that the work of the six days comprehended only the present arrangement of the material universe, and the introduction of the existing orders of animals and plants, with man at their head."

LITTLE CHILDREN.

J. W. THOMAS.

The present age is emphatically one of boasting, pride, and self-love. This spirit is not confined either to the irreligious world, but it is seen in many who claim to be followers of the meek and lowly Savior. Almost everywhere there seems to be a disposition to boast, to exalt self, and to out-rival others. It is discovered sometimes in the pulpit and in the prayer meeting. Ministers swell, and try to get off something ministerial; and deacons brag about what they have done, and think they deserve the most praise; and others talk and pray long and loud, as if they were more wise and talented than every body else. All such wisdom as this is not from heaven, but is "earthly, sensual, devilish." If the adversary can "puff up" an individual to think he is something, he has about gained his end. He knows as well as Solomon that "pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." The human heart is naturally inclined to evil, hence the great necessity of looking to God for help, and having our dispositions changed by the power of divine grace.

On one occasion the disciples were beset with this spirit of rivalry, and the contention was so great between them that they brought the matter to Jesus, saying, "Lord, who shall be greatest in the kingdom?" The answer to this question contains not only a cutting rebuke, but a very deep and instructive lesson, well worthy the study and improvement of all who would be heirs of the coming kingdom.

"Jesus called a little child unto him and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

Now it is evident that the Savior does not require his disciples to resemble little children in every thing. This would not be reasonable. We are not to be like them in ignorance, in waywardness and pettishness. Paul says "be no longer children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine." In understanding and firmness we must be men, but in some very important respects we must ever be like little children. The expression has deep significance, or it would not be so frequently used. John says, "Little children, it is the last time." "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." "Little children, abide in him." "Little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

I will mention three things in which it is absolutely necessary we should be like them.

Faith, love, humility. Children believe what their parents tell them, and so christians must lay hold of what God has spoken with unsuspecting confidence. Children do not cherish envy, malice and hatred in their hearts, but they love with pure and tender affection. This commandment have we from him, that we "love one another;" and it must be with "pure hearts fervently." The principal thing mentioned by the Savior is humility. "Whoso shall humble himself as this little child." How often is this duty inculcated throughout the Scriptures. "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God." "Be clothed with humility."

Reader, how is it? are you truly humble?
"O God! my inmost soul convert."

WHAT NEXT?

In previous articles, we have followed the prophetic stream of time from the present aspect of things till we arrived at the commencement of the millennium, when all the saints shall be with Christ in the sanctuary, or the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Then paradise will be restored from the curse, and bloom again in Eden beauty and loveliness. In this happy home the saints are to enjoy a thousand years before the wicked shall be raised from the dead. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. 20: 6. It should be observed that "the first resurrection" takes place before the commencement of the thousand years, during which the saints are to reign with Christ. It is certain they cannot reign "with Christ" "on the earth" before his second coming; and as he has not yet come the second time, we are compelled to believe that the first resurrection and the thousand years are yet in the future.

While the saints shall be reigning during the thousand years, the wicked will be sleeping in their graves. After saying that the saints "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years" (Rev. 20: 4), Jesus goes on to say, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Rev. 20: 5. We can draw but one common-sense conclusion from this language, and that is, the wicked will live again when the thousand years begin, "the dead in Christ shall rise" (1 Cor. 15: 16); when they end, "the rest of the dead" will rise, and be condemned to die "the second death," from which there will be no resurrection; hence there will be eternal punishment with death, not eternal torment.

The first death and "the first resurrection" cannot be of a moral nature; but must be literal. If the first death and resurrection can be called moral, then the second should be moral also. Let us reason a few moments from the stand-point that the first death and resurrection relate only to character. With this view of the subject, the first death consists in becoming a sinner, and the first resurrection in being converted. At what period in the past did these converted ones begin to reign, and continue reigning a thousand years "on the earth" "WITH Christ," before his second advent? We can see no possible way to harmonize the Scriptures with such a position. We find this specific period of a thousand years named six times in the last revelation from Jesus. Shall we tear it from the book, or let it stand? Had this period been made plain in the other prophecies, there would have been no occasion for a further revelation on the subject. In Isa. 61: 1, 2, we find a prophecy quoted by the Savior, which reads as follows: "The Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; . . . to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God." In the early ministry of the Savior he went into a synagogue in Nazareth, "and stood up for to read." He read from Isaiah to the middle of the second verse of the sixty-first chapter, "and he closed the book." The verse reads: "To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God." One might well suppose that the chronology of the whole verse was the same; that is, that it would all be fulfilled in the same year. No one would think that the second clause of the verse would not be accomplished till over eighteen hundred years after the first part; but such was the fact. This was known to Jesus; therefore, he stopped reading where he did, and said: "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." Luke 4: 21. If he had read the whole verse, he could not have said, in truth, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." These remarks on Isa. 61: 1–2 will apply to some passages in the New Testament, where the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked are mentioned in the same verse, without stating that there is any time to intervene between the two; but in the last revelation from Christ, he speaks plainly of "the first resurrection," and then says "but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Rev. 20: 5. A first implies a second. If the wicked dead are not to live at all, why did he say, they "lived not again until the thousand years were finished"? We can see no sense in this scripture, unless they live again at the time specified.

But suppose the first resurrection and thousand years are already in the past, when did "the rest of the dead" rise from their graves? As before stated, if the first resurrection has taken place it must have been a spiritual one, and took place at conversion. Let us see if such a position will bear inspection and criticism. In the first place, no man has yet lived a thousand years on the earth; therefore if Christ had been personally present, it would not be true that "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Secondly, if the first resurrection was a moral one, and took place at conversion, then, inasmuch as "the rest of the [morally] dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished;" no one could be converted during the thousand years; hence, "when the thousand years" were expired, the whole church would have been extinct eight and nine hundred years; only a very few lived to be over one hundred years of age. The living of threescore years and ten, or even one hundred, away from Christ, and being most bitterly persecuted, as were the Christians during the period including the thousand years, if it be in the past, when millions upon millions were tortured and slaughtered, we think cannot fulfill the declaration, "They lived and reigned WITH Christ a thousand years."

Among this class who have "part in the first resurrection," are those who "were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God," and those who "had not worshiped the beast, neither his image," and those who would not receive the "mark" of the beast "upon their foreheads, or in their hands." These persons are now literally dead; hence they can not reign "with Christ," till after he shall come and raise them from the dead. Their reign with Christ is after they were beheaded; therefore it must be after the personal coming of Christ; "but the rest of the dead" will not live again till a thousand years after the first resurrection. As Christ has not yet come to reign, it is certain that the saints have not yet taken the promised kingdom; for they cannot have the kingdom before the King takes possession.

If the saints have reigned a thousand years in the past, where was their dominion? Was it in the dens and caves of the earth, where they hid away from their persecutors? Who would think of calling that a reign with Christ? If that was what constituted reigning with him, we have reason to rejoice that we had no part in such a reign; but we have a most ardent desire to reign with those who shall be among the "blessed and holy," that shall have "part in the first resurrection."

VALLEJO.

Our meetings in Vallejo, on San Pablo Bay, twenty-five miles in a northerly direction from San Francisco, were closed Thursday evening, March 6th. They were held in the Presbyterian church, of which Bro. N. B. Klink is pastor. The more we became acquainted with him, the more we saw in him to esteem and admire. It is rare that we find one so unsectarian, honest, and sincere in the service of the Lord. He is satisfied that Jesus is soon coming to set up his kingdom, and declares this great truth with commendable boldness. We found him another Bro. Bailey, whose only object appears to be to bring men and women to Christ, and have them ready for his coming. He raised no objections to the other great truths presented, but seemed willing that christian character, and not some human creed, should be the test of fellowship.

The meetings in Vallejo were excellent. Men who had not been to church for years became deeply interested, and from fifteen to twenty-five requested prayers each evening. Many were quickened, backsliders were reclaimed, sinners converted, and thirteen were buried with Christ in baptism. Quite a number of heads of families were converted. Bro. Rich, the pastor of the Methodist church, united with us in the good work. It was hard to leave such an interesting state of things, but a greater interest in San Francisco seemed to demand the remnant of time we had to spend on the Pacific coast. We left quite a number seeking the Lord; and a door wide open for future meetings, should we ever return. We departed with the satisfactory assurance that we had left behind us many warm friends in Jesus.

☞ MONDAY EVENING, Apr. 10th, we closed our labors in San Francisco, and left the coast yesterday (Apr. 11th) for Nevada, two hundred and six miles north-east from San Francisco. Nevada City contains about six thousand inhabitants, in the midst of the mining region. It is said to be a very wicked place, but we hope to find a goodly number here who will sympathise with whatever tends to make men better. We now purpose to go to Salt Lake City next week. We expect to be home about the 9th of May.

WHAT THEY SAY.

So far as we know, every paper in San Francisco, and in the cities and towns for many miles around, have had something to say about "Elder Grant." We have given our readers a few specimens, knowing that they were interested to learn the results of our labors on this coast. Our strongest opposition has come from those who profess to be the followers of Christ. While wicked men and infidels were daily seeking the Lord, and being converted, we have received but little sympathy from professed ministers of Christ, and popular church members. The very truths which have served to disarm skeptics and lead them to Jesus, have received the most opposition. But those who oppose so bitterly, seldom, if ever, come to hear for themselves. We wish they could be present in our conference meetings and hear the soul-stirring testimonies of those who have embraced what some call "heresy." We think they would say, If such is the fruit of heresy, it is far better in its effects than the doctrine presented by the opposition. It is a rich feast to hear those just converted, and others who have been serving the Lord for many years, testify to the glorious results arising from believing what we have preached to them. Not one has received and confessed what our enemies call "the new doctrine," who did not afterwards love Jesus and the Bible better than before; while, on the other hand, we have yet to learn that a single one has been comforted and blest in opposing these things. There have been some marked cases among the opponents.

One man came to the meetings in a backslidden state; was revived, and started again in his pilgrimage to the better land. After traveling with us pleasantly for a season, and gaining strength in the Lord, he commenced opposition against what he called the "no-soul doctrine." He took much pains to stir up prejudice against us by affirming that he heard us say words that we never uttered, which expressed thoughts we never had in our mind. We said to him one evening that he would certainly backslide if he did not cease his opposition. He replied, "I don't care"; and said he was determined to do all he could to prevent the people from believing what we preached in relation to the nature of the soul of man. We have abundant reason to believe he has lost his peace, and the bright evidence that he belongs to Christ, which he felt before he began to oppose. On the other hand, those who have opened their hearts most widely to receive that for which we are despised and rejected by many, and for the belief of which we are shut out of popular churches, are now rejoicing most heartily in the blessed hope, loving the appearing of Jesus, and anxiously waiting for his return.

But we took our pen to introduce an article from the "California Christian Advocate" (Methodist) of March 29th, 1871. This is the latest news of the kind that we have received, and reads as follows:—

"BOOKS FOR THE TIMES.

"The advent and preaching of Mr. Grant, the Adventist, among us, has revived an often-exploded heresy—the sleep of the righteous from death until the resurrection, and the annihilation of the wicked. The countenance given to Mr. Grant by some good people, and the endorsement and commendation he has received in certain quarters, are likely to mislead many good people, who see only the zeal and earnestness of the man, without pausing to sift the truth he may utter from the errors insidiously inwoven with it. We most earnestly commend to all persons, in any way interested in the subjects above referred to, the following books, now on sale at 711 Mission street, San Francisco: 'Man All Immortal,' by Bishop Clark; 'The Immortality of the Soul and the Resurrection of the Body,' by Dr. A. Mattison; and 'Annihilation not of the Bible,' by N. D. George. Any one of these books is an antidote to the heresies alluded to, but the last named is perhaps the most complete refutation, from the standpoint of the Scriptures. Will not pastors read these books and scatter them among their people?"

SENSIBLE.

Last evening, (April 3d), Platt's Music Hall was crowded to hear a lecture from the noted Mr. W. M. Punshon, a Methodist preacher now from Canada, formerly from England. The admission fee was fifty cents, and one dollar for reserved seats. The following sensible remarks are from the San Francisco Daily Chronicle:—

PREACHING THEN AND PREACHING NOW.

Religion and genteel mendicancy have become so intimately associated of late years, and the hearing of the gospel of Christ with any degree of clearness so intimately connected with good clothes and the payment of high fees for seats, that the peculiarity of charging gate-money to hear a sermon on "Repentance," or issuing tickets for a discourse on "Damnation," does not now strike us as a few years ago it most certainly would. Preaching for the conversion of sinners seems to us to be one thing; orating on scriptural topics at fifty cents a head, quite another. Advertising oneself as having been "pronounced one of the greatest orators of the age," for the purpose of drawing a good house, also another thing. One action breathes the spirit of christianity as written and taught by all churches; the other breathes the spirit of something which may be very good, but which is certainly not christianity.

Fancy St. Paul, with barriers erected in the Areopagus at Athens, and charging one drachma a head entrance fee; with Silas taking the money, and Timotheus checking him. We imagine we see the poster at the gate—

WALK IN, ATHENIANS, TO HEAR THE CELEBRATED ORATOR,
PAUL!
Who will to-day let
THE THEOLOGICAL CAT
Out of the bag in the most thrilling and interesting manner, and with a most extraordinary flow of language, showing you who is
THE UNKNOWN GOD.
☞ Admission—One Drachma.

Or let us picture the same individual at Rome advertising himself thus:—

COME AND SEE
THE RENOWNED PAUL!
Who preaches in his own house, every day, in chains, and guarded by a
REAL LIVE ROMAN SOLDIER.
His language is so choice, his voice so pleasant and harmonious, and his periods so beautifully rounded as he talks of the perdition that awaits
THE UNCONVERTED,
That all who hear him pronounce him to be one of the greatest orators of the age!
☞ Admission—Two Oboli.
Stoics will have to take the back seats. Reserved seats in front for the Epicureans.

To complete the picture we must not forget that Paul would be supposed to be doing all this to collect money enough to travel around and see the world until he was tired and then go to some place where the climate would be suited to his health, and his wife's health, and deleterious to that of his mother-in-law, and where the people were agreeable and not too strong-minded, there to build a highly ornamented, carpeted, stained-glass windowed church, with a carved and cushioned pulpit, and a snug parsonage attached, to pass the remainder of his days in pious comfort and godly luxury. If Paul had done all this he would have had a comfortable time of it and would have enjoyed life as our clergy—many of them—do, and christianity would have progressed backwards; but he sank all worldly considerations and gave his life, his strength, his intellect, and his long and careful education for nothing—as our clergymen do not do—and christianity gained power and influence daily, not only among the poor, but also among the rich. But we fear that very few of those who most needed the eloquence of a christian divine—the poor and the ignorant—would pay fifty cents to get into Platt's Hall last night and be lectured to upon the virtues of Daniel, which they should imitate; when they could find an infidel anywhere, who would only be too glad to propound his doctrines and precepts to them for nothing. It may be all right—this clerical exhibition business—and in the case of clergymen delivering lectures on secular subjects, it doubtless is, but there is something in it, too, opposed to the spirit and letter of the religion which these clergy profess—to make the system pleasing even with the eloquence of a Punshon to reconcile us, if possible, and the admission fee as low as fifty cents, with something extra for reserved seats.

FOR SR. C. B. TURNER.—Previous acknowledgments, $151.25. Mrs. Emma S. T. Hall, $2; A. P., $1; W. Bamford, $1; Isabella D. Goodwin, $1. AG'T.

BRO. H. H. DICKINSON.—The sudden death of Bro. Dickinson has filled our hearts with sorrow. He was Secretary of the Advent Christian Association, and a member of the Board of Directors of the Advent Christian Publication Society.

He is the first official member of the Society, since its formation more than ten years since, who has fallen a victim to the enemy death. Bro. Dickinson was an able man, prompt and efficient. The day before he was taken sick he wrote us a very kind and brotherly letter (perhaps the last one he ever wrote); but his presence and counsel we shall have no more. He sleeps in Jesus; and our prayer is that the Lord himself will soon appear in his glory, and awake our brother, with all the dear sleeping ones, to life eternal. G. T. A.

BRO. W. S. PIERCE writes in reference to Bro. D.'s death:—"Bro. Dickinson was taken Saturday noon, the 15th, with vomiting, alternating with hiccough, which continued till Monday morning, completely exhausting him, and probably causing the rupture of a blood vessel. He lingered in great suffering till Wednesday morning."

☞ We have just received the sad tidings of the death of Sr. C. B. Turner, which occurred last Thursday, April 20th.

"ITS POLLUTED FORM."

In the San Francisco Daily Chronicle, April 8th, 1871, we find another note of caution, similar to the one published in the Daily Examiner, April 3d. We trust the good people in San Francisco will avoid fables and pollution in all their forms. Hundreds are quite aware that these are the "perilous times" of "the last days," and have most fully discarded all human creeds, and taken the Bible for their only rule of faith and practice; believing it teaches in very plain language the speedy personal coming of Christ, the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, and that the saints will inherit the earth when paradise is restored. The following is the "note of caution" to which we have referred:—

"Boston, 59 East Brookline St.,

EDITOR CHRONICLE:—I herewith mail to you the Advent Herald, the oldest prophetic journal in our country, and a copy of the "Faith of Evangelical Adventists." The materialistic Adventists went off from us on account of that view, and now generally ignore us altogether. But that view is no part of Adventism. I think it just you should know the facts in the case, as your people of San Francisco are now getting Adventism in its polluted form. If you should state the fact that there is another class of Adventists, known as Evangelical, I think it would be a service rendered to the cause of truth, and a favor to your readers. Respectfully,

CYRUS CUNNINGHAM,
Pastor of the Evangelical Advent Church,
Boston, Massachusetts."

Perhaps it may be proper for us to say, that we have endeavored to preach the word of the Lord in its un"polluted form," just as we found it in the sacred Scriptures, and have seen most blessed results. Catholics, infidels, and backsliders, have been brought to Christ, and scores are now rejoicing in a Savior's love, who a few weeks since were in the broad road to destruction. If the author of the "caution" could have been in our meetings, and heard the dear children of the Lord—young converts, and many members of various churches—express their joy, and their love for God and the Bible, because they had been led out of the darkness caused by believing the doctrines called by some "evangelical," we think he would have been astonished at the results of preaching "Adventism in its polluted form," and would have almost involuntarily exclaimed with others, Praise the Lord for such blessed fruits.

CONDITION OF FRANCE.

The political condition of France, and especially of its capital, is terrible. The scenes of the French revolution, in 1793, are being re-enacted. The following from Paris, dated April 10th, will give the reader some idea of the state of things:—

"Unless the Germans save us, Paris will soon swim in blood. The Commune hourly grows more desperate, and resorts to force and excesses. The Conciergerie is filled with priests and nuns, arrested on warrants calling them citizens, styled the servants of a person called God. Archbishop Darboy was stripped naked and bound to a pillar, and then scourged and mocked for hours by a band of two hundred Reds."

The revolutionists are strongly opposed to every thing that connects itself with religious matters. They are infidels. We do not expect to see things quiet again in France, till the return of Napoleon. The "woman" that was seated on the scarlet-colored beast appears to be tasting the wine in the cup of the Lord's indignation. Her final end must be near at hand. Our Lord is soon coming.

"Glad tidings, glad tidings,
The kingdom is near."

RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.—Lk. 16.

The advocates of the existence of a personal soul after the death of the body, continually resort to the statement concerning the rich man and Lazarus to support their theory, but they utterly fail in this effort, for not a word is said in the entire record about the soul of Lazarus, or the soul of the rich man; and their whole argument hangs upon their unproved opinion that the soul is meant, even though not mentioned; thus making a mere guess so the foundation of the whole argument in their favor.

1. It is not said that Lazarus' body died, and his soul was carried to heaven, but Lazarus himself was carried to Abraham's bosom; and Abraham was buried in the cave of Machpelah; so if this is a literal case, instead of being a parable, it would only prove that Lazarus was honored with a burial in Abraham's cave, having angels for bearers.

2. It is not said that the rich man's soul went to gehenna, the final place of punishment for sinners, but the rich man himself went to hades, incorrectly rendered "hell"; and hades is the depository of "dead" men, and unjudged men. "And death and hades [hell] delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged." Rev. 20: 13. So the inhabitants of hades are unjudged, and the wicked must come out of hades before receiving their punishment. Even the saints are to come from hades, exclaiming, "O hades, where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. 15: 55. The Bible view of hades never makes it a realm of disembodied men, but of corporeal men; so if the case of the rich man is given as a historical fact, instead of a parable, it proves nothing about disembodied men, for it says nothing about them; but if it is a parable, then before our opponents can derive any help from it, they must first prove what it represents, not guess at it. We do not quote it as proof of our views. We have our opinion concerning the parable. It is this:

The Savior in giving his parables, always made use of figures that the people were familiar with. In giving a parable to the Jews, he would not employ figures that they could not understand, as such figures would fail to illustrate the fact with which he wished to impress their minds. The Pharisees, to whom this parable was addressed, had embraced an unscriptural idea concerning hades (here rendered hell), regarding it a "subterranean region" in the bowels of the earth, and believing in "rewards and punishments under the earth," of a temporary nature,—one part of this "subterranean hades" was for the righteous, called "Abraham's bosom," and angels escorted the good to this place; while the other department contained a lake of fire, and the wicked were driven near this lake, and suffered from the heat of the flames: between these two departments was a "gulf," which was impassable, yet the two regions were within sight and hearing of each other.

This is a condensed statement of Josephus' account of their views of hades. And this is evidently the ground-work of the Savior's parable,—that is, to illustrate a certain truth, he employed these figures, with which they were familiar—"hades," "Abraham's bosom," the "gulf," and the "flames"—not for the purpose of sanctioning their theory, for he elsewhere cautions us both against the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees, the one class having gone to one extreme, and the other class to the other extreme.

While in captivity, a part of the Jews imbibed the speculative notions of the heathen concerning life after life, and coined up this view of hades, as the locality of that future existence; but another portion of the Jews refused to imbibe these heathen views; so after their return from captivity, the class who imbibed these heathen notions, and mixed them up with the truth of the Bible, were called Pharisees, having a corrupted faith; but the other class not only repudiated this element of heathenism (life in death), and insisted that man is totally dead, but in their over-anxiety to get as far as possible from this heathen notion (life in death), they blindly rushed to the opposite extreme, and claimed that man was not only totally dead, but also eternally dead—no resurrection.

Now the Savior neither endorses the corrupted views of the Pharisees, nor the extreme notion of the Sadducees; but specially cautions us against the doctrine of both classes. Matt. 16: 6.

So Christ in selecting figures from the theology of the Pharisees, out of which to frame a parable for their special benefit, must not be understood as endorsing their views: because (1) to endorse their theory would be to endorse what he had cautioned us against; and (2) it would conflict with the popular claim that Abraham's bosom represents heaven above, where Christ is, instead of a subterraneous region in the bowels of the earth. It would be as fatal to modern theology to insist that Christ endorsed the Pharisees' view of "hades" and "Abraham's bosom," as to our view; so we are all agreed that Christ did not endorse their view. Yet it remains a fact, that although Christ did not endorse the Pharisees' view that Abraham's bosom is in the bowels of the earth, and the dead, both good and bad, dwell in such an underground world, he did select figures from this received view to illustrate a certain truth—he did speak of a rich man as going to the Pharisees' hades; he did speak of a beggar as going to the other department, called Abraham's bosom; he did speak of the Pharisees' impassable gulf; he did speak of the torment of the rich man, and the comfort of the beggar—all to simply illustrate a certain truth; not to adopt their theology, alike averse to Scripture and modern theology.

Then to illustrate the death of the Old Covenant Church, and the reception of the New Covenant Church, he speaks the following parable:

"There was a certain rich man [representing the Old Covenant Church] which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day [possessed of wealth and enjoyment.] And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores [representing the spiritual poverty and helplessness of the Gentile race]."

The following represents the condition of the two parties prior to the change in their condition, which is here represented by death, and a removal to a different region.

"And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died, and was buried, and in hades he lifted up his eyes, being in torments."

The following facts are set forth:

1. A change takes place in the history of the Gentile race, represented by death; though once destitute of spiritual food and raiment, and covered with moral pollution, the gospel angels conduct them to the faith of Abraham, and by faith they become his children.

2. A change likewise overtakes the rich Jewish church, represented by death, and it is plunged into a state of temporal chastisement, or torment. The great gulf of unbelief will allow no alleviation or remedy to be administered. By hearing Moses and the prophets, which proclaim Christ, they might have warded off this torment from different branches of the fleshly family of Israel, in different localities, but the different branches of this family, in other regions, were as unbelieving as the main branch at Jerusalem. W. S.

PASSING along the road the other day we thought we had found a very beautiful knife. On picking it up, it was found to be only a handle without a blade. So do we hear very beautiful sermons—well written and well read—but they are without the blade. They cut out no cancers of sin, and carve out no models of piety. Sermons must have blades.

— Not the goods which we have acquired, but the good that we have imparted, will indicate the success of our lives.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 3d, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

MOORESTOWN, N. J.

R. & E. S. WILLARD.

On a fine Spring morning we set out with horse and buggy to meet with the dear saints in that place. We held the good seed in an open hand, and gave it out as we found willing hands to receive it. Nearing our destination we saw a group beside the road. Selected tracts were ready, and some care for one whom I saw was honored with gray hairs. But what was our surprise and joy to find this group composed of the very brethren whom we were going to see; they had walked out over a mile to meet us, thinking, as the morning was so fine, we surely would come!

Salutations went quickly round, when one said—"Now go right to my house, and we will be home soon." We soon sped over the rest of the way, while, with light hearts, we talked of "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." To us it seemed like "the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forevermore"; and so does he command his blessing on his saints who love one another. [A word right on this point. Brethren and sisters, we must receive each other just as Jesus receives us—with all our faults; and love one another as Jesus loves us—just as we are. Immortality only can bring perfection, and then it will be no virtue to love.]

Open hearts and an open door greeted us, and our stay was made very agreeable by social enlargement in the blending of hearts. We felt it good to be there. Our brother cheered us by reading and recounting testimonials of the blessing of God upon his efforts in sending out German tracts. And when the meeting opened and the brethren spoke one after another, my heart swelled with gratitude to God, and I praised him for the treasure he had placed in earthern vessels. It seems to have become a part of themselves, and they have but to open their mouths and their weighty judgment-truths roll out to the world. I exhorted them to keep their mouths open, and thus to let their light shine. Thus they are like men holding torches high in this last night of time. Some will see and be saved, and others will be without excuse.

Again we were cheered and helped on our way by a visit from Bro. Hook and Bro. and Sr. W. from Philadelphia, who spent a night with us. The Lord met us as we spoke one to another, and our hearts burned within us. One dear sister just ready to set out from us on a long journey, to make her home in the West, was entirely relieved of her burden and said, "Now I am ready to go. I have received what I was waiting for." Praise the Lord.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

H. MUNGER.

After staying at home most of the winter, except Sabbaths, two of which I spent at home with the church at Chicopee Falls, it seemed duty to again visit some of the old fields of labor, and see how they were getting along with the discordant elements of these times, which do affect us as a people more or less. Some are more susceptible to wrong influences than others, and some have the gift to more readily detect such wrongs than others. Such should give a word of warning or reproof in season, cost them what it may, for the benefit of the innocent part of the church.

Lowell St., Boston. Found them sustaining Second Advent meetings at a great expense, supported by a few, from a true principle of duty, instead of comfort or pleasure. This is a part of the original stock first planted in Boston. Four meetings have sprung out of this one in the vicinity, which are mostly willing to own their mother after they have set up housekeeping.

Portsmouth. One of the best churches for unity and consistent concert of action in our country. The meeting was good, and a full house of attentive listeners. The great secret of this church's prosperity is, its members act as firemen. When one sees a fire kindling, when set by an incendiary for the sake of plunder, as many are, or by accident, he throws on water, instead of crying "fire" and making an uproar, as many others have, who suffered by it. They are on the watch for such things, as all churches ought to be, to save a conflagration. Christian principle governs them, instead of fanciful or fanatical impulses or impressions. The old warriors have kept the wheel rolling on the track up to this time. Thank the Lord.

South Berwick, Me. Here is a new church, built for a people who have received the love of the truth. The building is not paid for yet, because they are poor. The seed is taking root here, and the Lord is at work in the hearts of the people; and if they get into church order, and have prudent laborers, as they have thus far, this will be a good light-house on this coast.

Great Falls. Here is a mixture; good sound minds, and a class of fanatics that for twenty years have kept the elements roiled, and caused some four or five divisions, I understand. They need gospel order. Gospel organization will generally settle fanaticism; for fanatics pretend great liberty in riding over rough-shod every law not advocated by them. There has been a good reformation here. Converts have multiplied, and a good church can be kept up if this fanatical, willful influence does not destroy it as formerly.

Dover. Here also there has been a good work from time to time, and, as at Great Falls and other places, have had the sad experience of being almost wrecked by a lack of order. There is a class in all these places that are good and intelligent, and love peace and harmony; and rather than have a fuss have done any way to keep peace; but the more prudent and wise part feel the need of some kind of order, that candid hearers and inquirers after truth may feel at home among them. We had a good time with them, a full house, and much interest to hear. I hope wisdom and order will take the reins soon, and rear a light that will shine to the end.

We as a people are in a great measure responsible for the distracting elements among us. Some have no sympathy with us, and yet find open doors with our people. This is more lenient than is necessary. I hope the time will come when the officers of each church will get posted about who is gathering and who is scattering. There never was a time when a general understanding on the leading doctrines and signs connected with the coming of the Lord soon were more needed. Some of our brethren are asking about the two-horned beast. There are several views adopted. I would recommend Bro. S. S. Brewer's tract, "The Seven Messages." It is a great work from his stand-point; and all will get posted by reading it. It is sold at the Crisis office. This, no doubt, will be the most eventful year we ever have seen; and we need men who can give light to the inquiring, and who can build us up. If all work in harmony, on the right plan, the dividing elements will have to seek other places to sow, instead of in Advent churches. The prayer of many is, Lord, send prudent men among the flocks, men who have the light.

AN AFFLICTED FAMILY.—Sr. H. H. Dickinson and family, of Hartford, Conn., are in deep affliction. On the 7th of April their lovely daughter, Emma C., wife of Frank E. Flint of New York, died at their house of varioloid, and was buried at midnight by her two brothers and two strangers, before her husband could arrive from New York. Others of the family were taken sick, and on the 19th the father, Elder H. H. Dickinson, died of internal hemorrhage, and was buried at 11 P. M. in the darkness and rain, with only seven or eight friends out of his large circle of acquaintance to shed a tear over his grave. Sister Dickinson and her youngest son are now prostrate with the disease, and only two or three kind friends dare to visit and aid them in their sorrow and affliction.

I can only ask those in whose happy homes no shade of darkness rests, to pray for this smitten household. O when will the morning come? H. L. H.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. G. Gotcholl.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Through a long, dark, and cloudy day, I believe we have arrived at a time when we may know that the coming of the Lord is very near. To all those old Second Adventists who still hold on to the blessed hope, and believe the time for the second coming of Christ is revealed in the Bible, I would write, to stir up your minds by way of remembrance. I do not expect to comfort others much who believe differently. I believe the signs the Savior specified show us when he is near, even at the doors. But the prophetic periods, when rightly understood, point right to the year. If it is not so, pray tell me of what particular use they are to us? We find periods under the old dispensation fulfilled on the self-same day; and do you not suppose God is just as minute now as he was then? I do.

I believe Father Miller was just thirty years too early. He took forty-five years for the time of the end, instead of seventy-five, and put the thirty years on to the wrong end. Time has proved it so. Now we take seventy-five years for the time of the end, commencing it just when he did; then adding the thirty years on to this end, where it evidently belongs, makes the time of the end seventy-five years. Dear brethren, this was so to be, to purify and make white, and to cause the vision to tarry; for it is yet for an appointed time; but at the end it shall speak and not lie.

I believe the time of the end is a marked, specified, definite time, and seventy-five years is the longest time the prophecy will admit of. That is the difference between the shortest and longest periods. We first strike the time of the end in Dan. 11: 40—"And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind. All historians that I have heard quoted mark these events down for 1798. Bonaparte with an army arrived in Egypt in July, 1798, and Egypt pushed at him; and it was but a push; for he could not break his ranks. From thence he proceeded to St. Jean d' Acre, the capital of the king of the north, where England, Russia and Syria attacked him from three different ways, like a whirlwind, and discomfited him. I believe Egypt is the south, and Syria the king of the north to-day, and have been ever since Alexander's kingdom was divided. From this point the prophecy goes on with the victorious king, which is the king of the north. "But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt." Ver. 43. Now who has had power over Egypt except the Sultan, and made Egypt pay tribute to him all through the time of the end? "But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him; therefore he shall go forth with great fury utterly to destroy and make away many." When the Crimean war broke out, tidings from the east (Persia) and tidings from the north (Russia) troubled him; and the news which then came from Europe said the Turks fought like demons, and killed, burned and destroyed everything up and down the river Danube. And this is the sick man who "will come to his end and none shall help him" between this and July 1873, I believe.

But when did the time of the end begin? 1798, in July. It reads—"And at the time of the end." The time of the end might have been a little previous to that, for we find the same year, the 15th of February, Berthier, the French general, dethroned the pope and carried him away into captivity. Now we run back from 1798, 1260 years, and we strike 538, when Belisarius, the general of Justinian at Constantinople, was sent to Rome with an army, and drove out the Goths, and established the pope on his throne.

Now if the theory of Bro. Miller, upon which we went out to meet the Bridegroom, is true, a day for a year, we are almost home. Two years more will test the whole theory. I have not seen a particle of evidence from Scripture or history to show that the 1335 days end in 1875. I think quite probably the 2300 days may end there, when the sanctuary will be cleansed; but the Lord must come before the sanctuary is cleansed, because it is his work to cleanse it; man cannot do it.

We have had a long, dreary time of it, but, blessed be the God of Abraham, the morning begins to dawn. It grows lighter fast. I expect to see the old "northern bear" start for the "sick man" very soon. Then a mighty cry will go forth. Who, then, will not be glad that they have held on these thirty years? Glory! Hallelujah! Events transpire quickly now. I cannot believe we have been out here all this time to be mocked and scoffed at for nought. I believe if we know anything about the time, or have known anything about it, the Lord will come in 1873. I believe the whole theory runs out there. So I bid you farewell till then. You may never hear from me again, but I hope and pray I shall meet you in the air on that blessed morning.

From Bro. A. P. Moore.

BRO. GRANT:—As some may be anxious to know our whereabouts, I would say we are located in the town of Bethany, N. Y., an entirely new field, and no Advent meetings in all this region. We hope by the blessing of God to scatter some seed that may spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God. We need the prayers of the household of faith, that God may make us a blessing to the people in this section. My health is rapidly improving, and am getting real strong, working out of doors most of the time. Would say to the Brn. in Western N. Y., that for the present I shall only be able to go to preach where I can go Saturday and back on Monday. Shall go as the Lord opens the way. Shall be at liberty to go anywhere after a short time. Pray for us. Our P. O. address is now Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. B. WADSWORTH writes from Memphis:—"I acknowledge from J. Cook, Hartford, Wis., 50 cts. Loring Morse, Acworth, N. H., $2. L. J. Havens, Plato, Ohio, $1. Julia D. Ives, Chatauqua, N. Y, $1. D. D. Reed, Santa Clara, Cal., $1. Also a box of medicine from Dr. Leslie, and school maps from Bro. Cole. Please accept my thanks for the same.

I have staid here longer than I had intended at the closing of the mission, but affairs here seemed to demand my presence. The sudden closing of the mission was such a shock to this colored Advent people, that it led them to feel that some one was in fault in the matter, and to make it worse, one or two white strangers, professing to be Adventists, came here and tried to prejudice them against those who had control of the mission. I tried to explain matters in a way that gave them satisfaction. Also, in September, my wife was taken down with bilious fever, and was quite sick for near three months, so that I could not leave her and go out with my tracts, as I should have done. Brn. and Srs., let us be of that number that shall endure to the end. The time is drawing near when working believers shall find that their labors were not in vain. Soon we shall no more feel that we are alone. Soon the scattered ones over the earth shall join the blessed company of all the believers of every name, and people, and tongue."

BRO. P. A. SMITH writes:—"The Second Advent Church here in Jacksonville has great reason to feel thankful for the prosperity that has attended their efforts in building a meeting-house for worship. We met in it for the first time April 9th, and at the prayer meeting Sunday morning before service the Lord did pour out his Spirit on all that met, not only to consecrate the house to God, but themselves as living sacrifices to the Lord. It was good to be there. We have large congregations, and conviction rests upon the people. We have a splendid house of worship for pilgrims. It is twenty-one by forty feet, rough boards, white-washed outside, and nothing is planed but the floor and seats. It was built in twenty-nine days, without much effort; and the best of it is, without running in debt. We had a blessed time yesterday at the table of the Lord. Next Sunday is my last here before I go north. One is to be baptized. A number are becoming interested, and I think if they had a good preacher here this summer, much good might be accomplished. I expect to arrive home in Rochester, N. Y., the first of May, and my address will be there at present."

BRO. F. A. BAKER writes:—"Bro. John Ridley, of Prospect Ferry, Me., was set apart to the work of the gospel ministry, by the laying on of hands, at Bangor, April 16th, 1871, by John R. Hall and F. A. Baker. I take pleasure in recommending Bro. Ridley to the confidence, fellowship, and co-operation of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, where he may be called of God to labor."

SR. M. E. OTIS writes:—"Having been suddenly called to my home in Springfield, by the death of my brother's wife, I wish to say to those interested in my labors in northern Vermont and New Hampshire, that I shall be unable to fulfill my engagements in that direction for the present. I shall confine my labors to this section for awhile. My address will be Springfield, Mass."

Her hope was in Jesus and his coming to give eternal life to his saints. Her death was peaceful, her work done. It could truly be said she was a Dorcas and a friend to the poor. PARIS, April 23. A decisive attack upon forts d'Issy and Vanvres has been postponed.

An army corps is forming under the command of General Douai.

The night attack made by the Communists upon the barricades on the quay of Asnieres, was repulsed with great slaughter.

It is reported that the Versaillists are in possession of Charenton and Nogent, and it is expected they will be in St. Denis to-morrow.

The Versaillists are erecting immense works at Chatillon.

Nearly eight hundred people are out of work in Paris through the suppression of newspapers.

VERSAILLES, April 24. The expected general attack upon Paris has not yet commenced. Valerien continues to cannonade Neuilly, Clichy and Porte Maillot. The firing is slow and deliberate and some shells fall within the ramparts of Paris. The army of the Assembly is being continually reinforced. Many new troops arrived yesterday and to-day and were at once forwarded to the front.

The Prussians have not evacuated Fort Charenton.

It is reported that in consequence of difficulties between the Prussians and Communists, the former, who still hold St. Denis, yesterday stopped at that point all supplies for Paris from the North.

NAPOLEON'S PROTEST.—The following is the text of this paper:—

SIR—At the moment when every Frenchman, profoundly afflicted by the conditions of peace, was thinking only of the sufferings of the country, the National Assembly has pronounced the deposition of my dynasty, and affirmed that I alone was responsible for the public calamities.

I protest against this unjust and illegal declaration.

It is unjust, because when the war was declared, national feeling, roused beyond measure by causes independent of my will, had produced a general and irresistible excitement: illegal, for the Assembly appointed solely for the purpose of making peace has exceeded its powers in settling questions beyond its competency, and even if it were a Constituent Assembly, it would be without power to substitute its own will for that of the nation. The example of the past is there to prove this. The hostility of the Constituent Assembly in 1848 fell to the ground before the election of the 10th of December; and in 1841 the people by more than seven millions of suffrages supported me against the Legislative Assembly.

Political passion cannot prevail against right, and French public right, for the foundation of every legitimate government is the Plebiscitum. Without that there is only usurpation on the one side, oppression on the other. I am, therefore, ready to bow to the free expression of the national will, but to it alone.

Amid mournful events which impose abnegation and disinterestedness upon all, I should have wished to maintain silence; but the declaration of the Assembly compels me to protest in the name of outraged truth, and the disregarded rights of the nation. I am, etc., NAPOLEON.

Wilhelmshohe, March 6th, 1871.

DOMESTIC.

THE LAST EXCOMMUNICATION.—The thunders of the Vatican are not yet silent. Although the Pope complains that he is a prisoner and that his Ecumenical Council was compelled through fear to disperse before their business was finished, still his determination to rule his spiritual subjects throughout the world is as fixed and resolute as ever. The last victim of his wrath is Dr. Dollinger, the famous German theologian and historian of the church. He is now in the seventy-third year of his age, and must be near the close of a life remarkable for prolonged energy, thorough scholarship and the most sincere and fervent piety. His only fault appears to be that he cannot accept the new dogma of papal infallibility. . . .

Dr. Dollinger met the demand as Martin Luther did a similar requirement—with an explicit, firm denial, at the same time giving his reasons for the faith that was in him. At the close of his declaration he says: "As a christian, as a theologian, as a historian, as a citizen, I cannot accept this doctrine." As one of the best living authorities in church history, Dr. Dollinger is able to make a particularly conclusive exposition of the groundlessness of the dogma from that point of view. His objection as a citizen, however, will be regarded as most significant, since he looks upon the dogma as a claim to subject all States and governments to the Papal power, to result in the repression of men's intellectual activity and the general establishment of a temporal as well as spiritual terrorism. He intimates that the whole scheme is a Jesuit conspiracy, and is full of danger to the real interests of the Church. It was supposed that the case thus put in issue would first come before the Council of German Bishops, on a request to the King of Bavaria to remove Dr. Dollinger from his chair in the University. But it seems that the prominence of the dissenter, as in the case of Father Hyacinthe, drew down upon him the attention of the Pope himself, who, to settle the matter, has issued a decree of excommunication. It remains to be seen what is settled, or whether more is not unsettled, by this action of the Pope, who may yet find out that he is not living in the middle or dark ages.—Boston Journal.

BRO. GRANT:—The following I clipped from the Rutland Herald. It may give some light to the readers of the Crisis in regard to the different political parties in France. Will you insert it? Yours, etc., A. W. SIBLEY.

"La Commune de Paris."

BY REV. N. CYR.

I find that few of the readers of the Herald understand these words, and therefore I take my pen to show what they represent.

The term "Commune" was first applied to a revolutionary committee, which grew out of the insurrection of July 14th, 1789, and which superseded the City Council of Paris. The Commune was first presided over by Mayor Pethion, and held its meetings at the Hotel de Ville (City Hall.) It was, however, regularly constituted only on the 21st of May, 1791. At that time it was divided into forty-eight sections; it appointed a Mayor and sixteen administrators, established a municipal council of thirty-two members, and a general council of ninety-six "notables," presided over by one attorney of the Commune and two substitutes.

For a long time, managed by the most fiery demagogues, among whom Robespierre stands prominent, it waged war with the Convention (a legislative assembly that governed France from 1792 to 1795.) The Commune found the Convention too moderate, armed against it the people of the suburbs, and maintained constant insurrection. The death of Robespierre in 1794, caused the fall of the Commune, after which Paris was divided into twelve distinct municipalities to prevent the concentration of such a formidable power, and these municipalities have been increased to twenty with the enlargement of Paris, and are known under the name of arrondissements.

The insurgents in Paris now are trying to revive that form of government, and although they may not be as bad as their predecessors, are not likely to establish anything permanent.

The misfortune of France is to be divided into five political parties, neither of which has the majority. Under such circumstances the Republicans of all shades should unite, as will all friends of constitutional government, and then they could secure order and liberty under a Republic or a limited monarch. But the "Reds" are the "irreconcilables," and they must rule or die; they are more likely to have the latter lot.

I may remark that it is to the fact that France has these five parties, much more than to the character of the people, that are to be attributed the unhappy revolutions through which that country has passed, and now the moderate Republicans will have to unite with the Orleanists in order to restore order and found a strong government. They may use the Count of Paris as a scarecrow, (that is about the only thing that kings are good for,) and under him restore order. Otherwise the old legitimists will be likely to win the day, and call the Count of Chambord, the monarch by divine right; under whom poor France would be deprived of many of her human rights. As for Napoleon he has "neither part nor lot in this matter" now.

In Brief.

—— The famous and venerable Dr. John Joseph Ignatius Dollinger, recently excommunicated by the Pope on account of the liberality of his views, is said to be the most influential theologians in Bavaria, and one of the most eminent scholars of the Church.——Mazzini says that the despotism of Louis Napoleon extinguished all the fire of the Marseillaise, and when the French people were permitted to sing it, at the breaking out of the war, the great invocation of freedom was only empty words, to which the soul of the nation would not and could not respond. He pronounces Napoleon the Nero of France, the tyrant destroyer of his country, the monster of an unbridled egotism. ——The French Empire was conquered by Prussia in a campaign lasting one hundred and eighty days. In that time the German armies participated in 156 conflicts and 17 decisive battles; they captured 26 fortresses, 6700 cannon or mitrailleuse, 120 eagles or stands of colors and made prisoners 11, 650 officers and 356,000 men.——The Grand Duke Alexis, the third son of the Czar of Russia, will sail from Cronstadt for New York in the middle of May in the Imperial yacht, escorted by several Russian naval vessels. The State Department, in conjunction with the Russian Legation, are making arrangements for his reception early in June.

N. McCullock, No. 4 Frank Street, Rochester, on Monday, May 1st, 1871. It is hoped that the friends in different parts of the State will feel interested in this matter, and any letters with pertinent suggestions or words of encouragement, may be addressed to N. McCullock as above.
For the Committee, J. H. WHITMORE.

Notice.

As many of the readers of the Crisis are anxious to know what disposition has been made of George Thomson, alias George Bigelow, alias George Sweet, etc., etc., I would say for their benefit that he was tried before our police court for obtaining money of me under false pretences, and convicted and sentenced to the House of Correction for three months. I am in the receipt of many letters from brethren in different places who have been swindled by the same man, all telling a similar story. I would say for their benefit that they can have this "pious fraud" arrested again as soon as he serves out his term in jail. God's cause ought not to suffer reproach by allowing such unprincipled vagabonds to go at liberty.
Springfield, Mass. THOMAS R. WEAVER.

Conference.

The Conference for Southern Indiana will commence at Jeffersonville, Wednesday, May 24th, 1871. FIELD, Pastor of the Church at Jeffersonville.

Study it carefully,
Think of it prayerfully,
Deep in thy heart let its pure precepts dwell.
Slight not its history,
Ponder its mystery,
None can e'er prize it too fondly or well.
Accept the glad tidings,
The warnings and chidings,
Found in this volume of heavenly lore;
With faith that's unfailing,
And love all prevailing,
Trust in its promises of life evermore.
With fervent devotion,
And thankful emotion,
Hear the blest welcome, respond to its call;
Life's purest oblation,
The heart's adoration,
Give to the Savior who died for us all.
May this message of love,
From the Tribune above,
To all nations and kindreds be given,
Till the ransomed shall raise
Joyous anthems of praise—
Hallelujah! on earth and in heaven.

LETTER FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

To the Crisis:—A few evenings since I attended a lecture delivered at Platt's Hall by the renowned orator, Rev. Mr. Punshon, of London, Eng. The subject was "Daniel; a Model for Young Men." The treatment was "popular"; always entertaining; often amusing; occasionally edifying. This makes the third lecture I have heard on precisely this topic within the past ten years. One of these discourses was by Rev. Dr. Scott, who has recently taken the forlorn-hope captaincy for "eternal misery" in this city. But in no one of these lectures did I hear a word, no, not so much as a syllable, of "Daniel the prophet." Of course, as a prophet he could not be in any strict sense a "model for young men"; yet it is something of a mystery how the "prophet" is so completely ignored by these popular lecturers, when the courage and consequence of the man are connected so directly and intimately with his services as a foreteller. And here we are, living on the margin of Daniel's chart, with the highest eloquence exhausted on the general character of the man, sedulously separated from the interpretations of the inspired revelator. O, as a grand conclusion to all these eloquent outbursts in eulogy of the worldly shrewdness and prayerful faithfulness, how fit would be a reference to his prophecies of their near completion in history. It even seems strange that the orators are not urged by the opportunity for sublime and thrilling peroration to overcome all Orthodox scruples and speak as did the churchmen of old—of the new heavens and the new earth.

To-morrow evening, and the evening following, Elder Grant will preach in this city—closing his mission on Monday. He announced his arrangements for last meetings and for departure, at Minna St. church last evening. During the prayer-meeting that followed the sermon, several persons spoke sorrowfully yet in no mawkish manner of the separation that was about to take place. And fervent prayers were offered for the success of the Elder, as God's minister, in the fields in which he may hereafter labor. Many can say, many do say, "Praise God that he put it into the heart of his servant to come to San Francisco."

And now I am admonished that it is time for me to quit the business of Crisis correspondent. I volunteered the service for the season, in hope of doing a little good by the work—telling you what I thought it was fit and proper your readers should learn of the California Mission, though the information could not be expected from the self-denying Elder. As they say in the prefaces of all good orthodox novels, etc., which it has been both my pleasure and misfortune, in earlier (and, I trust, weaker) years, to read: "If I have cheered one lonely heart [you know the rest], I am more than repaid for my toil!" And so with this epistle—and before I finish it—I will bid you an official Farewell. There are many men and women in the Minna St. Ch. congregation, who have listened throughout to the Elder's preaching in this city, who have become sound in the faith and zealous of good works, who can and undoubtedly will henceforth keep you regularly and well posted as to the progress of affairs concerning which you desire constant tidings.

I have two or three things to notice: A paragraph in the Second Advent Times, of recent date, contains an intimation to the effect that I urged the introduction of Advent publications upon the counters of "leading booksellers," as if that introduction could be easily and universally procured. I do not think I am so foolish or inexperienced as the paragraph—which I have no doubt was kindly written—would indicate. I have spoken of what ought to be. In some places impracticable, perhaps impossible; but in most places the introduction can be had by a little legitimate management. It is not always best to talk about how some righteous things can be done, as well as others. I know of a city on this coast where I brought Hastings' bound works upon the shelves of "leading booksellers," by persistently calling for them and inducing others to ask—with honest purpose of patronage—for the same works. I do not recommend the management, lest I offend some; though I declare that it was legitimate. The booksellers referred to afterwards told me that "those Hastings books" I (with others) induced them to procure "sold like hot cakes." The truth is, most of our American booksellers will put any decent book on their counters which they can sell at a handsome profit, or in considerable numbers. And Canadian booksellers are not samples for our folks who are in that line of business.

Another thing: The minister who proclaims himself pastor of the Evangelical Advent church of Boston, and has sent a communication to the daily papers of this city advertising the Advent Herald, and virtually denouncing Elder Grant as an advocate of "polluted Adventism"—I think "polluted" is the word—has not injured the good work of the season in San Francisco. It would be affectation on the part of the most obtuse person who has a knowledge of the facts in the premises to indulge in guessing at the object and the motive of the "Evangelical" brother. The devil in some remarkable ways has manifested an intense hatred towards the California Second Advent Mission of 1871. He has set many good people at work trying to dig under it a little. Martin Luther said that the devil always found some good man to do his meanest work. To evince proper charity in a complimentary comparison, let us pray that there be not many Erasmuses in the Second Advent Brotherhood!

Since writing the above (10 P. M.) I have attended another of these choice Minna St. church meetings. A full house. The Elder preached upon the explained "mystery" of the "kingdom." The sermon brought out strong testimonies at the close of the preaching service; almost all the young and old christians who spoke announcing their great satisfaction in obtaining and appreciating the truth concerning the kingdom, the destruction of the wicked, etc. Toward the end of the prayer-meeting a lady—she intimated that she was one of the Rev. Dr. Scudder's church members—rose and declared that she had received great benefit from the Elder's ministrations in this city, though she had not changed her belief as to the alleged immortality of the soul. She still believed that man was by his present nature endowed with eternal life. This was all well enough and would not require notice. But the lady went on to say that it did not make any difference what a person believed about "these doctrinal points," so long as they had faith in the "main doctrine" of the cleansing power of the blood of Christ. In all gentlemanly courtesy and Christian tenderness I would combat—not our friend's retained doctrinal belief in the immortality of the soul, but—her volunteered advice to indifference. Without reference to the topics, she is certainly wrong and very far out of the way. Let us see. It is not enough, perhaps, to bring the subject fully forward in such a connection.

In a former letter I ventured some observations on the equal obligation to believe and to do right. Somewhat in a supplementary manner I may speak now. "It makes no difference what you believe about these doctrinal points." Orthodox clergymen will say this, when they get cornered in an argument, and members of their flock will repeat their evading words. It makes all the difference imaginable: what you believe, in every important doctrinal particular. This statement is within bounds. For we cannot imagine to the compass of the infinite in realities or in contrasts. Truth is infinitely superior to error. With respect to any matter, he who has the truth is at an infinite advantage over the neighbor who adheres to the error. The matter may be comparatively unessential or insignificant, but with respect to it, whatever it may be, the power and the enjoyment of the truth holder is in precedence over the advocate of falsehood to an infinite degree—to an extent which the imagination cannot measure. The simplicity and the inexorable character of this demonstration cannot be challenged. As to different matters the benefits of truth will appear in different ways—more or less practical, more or less obvious at the outset. But the rule is plain. Then the truth is of infinite consequence.

Illustrations crowd upon me. Select some. The more truth a person has, the more real land a man has to walk upon. Some will be saved on a little island in a great dead sea of theological error. Some clergymen limit all religious exercise to a narrow parade-ground—court martial every church member who goes outside. The "whole counsel of God" makes a continent of truth.

Truth is mental and spiritual nourishment. How our teachers have insulted our understandings (if we did but know) by saying "it makes no difference what you believe"! As proper food for the physical man, so is aliment for the mind. Don't you recollect your school-day experience? Or have you never tasted "learning" truth—worldly learning—and found how good it was. First you learned the rudiments, the elementary branches, almost mechanically. But drudgery came with a more complete consciousness—with approaching puberty. There was a sense of weariness. One day you mastered a sum, or construed a sentence, and apprehended a victory in the acquisition of a truth—truth in mathematics or the relation of words. It was a truth according to the system. Don't you remember the glow of satisfaction, the inexpressible sense of fulness and gladness? Study from that hour lost more and more of its aspect of toil. The brain began to digest. It had taken on an appetite. It began to grow. It was fed from that time on, in a genuine way. This is not fanciful, I contend.

I want to bring out another corner. Say that the first realization of truth in study is in so simple a matter as the multiplication table. One poor boy has got a book from which the cover has been torn. His arithmetic was given to him in charity, after it had done service for others. The rich man's son has an elegantly bound arithmetic. Both in same class. Poor boy says ten times 11 are 110. Rich man's son says the product is 144. And his morocco-covered book reads so. It is a typographical error in the book. But it requires some time and labor to convince the boy of the error. Nicely-bound clergymen declare that ten times 11 are 144; while the despised preacher says the result is 110. The comparison is absurd enough to make a parallel. Now, it may not be very essential that this or that one should know that ten times 11 does make 110. But when A says to B, "I will sell you ten tons of hay at $11, which will make $144," it is important that B detect the untruth in the computation, if he buys.

But it goes beyond "importance." It may be essential. If man or woman see a truth of Scripture, confess in the heart that such or such is the truth, then open avowal and advocacy are all essential. Paul would have been a castaway if he had shunned one single point in the "counsel of God" revealed to him for publication. One little sin unrepented of breaks up the christian's peace; one lie stuck to by a really truth-convinced child of God—convinced with respect to that doctrinal truth—will work death.

It was most cheering to hear the many declarations of joy in the literal-kingdom truth. And I thought of a prominent scene in my life when the lady spoke—interrupting as she did the sweet, clear train of Gospel testimonies. I came around Cape Horn before the mast. Several days we beat outside the heads of this harbor. Clouds hid the shore. We could see the "loom" of the land for three days, but the mists made us uncertain of our exact place on the ocean—our exact place. We knew we were close by the harbor. One December evening, just after six o'clock, the mists rose, and the fires of the Farallo island lighthouse burst upon our enraptured vision. Sailors, six months out, hurrahed when they saw those flashing lamps. And here came the pilot boat alongside. Soon the pilot was on board (I never saw so good-looking a man); and before morning we dropped anchor off the Presidio in San Francisco Bay. We went in by the lights on the island, the pilot congratulating us on the clear evening. Suppose Pilot Scudder, when he came on board our clipper, had told our captain to send those shouting, "crazy" sailors below, and had got down on his knees and prayed, "O Lord, send us some more of that good old fog," etc.

The parting between the Crisis readers and myself, as a correspondent, is but as the "good bye" of acquaintances of a day. But to you, my dear, dear Elder, how can I say "Farewell"? Is it not lawful and fit—at least, is it not permissible—that I should utter adieu in this public manner? Though we have not literally walked together during many years prior to your coming to California, and though our communications have not been very frequent during some of the years of absence, I feel that you have always been a very true, a very precious, a very near friend to me. (Do you remember our first meeting in the Green mountains of New England?) I have enjoyed your companionship here more than I can say. I am sorry I have not been able to contribute more to your comfort while you have been among us. I have admired your workmanship here, in teaching and in daily example; for you have wrought effectually in instruction, in admonition, and in holy living. Let who will utter harsh or sneering words against you, even though you are assaulted in the house of those who claim to be your friends, it matters not to me—it cannot change my respect, confidence, and esteem. I recognize the instrumentality through which God has spoken most impressively and lovingly to me. In all human probability we shall not meet again in this "vale of tears." 'Tis a sad thought! I could wish to see your face and hear your voice often during this pilgrimage. But pray that we may meet again in the New Jerusalem. I think it is the more glorious privilege of those who have the sound faith concerning personal identity of men here and hereafter, to cultivate perfect earthly friendships; rightly instructed, we are reasonably and joyfully hoping.

Dearest friend and brother—Farewell.

Conf. and Tent Meeting Committee: L. Boutell, J. Couch, Samuel Ayres. Protracted Meeting Committee: Geo. A. Streeter, H. Munger, T. M. Preble, H. Davis, Dr. A. M. Higgins. Accepted, and all duly elected as above, without dissent.

Ministerial Committee reported by Bro. Goodrich, as follows: No names have been refused, or members rejected. Owing to the Chairman's calling no meeting, no certificates have been distributed. After some discussion, report was accepted. Quar. Conf. Committee was reported by the Chair. Two quarterly sessions have been held during the year. Accepted. Tent Meeting Committee reported by L. Boutell. First went to Millville, then to South Providence, R. I. Many became interested. Meeting continued twenty-two days. As a result, there is regular preaching in Providence every Sabbath. Next went to Needham, Mass., and from thence to Shrewsbury. Accepted.

Treasurer's report was read as follows, and accepted:—

C. Goodrich, in account with Mass. A. C. Conference. For cash received....$193.16.
For cash paid per order of President....$127.08.
Cash on hand....$66.08.
C. Goodrich, Treasurer.

The report of Protracted Meeting Committee was accepted, also report of Business Committee. Voted, that ministers resume reporting their labors. L. Boutell: Time mostly taken up during summer months with tent meetings. Have never seen people so ready to listen as now. Have recently been in Vermont. Labors very successful. J. Couch: Have not scattered my labors as much as common. Evidence was never so clear as now that the judgment is impending; during the last year truth has been revealed as never before. The church, the Advent church, is too much asleep. Have no "definite time," but believe firmly in the signs which show our Lord's coming "nigh, even at the door." J. S. White: Good interest in Plymouth. In Mattapoisett, a place of worship has been fitted up, and the brethren wish to secure the labors of some efficient man.

Voted, that Worcester delegates be appointed as committee to arrange for the preaching during the session.—Voted, that we adjourn to close of afternoon service.

Met according to adjournment. Vice President in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Munger. Voted to suspend further hearing of reports from preachers till other business was transacted. Bro. Leverton presented the following resolution:

Whereas the predicted jealousies of the last days are now threatening the dissolution of all human society, and whereas the union and harmony of all our churches is being endangered by the same, manifested in contention and strife, resulting in factious parties, who in many cases wickedly increase the difficulties by establishing opposition meetings; Therefore, resolved, that this conference disapprove of the establishment of such meetings upon such principles; and resolved, that we will not countenance them by our influence or ministrations, until proper efforts shall shall have been made to investigate and settle such differences by a mutual council, or a council appointed by this conference for such a purpose; and Resolved, that we will not violate these principles by preaching at any such meeting established upon such principles, in any other State.

After some discussion, it was voted to adjourn till nine o'clock tomorrow.

Friday, nine o'clock A. M. Meeting opened by prayer. Voted, that the resolution under discussion be laid on the table, and that we hear further reports of preachers. Bro. Munger reported instances of divisions and strife, the result of headstrong persons being determined to have their way at all hazards. Urged the necessity of forming societies for protection.

J. W. Brittain gave a very interesting and touching report of his labors in Virginia during the past winter. He felt duty calling him South, and he obeyed, being accompanied by his wife. Spoke to a considerable length concerning the destitution, a destitution which can never be realized by hearing reports merely. While South, had very feeble health. Had no doctor but Christ. While there in weakness, a stranger in a strange land, felt the blessedness of the sentiment contained in that sweet hymn,

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

During Bro. B's remarks, the listeners were much affected, being almost entirely moved to tears.

Voted, that Sr. L. M. Stoddard become a member of this conference. Voted, that we take up the resolution. Bro. Couch says he endorses the resolution. Factious parties shall not have my influence. Bro. Munger says God designs union, else he would have kept men apart. Endorses the resolution. Further remarks were made in favor of it by Brn. Kingsbury, Higgins, and Boutell after which it was passed unanimously. Voted, that we adjourn till one o'clock P. M.

Meeting opened at one o'clock. President in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Davis. Voted, that certificates of membership, signed by the President and Secretary, be given to members in good standing. Bro. Boutell offers the following resolution:—

Whereas certain ones are preaching among us who bring in discord and division, who belong to none of our Advent conferences, and are not recognized by our Advent churches, therefore Resolved, that this conference recommends to the different churches to employ such to hold meetings among them who co-operate, and are in harmony and ready to comply with the usages of the Second Advent Christian Association.

After remarks from Brn. Goodrich, Munger, Kingsbury, and Higgins, favoring its passage, it was adopted.

Bro. Leverton presents the following:—Whereas through the labors of God's faithful servants, many Advent Christian churches and societies have been formed throughout the State, and whereas such churches and societies need the labors of faithful men, therefore Resolved, that this conference recommend the Advent Christian churches of Massachusetts to obtain, as far as possible, the services of faithful men of God, who shall take the pastoral charge of them, and watchcare over their interests.

Bro. Boutell says he thinks our churches are suffering from this want. Is heartily in favor of it. Brn. A. M. Higgins and Geo. A. Streeter favor it, also Brn. Giddings and Goodrich. Adopted. Bro. Boutell offers the following:—

Resolved, that we improve every new opening, where the gospel of the kingdom can be preached, as far as possible, by holding tent and protracted meetings. Adopted.

Resolved, that at close of afternoon services we proceed to raise funds for this purpose, by contribution and subscription. Adopted.

Voted, that the thanks of conference be given to church of Worcester for their kindness, etc., in opening their doors to us. Voted, that minutes of conference be published in "World's Crisis." Voted, that we adjourn to meet in Salem, in June.

Letters were read by Bro. Streeter from Enoch Morrill, Ephraim Brown, and E. McCulloch.

The social meetings were characterized by a feeling of devotion and earnestness refreshing to behold, and we feel assured that their influence will long be felt, not only in Worcester, but wheresoever the churches may be that were there represented. The preaching was all excellent, and calculated to excite investigation, and also tended to confirm the pilgrims in their long cherished hopes.

C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

Bro. Hezekiah Davis, of Webster, was set apart for the work of the ministry by laying on of hands, by Brn. Couch, Boutell and Pratt, on Friday evening. C. E. B.

CHURCH DIVISIONS.
The Cure.

A. A. Phelps.

1. Allow yourself to be duly impressed with the magnitude of the evil under consideration. Unless the foregoing pictures have been overdrawn, the calamity of church divisions is very great. The spirit of strife, like a festering sore, is ever breaking out with sickening stench and ruinous results. It is well to look the fearful facts fully in the face. The disease must be recognized before the remedy will be sought. When the evils of division rise up before us in all their startling proportions and desolating horrors, we shall be ready to act with something like commendable zeal to inaugurate a better state of things. When we have become thoroughly sick of living on discord and distraction, we shall be the more willing to change our diet.

2. See what stress the Bible lays upon Christian unity. "This is my commandment," said Jesus, "that ye love one another, as I have loved you." John 15: 12. If this blessed "commandment" should be strictly observed, the hearts of all real Christians would be so closely united that bitter contentions would be quite out of the question. Love is the controlling element of Christianity. It melts, assimilates, and unifies human hearts. What can be sweeter, stronger, or more important than this heaven-born element? In full view of its excellency, Peter exhorts the brethren thus—"Love one another with a pure heart fervently. 1 Pet. 1: 22. Mere courtesy will not suffice. Cold etiquette cannot bear the heavy strain that must be put upon it in such a world as this. Love alone can bear earth's burdens with a smile. There are times when it requires love intensified to carry us through. Hearts that are but feebly joined will part asunder in the trying hour. We must have a welding heat. We must love "fervently."

Paul evidently took the same view of the matter, and hence exhorted the brethren to "be of the same mind one toward another." Rom. 12: 16. This then, was the apostolic doctrine? We find that as a result of the Spirit's baptism, "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." Acts 4: 32. Tribulation drove the early disciples to God for extra installments of grace; and the extra anointing of the Holy Spirit produced a closer union of hearts. If this blessed result could only be secured by the storms of persecution, we might almost covet the return of fagots and flames! A frowning world and a united church would be a far better showing than a flattering world and a divided church.

Deprecating the divisions which were creeping into a certain church, Paul breaks out in this earnest exhortation: "I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1 Cor. 1: 10. Well knowing the weakness of human nature, and the tendency to distraction that everywhere existed, the same apostle tenderly entreated the church at Ephesus to "walk with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. 4: 2, 3. These appeals show the importance of putting forth special efforts to maintain Christian harmony. With all the differences of education, opinion and temperament, there is great need of "forbearing one another in love." There would be no necessity of "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit," if our own volition had nothing to do in securing it. Christian unity is a grand result that depends upon the joint agency of God and man.

It would be difficult to produce anything more touching or appropriate than the following: "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies; fulfill ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vain-glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." Phil. 2: 1-3. Here is the pulse of a loving heart and the stroke of a master hand. The passage is a rare combination of sweetness and sublimity—of pathos and power! No explanation is needed to bring out the intended sense. The spirit of Christian unity breathes in every line. Nor is there any contradictory sentiment in the word of God. The passages we have quoted are but specimens of the Bible teaching on this subject. Let us cherish the spirit of these glowing appeals, and henceforth labor to be "of one accord, of one mind."

ALL PRAYER.

L. A. Wheeler.

"Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints."—Eph. 6: 18.

Prayer is usually either public, private, or family. Each has or should have its proper place and object. To misplace either might result in more evil than good. Many things that take place in the family circle require secret prayer. No ear but that of the Omnipotent should hear it, not even the family concerned; for all have faults; all have more or less infirmities to contend with; and each may be trying to do the best he or she can, yet their judgment and temperament may differ. Much that is unpleasant must be borne by each, and each needs divine help, not only to assist the judgment, but to control the temperament; and to carry the matter before the Lord in public would be uncalled for and improper; or, in the family, would cause trials altogether unnecessary.

Just so in regard to brothers and sisters in the Lord. Should a difference between them arise, and should the offended party in the presence of the offender spread out the trial before the Lord, asking for grace to enable them to bear all he should permit to come upon them, it would probably make the difference wider, although the petition might be a good one in its proper place. Therefore we need the Spirit to help our infirmities, to give discernment, that we may know how to pray as we ought, with all prayer.

PHILIP.

"Ma, where's my sled?"

"Little Tom Waters borrowed it this afternoon to draw his sister over to Mr. Brown's."

"Where are my nine-pins? They are not in the closet."

"Bessie has company in the parlor and I gave her permission to play with them."

"Well, where are my skates? I suppose somebody wanted them, too, and I'm to be cheated out of all my play," said Philip in a very ill-natured tone.

"Your father took them to the shop this morning to have them mended for your Saturday holiday," replied his mother, taking out the ginger-snaps she had just made from the large pan, and disregarding her son's petulance. But Phil's temper was roused and even his father's thoughtfulness failed to mollify him.

"I don't care. I wish people would leave my things alone," exclaimed the cross boy.

"Philip!" said his mother reproachfully.

"Well, I do. What's the use of having things if one can't get the good of them?"

Mrs. Ames had observed for some time Philip's growing selfishness, and the unreasonableness which always goes hand in hand with it had pained her frequently of late. She had hoped it was only the consequence of too great indulgence during his sickness, two months before, and a fault which she could easily check, but her efforts thus far had been unavailing. She paused a moment after he had spoken, and glanced at his handsome face, at that instant seeming positively ugly by reason of the sulkiness which overspread it. Then she said cheerily: "Well my son, there is no reason why you should not have your own things all to yourself if you so choose. Of course if you are to have the entire enjoyment, you will also take the entire care of them."

"I guess I'd be glad enough to," answered Philip, a little surprised by his mother's matter-of-fact way of taking his remarks.

"Then I will resign all care of your property for the future, or at least as long as you wish," said Mrs. Ames, in quite a business-like tone, and going to the parlor she substituted a book of engravings for the nine-pins, and brought the box to Philip. Presently Tom Waters also brought the sled, expressing his gratitude for the favor in a very earnest manner.

Philip was quite elated by his new authority, and played nine-pins on the sitting-room carpet for at least ten minutes. Then he saw Dick Jones on the street and ran out to speak to him, and coasted until tea-time. He came in tired and hungry to find his nine-pins scattered from one end of the room to the other, as he had left them.

"Pick 'em up, Bess, won't you? I'm hungry as a bear."

"Bessie wanted to," remarked Mrs. Ames, "but I told her they were yours, and you preferred to take care of them."

Phil made no answer, but crept under the table and chairs to gather them up, while the family sat down to tea.

"I broke my sled, father," said Philip after blunting the edge of his hunger with a delicious biscuit, "and left it at the shop for you to bring home with my skates."

His father looked up with an expression of great surprise, and answered:

"That's very awkward for you, Phil. Your skates are here and are not mended. I brought them home for you to attend to yourself. However, you can have your sled mended all the same, I suppose."

"But the money," faltered Phil, a horrible suspicion creeping over him. "How shall I pay for it?"

"That's your lookout, of course. The sled is yours, you know," responded Mr. Ames with the utmost coolness.

Poor Phil! A choking sensation began to seriously interfere with the progress of that second biscuit; but he had saved a few shillings for missionary money, and the thought of this as furnishing a way out of his dilemma restored his wonted serenity. As for the skates, they must remain unmended.

That night, when Philip was undressing, he did what boys are wont to do, wrenched one or two buttons from his clothes, and calling down to his mother, carelessly informed her of the fact, and threw his suit down the stairs for her to mend. The door opened immediately, and her pleasant voice called up to him:

"Here, Philip, I have put thread and needles and buttons on the stairs. They are your clothes, you know, and I am not to mend them, of course."

Phil pretended not to hear. But Mrs. Ames waited, and finally asked:

"Do you hear, Philip?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the poor boy, repressing a great sob. The door closed, and Philip, feeling as solitary and deserted as if he were a hundred miles away from the dear home, dropped his head between his hands and cried bitterly. After awhile he crept softly down stairs, and bringing up his new and unwelcome possessions began his task. It is needless to tell how many times the needles broke and the thread knotted before the work was ended, and how sore his fingers were with useless stabs, and how the buttons burst off the next morning because he had sewed them on with single thread, and how he pinned his clothes and was pricked by the pins cruelly all the next day.

He could not skate that Saturday on account of his broken skates, and when he went for his sled, he discovered that he had not enough money to pay for it, and when he entered his room at night, it was in the same disorder in which he had left it in the morning. Philip was completely humbled by his miserable day, and by the prospect of always wearing clothes which were pinned together, and of sleeping, night after night, in a tumbled bed. Worse than all he had seemed the whole day to be an outcast from that helpful, unselfish household.

His mother had also endured the punishment as long as she was able to bear it, and with an aching heart went softly up to her son's room. As she opened the door, she saw Phil with his head on the table sobbing like a homesick boy. In a moment her faithful arms were about him.

"Is my darling tired of his selfishness?" she asked.

"Give—'em—all—away—and—take me—back," sobbed Philip.

"Do you see that we need others to make us comfortable and happy, and that we ought to give as well as take?"

"Oh! yes—I—do," answered Phil with great energy.

Then his mother smoothed the tumbled bed and made the disordered room tidy and beautiful, as mothers know so well how to do, and Phil's lesson was never forgotten.—Christian Union.

A THREE-YEAR-OLD'S SERMON.

We know a little fellow, not far from five years old, whose father is a clergyman, and the child sometimes amuses himself by playing "church." One Sunday he got his little chair, and table and books, and commenced his service, content to have only partial attention of the other children who were in the room. After singing a hymn, he began his sermon, his words apparently being suggested in part by the pictures in his book, and by what he saw about him in the room.

"You must be good. You mussn't be naughty or wicked. You must go to heaven. You mussn't be afraid in the dark. You mussn't cry. You mussn't kill any udder man. You must be a good boy. You mussn't do anything to any boy when he does something bad to you. You must come right away from him. You must just kiss him, and not look at him any more. You mussn't go by any naughty boy. You mussn't whip any horse what isn't running away. You must be kind to horses. You must do what your mudder tells you. You mussn't steal raisins. Supposing you are a baby, you mussn't cry. You must laugh. You mussn't hit anybody. If you are a boy, you must be elegant. You mussn't steal flowers in any udder body's garden. Supposing you know a lady—Miss Lizzie—you mussn't take any of her flowers without asking. Babies must never cry. Men must never be drunken; and boys must never be wicked; and dogs must never bite a man; and a fish must—don't kick—a fish don't walk—what does it do?"

And here a little break occurred in the discourse, in reflecting upon the duties of a fish; so we will end our notes, believing that the little sermon contains more good lessons than many which are listened to every Sunday.—Christian at Work.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

On Dissipation.—There are three kinds of dissipation in the world—white, red, and black dissipation. White dissipation is the waste of nerve and excessive use of the brain: there are pious dissipation, scholarly dissipation, business dissipation, the dissipation of the men who, with salutary shudders, "thank God that they are not as other men are." Red dissipation is the dissipation of the increase of blood by luxurious food, or the waste of blood by all those passions and indulgences which come of luxurious living. Black dissipation is that of the grosser indulgences which criminal men seek. The first-named is increasing rapidly, and taking the place of lower grades. The peculiar folly of our age is the waste of nerve force. In all directions we see the sign of brain dissipation. The diseases of virtuous men are no longer what they used to be—blood diseases. Paralysis is beating up in every community and finding recruits. Good men are living too fast. Each man is swept on against his will into the tumult of life. The great army of insomnists is increasing, and such men have a call to lunacy.—Henry Ward Beecher.

☞ A bad taste in the mouth may be caused by decayed teeth. To cure it, remove them. Or it may arise from a disordered stomach or torpid bowels. In this case, particular attention must be given to the diet. It should be light—farinaceous chiefly—well masticated, eaten slowly, and never washed down by drinking during the process. If constipation is present, much may be done to remove it by eating unbolted wheat flour, stewed apples, or any sub-acid fruit. Acids, as a general rule, afford relief by thinning the bile, which is nature's physic. If these do not relieve with proper exercise, call for some good physician.

☞ Wash and be clean, that you may not need perfumery to counteract the odor arising from a want of cleanliness. But, while perfumery is suspicious, a want of cleanliness with no perfumery is an unpardonable incivility.

GIFTS.

Not as the world gives, God to us doth give;
No doubtful good, with half reluctant hand,
That chides the taking; but an amplitude
Of blessing vast beyond the reach of thought,
Rich beyond count, and constant as the heavens,
With all their solemn march of suns and stars,
Whose motions know no pause nor weariness.
Chiming forever to the rythmic songs
Of angel-choirs, He presses on our souls,
And most rejoices when we most receive.

Then let us take as greatly as he gives;
Not with a hand that challenges the gift,
Or seems the Giver's goodness to impeach,
Or to fix bounds to his beneficence;
But with a soul all open to receive,
And growing ampler to receive the more,
The more his love bestows; with thankfulness
That links us in divinest fellowship
To Him who gives all good and perfect gifts
From his great goodness and full perfectness.

So, to their overflowing, shall our hearts
Be filled with love and gracious charities;
So shall we learn, no more to be unlearned,
The lesson, most divine, of doing good,
Whence goodness, its divine necessity;
So, growing in its likeness, we shall grow
To the full stature of the Lord's redeemed,
And know how sweet the freedom from all sin,
How beautiful the ministry of love,
How blest and all-sufficing, holiness.

SYMBOLIZATION OF THE WORLD'S EVENTFUL CRISIS.

O. R. FASSETT.

"And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that they should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads."—REV. 7: 1-3.

In this vision we have a symbolic prophecy of one of the most remarkable and important epochs in the history of our world; even its closing period. Prophecy is history written beforehand. Symbolic prophecy is where symbols are used as representatives of the things or facts mentioned, rather than the objects or facts themselves.

It is of the first importance in the study of historic prophecy, to determine the time or period of the fulfillment of its several distinctive or consecutive events. No intelligent idea of prophecy can be had without this, no more than we can gain an intelligent understanding of historic events, without a knowledge of the time or epoch of their occurrence. The chronological period in the history of our world, for the fulfillment of this symbolic prophecy, is under the "sixth seal," mentioned in the "book of seven seals." Rev. 5 and 6.

The events symbolized on the opening of the first seal took place in the first century of the Christian era. Those on the opening of the second seal, in the second century. Those of the third seal, from the third to the sixth century. Those of the fourth seal, during the sixth and seventeenth inclusive—the period of "the dark ages." Those of the fifth seal, in the eighteenth century; and those of the sixth seal occur in the close of the eighteenth century, including the nineteenth, until time itself closes, and dooms are awarded.

There are several classes of events to occur under the opening of the "sixth seal." First, the signs of the approaching "great day of His wrath." Second, the appearing of the enthroned Judge of the world, and the consternation of the kings of the earth, and the chief men of the nations, and the world's solemn and awful prayer meeting. Third, the sealing of the servants of the living God in their foreheads, while the winds are being held. And fourth, the redemption of God's chosen people of all nations completed, and their victorious songs of deliverance, in which angelic hosts join in chorus. Chaps. 6 and 7. After which the "seventh seal" is opened. 8: 1.

Because the vision of the seventh chapter occurs after that recorded in the sixth, it does not follow that the prophetic events symbolized occur subsequently in the order of fulfillment. It is simply a new vision of other events to take place under the sixth seal, occurring simultaneously and running parallel with those, but relating to the church of God.

As we are most evidently under the sixth seal, and this generation has been the witnesses of its passing events for nearly a century, the question arises—Are there corresponding events taking place in our world answering to the symbolization here given? We think there are, most unmistakably. Let us notice the prophetic symbols.

THE FOUR ANGELS,

"Standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth." Who are they? Angels are

1. Heavenly or celestial messengers of a far higher order of beings than man, and entirely distinct from the species. "Thou madest him a little lower than the angels." Heb. 2: 7. "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 14. See also Rev. 7: 9-11.

2. God's chosen embassadors, who preach his word as pastors or evangelists, are called angels. "Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus," "Unto the angel of the church in Smyrna" (Rev. 2) refer to the several pastors of these seven churches. See also Rev. 14: 6, 7.

3. The kings, rulers, and powers of earth are so symbolized, who are the chosen agents in the accomplishment of his purposes in the world. "The powers that be are ordained of God. . . . The minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." Rom. 14: 2-4. A successor of Mohammed is called angel. Rev. 9: 11. And the four leaders and their allied armies, constituting the Ottoman power, which overran the Eastern empire, and subjugated Constantinople, bringing that whole land under the power of the Crescent, are thus named. "Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates. And the four angels were loosed . . . to slay the third part of men." Rev. 9: 13-15. These were the Seljukians under Royal Bey; the Moguls under the successors of Gengis Khan; the Ottoman under Tamerlane.

The "four angels" mentioned in this vision (Rev. 7) refer to or symbolize the four rulers and great powers of the Western empire, which broke the power of the great Napoleon, and put an end to the disastrous wars under his sway, and which constituted the "Holy Alliance" to keep the peace of the world, and did so for the period of fifty years after Bonaparte's career.

THE FOUR WINDS.

Winds symbolize political commotions and wars. As furious gales, hurricanes, tornadoes, and whirlwinds, spread devastation and destruction in their pathway, so do desolating wars, and are thus fitly emblematized—"The four winds of heaven strove upon the great sea. And four great beasts came up from the sea." Dan. 7: 23. It was by terrible and destructive wars that the four great empires of the world—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome—arose from the symbolic waters. Rev. 17: 15. In the vision of Rev. 7 we have the counter symbol used. "The four winds" are held, that they should not "blow on the earth, nor on the sea." A pacific state of the world is to be maintained by four allied powers of the earth, for a specific period, in the last time. Has this part of the vision been fulfilled? We say Yes, unhesitatingly, and most marvelously.

An alliance was formed between England, Russia, Austria, and Prussia, in which they combined their armies to destroy the rival power of the first Napoleon, and did terminate it at the battle of Waterloo, and closed the period of his bloody victories by his banishment to the Isle of St. Helena. The object of that alliance was not only to do this, but to "keep the peace of the world"; and they labored to this end in their political diplomacy for many years.

When the London Peace Society celebrated its fiftieth anniversary a few years since, Mr. Henry Pease, the chairman, remarked: "The Peace Society was commenced when a most disastrous war was about to close; and now at its fiftieth anniversary we know not how soon a war of greater magnitude may burst upon us. But is it," he asks, "a time in which the Society should die?"

Is it not remarkable that the Peace Society was organized near the close of the Napoleonic wars under Napoleon I., and has just survived the period in which there was to be a pacific state of the world, as symbolized in this vision, and has now nearly expired, just as the gales of war begin to blow again upon the nations? The church and world took this sign of the times as evidence of a temporal millennium of peace and righteousness of a thousand years; but are now surprised that the millennium has not transpired, and that there is but little prospect of it; and instead thereof, as said Mr. Pease, "We know not how soon a war of greater magnitude may burst upon us."

One of the delegates to the "Peace Congress of Berlin," held about twenty years ago, thus writes in the Boston Journal of Chemistry:—

"Is it probable that the nations of the earth will ever sheathe the sword and cease to war against each other, and that all national disputes and difficulties will be settled by diplomacy or a congress of nations? In the light of past and present experience, in view of the exhibition of the murderous spirit exhibited so palpably in the occurrences of the times, it must be confessed that there is strong probability that wars will continue so long as human beings exist."

We are glad that this gentleman has got his eyes open to the fable of the "world's conversion," and to the condition of the nations to the end. He continues:—

"Twenty or more years ago, we had the honor of being elected as one of the delegates to represent this country in the great Peace Congress held at Berlin, and at that time, in the last days of a long interval of peace, it did seem as if advancing christianity, science, literature, art, humanity, national comity, everything, was conspiring to place a ban upon war. The kings and emperors of Europe, the great statesmen and diplomatists, looked favorably upon every effort to create an overpowering public sentiment against war. The gentlemen composing the congress in Germany were treated with every mark of respect, and a strong hope was expressed by war-making powers at home and abroad, that the era of continued peace had dawned upon the earth. But, alas! what have we seen?"

We have seen enough to convince us that there is no peace or rule of righteousness until the Prince of peace comes to rule in righteousness.

"We have recently read over again an old book (Crevier's History of the Roman Emperors), which is the bloody record of a race of men who cursed the world by their presence. Those men rioted in carnage, reveled amid the desolation of ruined cities and empires; but they were heathen. How much better, more humane, more open to pity, are we than the men of pagan Rome? Look at poor France at the present time, bleeding, starving, and filled with the wailings of anguished widows and orphans! What more did the cruel Romans do in their Gallic wars? What more could they do than storm cities, murder and pillage the people, and place them in a condition of starvation? O tempora! O mores!"

SWEETLY SLEEPING.

Words by MARY SMALL. Music by GEO. E. LEE.

1. Sister, thou art sweetly sleeping, Free from pain, and toil, and care; Dearest sister, how we miss thee, Miss thee in the house of prayer.
2 Thou wilt sleep, but not forever; Jesus died, and rose again; Soon he'll come in clouds of glory, Thou wilt rise with him to reign.
3 Sister, then we hope to meet thee, Then we'll take thee by the hand, Then we'll twine our arms around thee, In that bright and happy land.

The wars of the few passing years are but the beginning of the end; "the whirlwinds" have arisen "in the coasts of the earth," and are now again centering in the field of prophecy in fearful destruction. The four winds are unloosed. Look out for a furious and dreadful storm upon the world—"the battle of the great day."

The following historic record, from a late writer who had no knowledge of this prophecy, or any reference to it, and hence the more valuable in confirmation of this exposition, is so important, I quote it in this place in part. I hope it will be read, as it throws much light on the period in which we live.

'Roll up that map of Europe; it will not be wanted for ten years.' These were the words of the dying Pitt. The battle of Austerlitz had broken his heart; all the best schemes of Europe were crushed. The continent was prostrate before the overshadowing domination of Napoleon I. The historical map of Europe was entirely deranged. The well-known landmarks had been swept away. Old thrones had been shorn or abolished, and new thrones had been carved out for the Usurper's kin. Pitt, feeble in health and true to patriotism, yet disheartened, went home to die, when he uttered the above words, and others, as a dying statesman. 'O my country! in what a state I leave my country!'

The words of Pitt were prophetic. Ten years passed away before the map of Europe with which Napoleon had played such strange vagaries could be reconstructed. Before the time of Napoleon the public law of Europe was mainly based upon the treaty of Westphalia in 1648 (about one hundred and fifty years before Napoleon's day), which concluded the religious wars of Germany. And the treaty of Westphalia constituted the most important document that regulated the written or positive international law of Europe. After the downfall of Napoleon it became necessary that the public law of Europe should be again established on a fixed basis.

By 'the Treaty of Vienna,' or 'Treaties of Vienna,' which is a name given to a cluster of treaties and transactions, which, after the fall of Napoleon and the first empire, constructed Europe on a new and universally recognized basis, and is known by the locality of Vienna, we have the international law of the allied powers.

The first step in the negotiation, which all the Vienna diplomacy assumed was the memorable convention of April 23d, 1814, held in Paris, called 'The Paris Treaty'; by which it was provided that French troops should evacuate all that they held in Germany, Italy, and the low countries beyond the frontiers of old France as they stood on the first of Jan., 1792. Thus by one blow the whole fruit of the French revolutionary wars was swept away.

Fifty-three fortresses, twelve thousand pieces of cannon, and nearly a hundred thousand men were at once surrendered. The Allies thus destroyed Napoleon's map, but had not reconstructed one of their own. The population of the regions thus severed from the Napoleonic empire amounted to sixteen millions, and that of the internal dependencies to many millions more. The treaty made certain international arrangements. A leading one—that the second rate states bordering on France should be strengthened to resist future aggression from warlike agencies of their great and uncomfortable neighbor.

Germany was again to be independent under the guarantee of a federal union. Holland and Switzerland were to be independent. Italy divided into sovereign states. Malta ceded to England. And all matters of detail to be left to a congress of all the great powers.'

The members of this Alliance were the following gentlemen: Alexander, Emperor of Russia, the king of Prussia, the famous Prince Metternich, the Austrian minister who presided over the deliberations, Lord Castlereagh and the Duke of Wellington, both of England. These constituted the officers of the Alliance. France was admitted to a seat and representation in the person of the wily Tallyrand, the Pope also, and others. The first four constituted the Allied Powers. These confirmed the 'treaty of Paris' at Vienna.

There were many things to settle, and the world came near witnessing the spectacle of war among the peacemakers. The congress issued this one most memorable of its declarations:—'We declare at the same time, that firmly resolved to maintain entire the treaty of Paris, of May 13th, 1814, and the dispositions sanctioned by that treaty, and those which we have resolved on, to complete and to consolidate it, we will unite all our efforts that the general peace, the object of the wishes of Europe, and the constant purpose of their labors, may not again be troubled; and to provide against every attempt which shall threaten to replunge the world into the disorders of revolution.'

On the 20th of Nov., 1815, these powers concluded three principal measures, which include other treaties and conventions for the final settlement of Europe. Among these was the celebrated treaty of 'The Holy Alliance.' This treaty sets forth that these powers felt that they were delegated to restore peace to the world, and they affirm—'In conformity with the principles of the Holy Scriptures, which order all men to regard each other as brothers, and considering ourselves as compatriots, to lend each other every aid, assistance and succor, on every occasion; and regarding ourselves toward our subjects and armies as fathers, to direct them on every occasion, in the same spirit of fraternity with which they are animated to protect religion, peace, and justice."

These are the historic facts concerning this alliance of "the four powers," to give peace to the world, and did secure it for a period of half a century. And now with these facts before us, how alarming is the present aspect and condition of Europe and the world. Napoleon III. declared, a few years since, the "Treaties of Vienna null and void," and tore them up in the face of European powers, and has since demonstrated that those treaties no longer confine France, or keep the peace of the world. Prussia, one of these allied powers, has come to act independently of the confederacy, fearing only one of them—Russia; and caring but little for the counsel or action of the other two—England and Austria. The old alliance broken, a new revolution is inaugurated, which is destined to change the whole map of Europe, and the world, before another term of peace can be long enjoyed.

Generals Burnside and Sheridan were dining together with Bismarck during the recent war between Prussia and France. The former took occasion to call Bismarck's attention to the map of Germany hanging up on the wall of the room, saying to him,

"The map of Germany?"

"Yes," replied Bismarck; "the map of Germany as it was."

That map, then, must be reconstructed. But how? That's the question. It must be agreeably to both the eastern and western powers, or Europe and the world is convulsed by wars as never before. Both the east and west are involved; and the critical state of affairs at this hour makes "men's hearts fail them for fear, and for looking after those things coming on the earth," amid "the perplexity of nations." Luke 21: 25, 26.

The New York Herald referring to the speech of the Emperor William on the throne of Charlemagne, says:—

"We are not disposed to exaggerate, but we cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that the removal of the throne of Charlemagne from Aachen to Berlin (a wicked spoliation in itself considered), means the re-establishment of an empire in Europe which shall know no rival. Russia must now march eastward. Sweden and Denmark will find it convenient to recognize the Teutonic Empire, and all the Southern people will submit to dictation. The 'streak of silver sea' cuts England off from the Continent, and leaves her to follow out her career as a grand Asiatic Power. We have entered upon a new era. The Emperor William's speech from the throne of Charlemagne, of Otho the Great, of the Red-bearded Frederic, marks its comment."

THE SYMBOLIC SEALING ANGEL.

"I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God," etc.

This must symbolize an ecclesiastical messenger, or agent, as his work is connected with the church of the living God, and as by the gospel preached man, by becoming intelligent, believing christians, are sealed. "In whom after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after that ye believe, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory." Eph. 1: 13, 14.

During the fifty years of peace, and to this hour, while as yet the winds are in a measure restrained in violence, the gospel has had unprecedented spread, influence, and success among the nations of the world. The living preacher, under missionary zeal, has gone to the ends of the earth to preach the gospel of God. "The isles have waited for his law." The Bible has been translated into nearly all the languages and dialects of the world, and copies of the Scriptures, or parts of them, have been scattered everywhere in all tongues. Revivals have followed the labors of pastors and evangelists unexampled since the apostolic missions. "The gospel of the kingdom," too, has been revived, and is being "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," as "the end" of this dispensation is about to close by the advent of the King. Matt. 24: 14. And the symbolic angel is fulfilling marvelously his mission—"I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Rev. 14: 6, 7.

Joseph Wolf, the great missionary in the East, who carried the gospel to the Jews, Mohammedans, and Arabs, began to proclaim the coming of the Lord in 1820, from the Mount of Olivet; and since then the proclamation has become world-wide, and "the servants of our God" are being "sealed" for "the inheritance" of which they have received "the earnest" as soon as they have intelligently believed and embraced the good news. The object of this sealing is to "secure the safety of the persons sealed in the impending calamities" (Barnes); and how better could this be done than by an intelligent faith that the end is near?

RECAPITULATION—REMARKS.

The following irrefutable facts should be observed:—

1. This generation falls amid the events occurring under the opening of the "sixth seal." We are witnessing them, and are far down in their history, and close upon the end of this world and the solemn judgment scenes.

2. An alliance has been formed between four great nations, to put an end to destructive wars and secure peace to the world; and for a period of over fifty years the world has enjoyed an unexampled pacific state, during which period the gospel has proved the salvation of millions, and among all nations. The nations are warned, too, of the approaching end, against whom "the gospel of the kingdom" will be a swift witness; while "the servants of God," "sealed in their foreheads," are heeding the command of their coming Lord—"When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21: 25-28.

3. This alliance is now at an end; the winds of war are beginning to blow terrible destruction in their pathway; and peace diplomacy is nearly played out with the nations. The whirlwinds from the four quarters of the earth are gathering upon the field of prophecy; and "the battle of the great day," under "the sound of the seventh angel," is about to begin. Alas! who shall abide the coming calamities, and be delivered from them, hid in the pavilion of his God?

4. It is the duty of every one to hear and obey the gospel, and be "sealed unto the day of redemption." God shall have the praise of this poor heart of mine, in permitting me to hear his gospel, see the approaching and and coming kingdom of God, and giving me the "earnest of the inheritance" as an evidence of the affixed seal. I do hope in his word, and in the return of his Son, Immanuel, whom I trust I shall welcome to this earth again with all his saints. I do "love His appearing." Beyond the gathering storms of divine vengeance and righteous judgment of God, comes the cloudless and everlasting kingdom of our God.

"O, happy day, when wars shall cease,
And ransomed earth be filled with peace;
When sin and death no more shall reign,
And Eden bloom on earth again."

THE MOTE AND THE BEAM.

E. SHEPARD.

The following thoughts were suggested by listening to a lecture delivered in No. Easton, Apr. 17th, upon Saul and the "witch of Endor." The lecturer's object was to show that Saul's proceeding was contrary to the will of God, as we read in Lev. 19: 31—"Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them. I am the Lord your God." And again—"Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." Ex. 22: 18. Therefore Saul knew it was wrong, and had, before this, "put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land." And although the lecturer did not mention it, I will quote from 1 Chron. 10: 13—"So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it." Of Samuel he showed that he was a good man, and had walked uprightly before both his God and the people.

Thus far he was right, and I could find no fault; but he made the assertion that as Samuel was a good man, and being dead, his "soul was in heaven," showing that the woman should have brought down the spirit of Samuel, instead of up, as she professed to do. After I returned home, I was thinking the subject over, and thought what a pity it was that the churches could not see that "modern Spiritualism" is the result of their own doctrine; and these words of our Savior, from Matt. 7: 3, came forcibly to my mind—"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" And also—"Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." Now the definition of mote is, "a small particle"; and that of beam—"a main timber." Therefore I ask, If the mote of spiritualism, which is in the eye of the spiritualists, was founded upon the beam of the "immortal-soul" doctrine, which is in the eye of the churches, to which belongs the greater condemnation? I answer, to the churches; for have they not given them the "main timber" whereon to build their structure? And I firmly believe, however much the churches may condemn spiritualism, they can never remove it until they "first cast out the beam" from their own eyes.

And again, I should be glad to have any one inform me of the lecturer's authority for saying that Samuel's soul was in heaven. I find nothing concerning Samuel's death which can convey any other meaning than this—"Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city.

In conclusion, let me add these important words so often found in Revelation—"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

GOD IS LOVE.

M. A. MOORE.*

As we contemplate the character of God, we are led to think of him as a being afar off, infinite in wisdom, power and might; whose superiority to mortals is so great, that no affinity can exist between them, and whose condescension in listening to the prayers and tears of earth's sinful creatures is too wonderful to admit of belief. When we think of him as a judge, omnipotent and eternal, the maker and ruler of the universe, who holds all things as in the hollow of his hand, and can with one mighty sweep of his outstretched arm cause devastation far and wide; when we think of him as such a being, we can but reverence, while our hearts are awed into silence before him, and our transgressions rise in magnitude before us, until we feel that we are too far from this God of love, who has promised to draw near to those that draw near to him.

With holy fear we exclaim, "Can such a sinner as I ever dare approach this God of love, purity, holiness and love, and with confidence say "My Father"? Yes, even I may do it. All may who will accept the sacrifice given in love, the Mediator between God and man, who shed his blood in ignominy that we might find a way of access to the Father, a being pure and holy, tender and compassionate, loving all with love unparalleled; for "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son" as a sacrifice for sin.

It would seem as we think of our innumerable sins, our forgetfulness to acknowledge God in all our ways, our cold-heartedness towards him, and indifference to his cause, that he would turn from us, and leave us unregarded as unworthy of his care; and were it not for his boundless love, we should not dare approach him, sinful as we are, and hope to be forgiven. But God in mercy and wisdom, through love, has promised to redeem us from our sins, pardon them all, and make us pure and holy even as he is holy.

"Come, let us reason together, saith the Lord. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as wool. Though they be red like crimson, they shall be white as snow." God does not ask an unreasonable thing of us, when he demands the heart's highest, holiest love. We receive proof of his divine love to us daily in numberless blessings and mercies, which he bestows upon us with a lavish hand, new every morning and fresh every evening, whether acknowledged or unacknowledged.

Those whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. We cannot expect, because we are objects of his love, that he will leave us to pursue our own course without chastisements. Trials, perplexities and sorrows await the true children of God, yet they only serve to draw us nearer to our Father; while our love is increased, and we are made to feel that all the glory of earth is as nothing compared to one ray of divine light. O that a spark of God's love might find a lodgment in our hearts, permeate our entire beings, until we in deep humility of soul can lay all upon the altar, and with love unfeigned address our heavenly Father with even more freedom than that of a child towards a tender and dearly beloved earthly parent.

What a privilege is ours! that of drawing near to this loving Father, meekly confessing our wrong doings, with the sure hope of pardon freely given, while we receive a kind Father's smile in return. Then, too, we may know our sins forgiven, as he has graciously given us of his own Spirit to bear witness with ours that we are his children. Oh how sad the state of one who is a stranger to the love of God! I would gladly remind such of a friend above, a ruler greater than any of which earth can boast, who rules in wisdom, love and truth, and who waits to receive what is due, the homage of their hearts, too long placed upon the transitory things of earth.

How many there are who live year after year apparently independent of God. He bestows his blessings with a willing hand upon them, still their hearts remain unmoved as adamant. No expression of gratitude is ever heard from them, and no emotions of love ever seem to move their hearts. Nothing is or can be concealed from the eye of God. Every thought, every impulse of our hearts, either for good or evil, are all noted. Not only our actions, but every secret of our hearts is known to God.

How important, then, that we should not only seem to be good and true, but to be pure, that we may enjoy the favor of God continually, which is by far greater riches than all earth's treasures of gold and silver. Give me an inheritance incorruptible hereafter, and a place at the right hand of God, where love, deep, pure and holy, shall emanate from the throne, and happiness without alloy shall beam from every eye. Make me worthy of such a place, my Father, even though I be tried in the furnace of affliction, and anguish deep and unutterable rend my heart.

MORALITY.

O. MENDENHALL.

In these latter days, men having the form of godliness deny the power thereof, by striving to attain unto a resurrection of the dead, without a saving faith in Christ. No good works of ours, no morality, however pure it may seem, will save us, lest man should boast. Jesus is our only defence, and through him alone we can procure remission of sins, and be saved from the second death. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

A living faith built upon this foundation will stand in the day that shall reveal man's works by fire. This faith causes us to work for him who has done so much for us; and when our works are done with an eye single to his glory, they are not in vain, but will be blessed though we may feel at times that our endeavors are but "labor lost."

We should do all we can for God, though it may be as seed sown by the wayside, or bread cast upon the waters. We should not cease from sowing seed, though for a time it may be hidden; but rather leave it with him who will bring it to pass; and though difficulties and disappointments are at times our lot, we should not be discouraged or weary in well doing. Paul says—"We glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope. . . . Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." This is our hope, and by it we expect to be made like him when he comes to restore that which was lost,—to make up his jewels, destroy Satan and his host, and set up his kingdom for ever on the new earth. Death and hell will then be cast into the lake of fire. There shall no more trials, troubles, cares, sorrows, afflictions, and "there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."

God grant that we, too, may enter by Christ the only gate, and may we not build hopes upon our morality, or creeds, or churches, but simply trust him who died upon Calvary, that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We must remember that here we have no continuing city. This world is not a friend to grace. Each one has his peculiar cross; yet we know the Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and no one is called upon to suffer the agony of mind and body that was laid upon Him who bore the sins of the world upon his shoulders.

"But tears of grief can ne'er repay
The debt of love I owe:
Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do."

THE RIGHT WAY.

It is not always a popular way. If right and wrong were to be established by a popular vote, how fluctuating would be the results! The crowd that pressed around Jesus were ready one day to cry, "Hosanna," and the next, "Crucify him." When Paul and Barnabas preached at Lystra, on their first missionary journey, and made a poor cripple walk who never had walked before, the simple-hearted Lycaonians, roused to the highest pitch of excitement, cried out: "The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men!" The abashed apostles had hard work to keep them from offering sacrifice to them. But the next day the same excitable rabble, instigated by the wicked Jews, stoned Paul until they thought he was dead. If Christianity were to-day subjected to the test of a popular vote throughout the world, it would be found in a small minority. One single form of Paganism, Buddhism, by far outnumbers it. Even if we include among christians all who merely give to it a nominal assent, without any reference to the influence of Christianity on their lives, we find that only one-fourth of the world's population is christian.

But though not always pleasant or popular, it is always a safe way, and the only safe way. The mere trickster who seeks to go with the current of popular favor will often find himself in a perilous position, and will be wrecked at last. The same is true of the man who wilfully neglects duty. If he seeks to go to Tarshish, when God sends him to Nineveh, retributive Providence will be sure to arrest him on the way. We have known men who were undoubtedly called of God to preach the gospel, but who refusing to go, sought some other field for the use of their abilities, only to find their way hedged up by a mysterious power. It is better and safer to take the path of duty, with all its toils and perils, than to wander in some flowery by-way where the blossoms only conceal thorns which pierce and destroy. The man who seeks to do right, though he may be beset by foes and dangers, need have no fears as to the results; the promises of God are all pledged for him; peace and joy and solid happiness will be his, while the consciousness of right doing will ever be to him a tower of strength.

Many complain that it is hard to find the right way. This is a mistake. If men will seek it aright, and honestly wish to find it, they cannot fail. There must be a willingness to ascertain our duty, whatever it may be. Like the smitten Saul, we are to say: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Then we are to be ready to do it. There are many who never find the right way, because they are unwilling to do what is right. They get one glimpse of their duty, and the sight appals them, so that they shrink from it. The true way to overcome a difficulty is to march right up to it.—Methodist.

CLEANSING OF THE SANCTUARY.

When speaking of "coming events," in the last two numbers of the Crisis, we had passed on to the resurrection of the dead saints, and the changing of the righteous living at the coming of Christ, when all who will be saved will be caught up "to meet the Lord in the air"; and the wicked who shall be alive at that time, shall be cut off by judgments from the Lord. This brought us to the next event in the heavenly programme, which we understand to be the cleansing of the "sanctuary."

In Daniel 8: 13, 14, we read: "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

From this Scripture, we learn that the sanctuary cannot be cleansed till the close of the twenty-three hundred days, which mark the duration of the time covering the whole length of the vision. The vision embraces the ram, representing the Medo-Persian kingdom; the rough goat symbolizing the kingdom of Grecia; and other political changes which were to take place during the fulfillment of this prophecy. The cleansing of the sanctuary appears to be the last link in the great chain of events which must transpire before the saints take the promised kingdom. It is very evident that the sanctuary cannot be cleansed till the end of the twenty-three hundred days; hence if any one should claim that this prophetic period has expired, he should also give evidence that the sanctuary is cleansed. We think this has not yet been done; therefore, we conclude the twenty-three hundred days are not yet fully completed.

We now inquire for the meaning of the word sanctuary, as used in the text under consideration. It has different significations in the Bible. In Heb. 9: 2, it refers to a part of the tabernacle; in 1 Chron. 22: 19, a part of the temple; in Ps. 114: 2, by a figure of speech, Judah was called the Lord's sanctuary; and in Isa. 8: 14, the Lord is represented as a sanctuary. We think the sanctuary mentioned in Dan. 8: 13, 14, which is to be cleansed at the end of the twenty-three hundred days, can not be the one referred to in any of the passages just noticed. The tabernacle and temple have been long destroyed, and cannot be cleansed. Judah has not been cleansed, and the word cannot apply to the Lord, for he has never been unclean.

Inasmuch as the twenty-three hundred days give the length of time necessary to fulfill the vision; and as the events specified in the vision required many centuries for their accomplishment, it follows that the days were not literal, but symbolical, like the prophecy of which they form a part. Hence, we understand the period necessary to measure the length of the vision, which began with the "pushing" of the ram, is one of twenty-three hundred years (each day representing a year), at the end of which the sanctuary shall be cleansed. We will now "search the Scriptures" to find the location of the sanctuary, which is to be cleansed at the end of the twenty-three hundred days.

The word "sanctuary" is first found in the Bible in Ex. 15: 17, where Moses says to the Lord, concerning Israel: "Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Says David in Ps. 78: 54: "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased." We have now found a sanctuary that could be trodden down by the wicked, and be cleansed from all the effects of the curse. When referring to the time allotted to the scattering of Israel, Jesus says: "They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke 21: 24. This is the very place to which the Lord brought the children of Israel, when he led them out of Egypt to his sanctuary.

From the plain teaching of the Scriptures, we are satisfied that this sanctuary—the land occupied by the first Adam—is the one to be cleansed by the second Adam, when he shall come to set up his kingdom. This sanctuary is to become its capital, where the throne of the King of kings will be located. But before he shall be seated upon his throne, in the kingdom of heaven, he will "send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; . . . and then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom [or sanctuary] of their Father." Matt. 13: 41, 43. Then will be the time when all the saints who were raised from the dead at the coming of Christ, and caught up together with the living christians "to meet him in the air," till the sanctuary should be cleansed, shall return with Jesus to commence the glorious millennial reign with their Redeemer. Then, as saith the prophet Isaiah, "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Isa. 60: 13.

Jesus sent an angel to John to show him "things which must be hereafter." And he says: "I saw thrones and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls [persons] of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."

PARTING WORDS.

We have said farewell to our dear friends in California; but with a bright hope of soon greeting them again in the elysian fields of paradise, where the thought of parting, and the sad "goodbye," will never cause the eyes to moisten with tears; but where our communion with the dear saints will be perpetual and eternal.

We have great reason for praise and gratitude towards God for the rich blessings he has been pleased to bestow on our labors in California. We expected much, but have received more. After holding two meetings a day, for nearly three months, the interest seems to be unabated. In our last meeting at the Minna-street church, twenty new ones came forward for prayers. It was hard to tear away from them. It was a heavenly feast to hear their thrilling testimonies in relation to the great blessings they had received during the past few months. The common saying is, "My Bible is a new book. Now I can read it and understand it. I never loved it so well before."

Nearly all, so far as we know, who attend at the Minna-street church, are fully satisfied in relation to the doctrine we have preached, and have given it a hearty reception. This is what has given them such great light on the Scriptures, and been the means, by the blessing of the Lord, of filling their hearts with abounding joy and peace. They often express wonder that they could have been kept in the dark so long, when the light in the Bible was shining so brightly. They now see that they had been receiving theology in a "polluted form," when they were taught that man has an "immortal soul;" or that he is conscious between death and the resurrection; or that the wicked will be eternally tormented. These fables they have most fully rejected; and are now settled in the belief that man is wholly mortal, and dependent on Christ for the gift of eternal life, which will not be received till he shall come to set up his kingdom. This they believe to be the truth in its unpolluted form, and the result has been to lead them to purify their hearts; to consecrate all to Christ, and to stand longing and waiting for his coming and kingdom.

We shall ever remember with pleasure Bro. Bailey, the pastor of the Minna-street church, who has labored with us in great faithfulness. He is one of the Lord's true men, who has not bowed down to the fashionable gods that are worshiped by so many in these last days. He stands like a rock to receive unmoved the dashing waves of a popular opinion, that are floating so many down to eternal perdition. His light is ever burning, and he is waiting for the return of our Lord. He is a representative of Christianity before it became adulterated with the spirit and manners of the world. May the Lord's rich blessings be his constant portion.

Besides him four others in San Francisco have commenced preaching the glad tidings they have received. Their hearts are in the work, and they feel willing to suffer with Christ, and bear reproach, for the sake of their blessed hope. They are very sincere men, and have fully adopted what has been branded as a "polluted form" of doctrine; but they love it too well to abandon it through fear of sneers, or to avoid the scoffer's scorn. The dear Brn. and Srs. in San Francisco are in earnest. They have great light, and they have no intention of putting it under a bushel, for the sake of saving a good name, and securing a popular place among those who have stood aloof from the great work the Lord has been doing in the Minna-street church, and in other parts of the city. Through their labors, we expect frequently to hear glad tidings from the "summer land." We would say to them, Press the battle. "Be strong in the Lord," and stand up for him, in all places, with a bold meekness. Do "not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." This is no time to be faint-hearted. We are too near the heavenly Canaan to look back after the honors, pleasures, or treasures of this world. Let them go, and seize the glorious prize of eternal life. Consecrate all to Christ, and keep "unspotted from the world." Keep the eye single, that the whole body may be full of light; and soon we shall reach the hour of deliverance.

Monday evening, April 10th, was our last in San Francisco, and was spent with our dear friends in Christ, in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, where we met to partake of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. We spread a table of sufficient length, so that one hundred and forty-seven sat down at once to the communion. It was a heavenly sight, and a blessed season, which has a precious place in our memory. We had lively thoughts of the time when we hope to meet those same dear friends at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

In that hall we first addressed the people of San Francisco, and there we spoke our parting words. Only a few met at the first meeting, but many were unable to get in, who came to the farewell greeting. We felt strong gratitude to the Lord for the happy change. It is his work. To him be all the glory. Bro. Bailey sat by our side to assist in the interesting and solemn exercises. He loves whatever is like Jesus. After the passing of the bread and wine, many expressed their love for the Savior in words that stirred up the deep emotions in many hearts. Such scenes are not common in this world, as the one we enjoyed on that occasion. We dreaded the moment of parting, but it came; and we had to say farewell to some of the warmest, noblest, and dearest friends we ever knew. Tears flowed when we parted, but we looked forward with joy to the time when Jesus will come and wipe them all away.

Tuesday morning, at eight o'clock, escorted by some dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ, including Bro. Bailey, we took the boat for Oakland wharf, where we were to take the cars, a distance of three miles. On our way, we had a very precious visit, that left a hallowed influence upon our mind, and filled our memory with another choice California souvenir. We believe friends have seldom parted, whose hearts were warmed with stronger christian love. Praise the Lord for true friends.

NEVADA.

Wednesday evening, April 12th, we commenced meetings in Nevada City, Cal., two hundred and six miles from San Francisco, and fourteen from Colfax, a station on the Central Pacific R. R. Nevada and Grass Valley, another city about four miles from Nevada, are in the heart of the mining district of California. Each city contains about six thousand inhabitants. The first mining work was done in Nevada county in 1849. There are two kinds, the "placer mining," and the "quartz mining." The former consists in washing the gold out of the earth with which it is mixed; and the latter in removing it from rocks, which is accomplished by quartz mills, where the stone containing the gold is pulverized and washed, thus separating the gold from the stone. The quartz mines are worked from one hundred to twelve hundred feet under ground. Strong pumps are in perpetual operation to take the water from the quartz mines. The mining is now mostly carried on by wealthy companies, as the surface placer mining is about ended. The first miners gathered the gold dust in abundance; but most of them spent it lavishly, and are now no better off than before they came to the mines. As a general rule, when money is obtained rapidly, it is spent freely. Many daring and wicked deeds were committed by the early miners, the recital of which would make the blood run chill. Each company was its own lawyer, judge, jury, and executioner. If one was found stealing over five dollar's worth, the miners would hang him to the limb of some tree. There was much of honesty and honor among the early miners; and but little mercy was shown to the thief and liar.

Nevada is rich in fruits. Peaches, pears, grapes, strawberries, and apples, grow luxuriantly, and are delicious. The land is cheap, but quite hilly; yet there are many pleasant homes on the hill-sides. But little pains have yet been taken to ornament the city by means of trees, fences, flowers, and nice gardens. The people have paid more attention to what is substantial than to the fanciful. Their minds have been directed more to what is in the earth, than to the cultivation of the soil. They have been more anxious to secure the gold, than a pleasant home; but many have both. Much hard earned treasure is wasted in drinking saloons, at gambling tables, and with lewd women. It is very evident that the mining business is not well calculated to make devoted christians. We found religion at a low ebb. Things are common among some professors of religion, which many worldly men would not stoop to do. For this reason we found infidelity and skepticism abundant, with a large amount of indifference in relation to religious matters; but we soon had at our meetings the presence and attention of many of the leading men in judicial, legal, theological, and financial circles. Every meeting increased in numbers and interest. Our first was in the Library Hall, the second in the Baptist meeting-house, the remainder in the Court House, which is the finest building in the city. The Baptist minister, Bro. Worth, and most of his church, was anxious that we should have all our meetings in the Baptist house; but it was finally thought best to occupy the Court House, which was kindly provided by the Nevada Co. sheriff, John Dixon, Esq. As we could only remain five days, we could not expect to see any great work in that time; but we left strong men under conviction, who were decidedly skeptical when we commenced, and had lost their interest in religious matters. We felt assured of seeing a blessed revival in a few weeks, if the meetings could be continued. It was the first preaching on the prophecies in the city. The people were astonished at the richness of the prophetic mines; and came to the conclusion that their contents were of more value than gold. We left them digging into the hitherto neglected Scriptures, as for hidden treasure; feeling confident that some would find that which would lead them to eternal life.

The fields are all ripe in California, ready for the labors of faithful men, whose only object should be to lead men to Christ. We found a good home with Bro. and Sr. Shurtleff, the son-in-law of Bro. C. L. Percival, formerly of Hatley, P. Q., Canada. Bro. and Sr. Percival are residing with Bro. Shurtleff. Bro. P. held some meetings when he first came to Nevada; but we found him almost discouraged in trying to reach the hearts of the people. We left him with bright hopes for the future.

☞ BRO. A. H. BROWN writes in reference to the death of Sister C. B. Turner:—"Our dear Sister Turner, after suffering many months, under a load of care and anxiety, fell asleep in Jesus April 20th, to rest awhile until the morning of the resurrection shall dawn. Her mind was clear, her evidence of acceptance strong, and her testimony worth more than millions of worlds,—'Jesus loves me. I know that I shall be accepted of him. Glory to God! all is peace.' Such was her dying testimony. Then calling her children, kissed them each, bade them farewell, and sank to rest. I cannot write more at this time, except to say to the dear friends who have contributed to her aid, in her sickness and sorrow, that with your consent I propose to apply the money to the benefit of her children. I believe this would be in accordance with her own wishes, could she have expressed them. Less than $40 are now needed to make up the full amount. We hope this will be done at once.

I have received for Sister Turner: Miss M. A. Ford, $1. Mrs. Wm. E. Gordon, $1. Mrs. E. W. Jilson, $1. Total, $3."

THE BIBLE BANNER.—We have seen but two numbers of the Bible Banner, but we are much pleased with it, and commend it to all our readers. It is published by Bro. H. A. King, 240 Broadway, New York. Price $1 a year.

CORRECTION.—In the Report of the Mass. Conference last week, Bro. Bissell, of Lowell, is made to say—"We have engaged Bro. Mitchell to become our pastor." He should have been reported as saying—"We have given him a call," etc.

☞ We understand that Bro. A. W. Sibley has accepted the call of the Rutland (Vt.) church to become their pastor.

THE LECTURE LAST NIGHT.—A large audience assembled last night in the Tabernacle to listen to Elder Miles Grant, who has rendered himself somewhat famous as an enthusiastic second Adventist preacher. His subject—"Proof that the Bible came from an omnipotent and omniscient Being," was ably handled and in a style, so far as the matter was concerned, that was familiar to most of the audience. After expressing the pleasure he felt at what he had seen here, and the kind reception given him by all whom he had met, and the courtesy shown him by President Young, he took a text, Dan. 2: 44, which speaks of the kingdom that the God of heaven would set up in the last days. He stated that there existed all over the world a wide-spread unbelief in the divine authenticity of the Bible, and that he himself had, twenty-eight years ago, been an infidel. If it could be clearly shown that prophecies of the Bible were infallible, it would be conclusive evidence that it emanated from an omniscient Being, for the very fulfillment would show they must have proceeded from a source which had power to control circumstances so that nothing could intervene to prevent their consummation. The predictions of the prophets relating to the first advent of Christ were literally fulfilled. . . .

As a speaker Elder Grant is remarkably lucid and forcible; he is a clear reasoner and the simplicity and virginality of his style, combined with his earnestness of manner, charm and enlist the sympathies of his audience. We have heard but one expression from those who attended last night; they were highly entertained. On Friday evening he will lecture at the same place. The lectures are free.

The above extracts are from the Deseret Evening News, in Salt Lake City, April 20th, 1871. The News is the official organ of President Young.

IS JESUS THE TRUE MESSIAH?

It is quite a popular thing among religionists to concede the fact that Jesus is the Messiah foretold in prophecy, without even thinking of the legitimate and inevitable result growing out of the concession, or while subscribing to a theory which, if true, would invalidate the Messiahship of Jesus; for the personal reign of Jesus on earth is extensively repudiated by those who claim him as the Messiah, while the same scriptures which prove Jesus the Messiah, as clearly prove that he is destined to reign on earth; consequently a denial of the reign of Christ hereafter is an indirect repudiation of the Messiahship of Jesus, as will appear from the following prophecies concerning the Messiah.

1. "From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." Dan. 9: 25. We can clearly prove that Jesus came at the end of this prophetic measurement of time; thus furnishing proof that he is the true Messiah, for the Messiah must come at the right point of time, and Jesus was the only claimant to the Messiahship that ever did appear at the end of that sacred measurement which was to reach to the Messiah's advent, and consequently he is the only personage who could be recognized as the Messiah without repudiating the time that was to designate the period of his introduction into the world; but in thus proving him the Messiah designated in prophecy, we as strongly prove that he is destined to reign, as he is pronounced "Messiah the Prince"; and a "prince" is an heir to a throne: so if Jesus is the true Messiah, he is also "the Prince," and consequently is destined to reign on some throne, in some locality, at some point of time: and Gabriel informs us what throne he is heir to, and he is a proper witness upon this point, for he is the very angel who gave Daniel the measurement of time reaching "unto Messiah," and who affirmed that Messiah should be "the Prince," or prospective Ruler; and the same angel Gabriel who thus predicted to Daniel the advent of a Messiah who should be "the Prince," thus speaks concerning Jesus—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1: 32, 33. Here we learn that this Messiah, who was predicted by Gabriel four hundred and eighty-three years before his birth, and pronounced a "Prince," is singled out by the same angel just before his birth, with the affirmation that he was heir to David's throne; and David's throne was never in heaven, but on the earth; hence, the Messiah's reign must be on earth.

2. Not only was the time of the Messiah's birth foretold in prophecy, but also the place of his birth—"But thou, Bethlehem Ephrata, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto me that is to be Ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been of old, from everlasting." Micah 5: 2. While we here find proof that this Divine personage, who had existed "from everlasting" in another state previous to his earthly pilgrimage, was to be born in Bethlehem; and while we can also prove that Jesus was born in that locality, as well as having been born at the right time, thus furnishing another proof of his Messiahship, this testimony as clearly proves that this personage must reign, for it expressly affirms that he is to be Ruler in Israel. So the very predictions which prove the time and place of Messiah's birth, so completely fulfilled in the advent of Jesus, as strongly prove that he must ultimately reign.

3. Not only was the time and place of the birth of the Messiah specified in prophecy, but his lineage is also given—"Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness." Jer. 23: 5, 6. While this prophetic statement proves that the Divine personage here mentioned, whose name should be called "The Lord our Righteousness," should be an offspring of David; and while it is true that Jesus was an offspring of David, thus furnishing another proof of his Messiahship, aside from having been born at the right time and in the right place, to agree with prophecy; the same testimony proves that he shall also be a "King," not beyond the skies, but "in the earth." So the proof of Jesus' Messiahship, whether relating to the time of his birth, the place of his birth, or to his lineage, brings along with it the proof of his Kingship. So if Jesus is the true Messiah, he must ultimately reign on earth, when he "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom"; then the seventh trumpet will sound and awaken the sleeping saints, and "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15. W. S.

IS PARADISE THE HOME OF DISEMBODIED SOULS?—This is the sentiment which many suppose that Jesus taught while hanging on the cross; but upon examination we find that he said nothing about the soul, but his address was to the physical man: "Thou shalt be with me in paradise"—not thy soul shall be with my soul. There is not a single instance in the Bible where the term "thou" applies to a disembodied soul, but it is often applied to material man: "Thou shalt be buried" (Gen. 15: 15), "Unto dust shalt thou return." Let paradise be located wherever it may, and let the promised entrance into it be in the past or in the future, the promise must be verified, not to a disembodied soul, but to the man entire; for it was not made to the soul of a man, but to the man himself. A paradise of disembodied souls is a realm of imagination.

That the thief did not go to heaven in a disembodied state with Christ on the day of crucifixion is evident—

1. He could not have gone then without entering glory in an unjudged state, for Christ "shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 1.

2. An entrance into heaven then would not harmonize with the Savior's own statement concerning the time when he is to receive the saints—"I will come again, and will receive you unto myself (John 14: 3), and certainly he would not receive the thief before receiving the rest of the saints, which will not be till his future return.

3. An entrance into heaven then would precede the time when reward is promised, which is when the seventh trump shall sound; then it is said, "Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name small and great." Rev. 11: 18. All who are to be saved, the thief not excepted, belong in this catalogue somewhere among the small or great.

4. Christ himself did not go to heaven on that day, for three days after he said to Mary—"I am not yet ascended." John 20: 17.

5. The thief's petition was—"Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The first word in the Savior's reply was "Amen," rendered "verily" by our translators. This term, when used in response to a prayer, signifies "so let it be." With a punctuation formerly used in some copies, differing from that in the common version, the request and reply would read thus: "Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Amen: I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise." When? Just when he prayed to be remembered, which prayer Christ sanctioned by responding "amen," or, so let it be. This makes a harmony between the request and reply, and agrees with the rest of the Bible. W. S.

"VANISHED OUT OF THEIR SIGHT."—We are sometimes informed that Christ could not have been in possession of a material body after his resurrection, from the fact that on one of his visits to his disciples, it is said—"He vanished out of their sight." Luke 24: 31. But no one can suppose, after reading the connection, that he evaporated; but rather, as the margin reads, "Ceased to be seen of them"; for when he appeared to them upon this very occasion, "their eyes were holden that they should not know him," even while conversing with him; and subsequently, by a similar miracle, "their eyes were opened." In the same miraculous manner, he suddenly "ceased to be seen of them" by the interposition of the same miraculous power by which "their eyes were holden." On this principle only "he vanished out of their sight," and not by evaporation. He had power to exhibit or conceal himself from their natural vision. W. S.

"IF I WILL THAT HE TARRY TILL I COME."—When Jesus uttered this language concerning John (John 21: 23), the impression at once obtained that John "should not die"; showing plainly that the disciples believed that Jesus' coming would not be to make saints die, but to make them deathless. But now the opinion is widely held that the coming of Christ is spiritual, occurring at the death of saints; not to prevent them from dying, or to make them deathless, but to subtract a part that is already deathless from the body, and transport it to a remote realm of happiness. Though John died, the disciples of Jesus that do live till he comes, will not die, and those that have died will live again, no more to die; for Jesus will come to end the reign of death, and immortalize his dying saints. Saints live again, instead of dying, at the coming of Christ. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

3. Observe the Bible rule for settling difficulties. Christ has given us a general direction in these words: "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Matt. 5: 23, 24. God cares less for devotion than for practical righteousness. The former is acceptable only when it is based upon the latter. If you refuse to put forth an honest effort to be "reconciled" to an offended brother, no amount of frequency or fervency of devotion will be accepted as a substitute. The law of God will never take ninety-nine for one hundred. Some seem to suppose that where two specified duties are enjoined, an extra amount of zeal in discharging the one will atone for neglecting the other altogether. But the gospel has no such law of compensation. In the case before us, two solemn obligations are brought to view: The one, to perform the services of the sanctuary (whether of almsgiving or prayer); the other, to remove an offence from a brother's path. While neither must be omitted, Jesus distinctly gives us the order in which these duties are to be discharged. Let the devotions give place to humanity. God can afford to wait till a suffering brother is helped. It is no wonder that prayers so often freeze on people's lips, when they refuse to follow the Master's rule. Let us not mistake the conditions of the case. We are not to wait for the offended brother to come and pour the sad tale of his grievances into our ears; nor must we hesitate because we feel no hardness toward the absent party. It is enough to know that he is stumbling on our account. Let us defer all religious ceremonies till we have searched out the cause of our brother's grief. If we have been misunderstood, let us explain, if we have been in the fault, let us confess.

A more specific rule, emanating from the same authoritative source, is thus expressed: "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican." Matt. 18: 15-17.

Here is a recipe for settling difficulties, that is admirably adapted to human nature, and eminently in keeping with sound sense. It is the most perfect rule on the subject that was ever incorporated in church polity. It only needs to be strictly observed to prove its efficacy in healing church divisions.

"If thy brother shall trespass against thee." The language implies that trespasses will be committed. In every age the church has been characterized by freaks and flaws. Ignorance, envy, censoriousness, fanaticism, and malice have brought forth their bitter fruits. But trespasses are not always the result of wickedness. Therefore, instead of giving way to the spirit of retaliation, let us seek to ascertain and remove the cause of a brother's trespass.

"Go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." This is the first step to be taken. Do not reverse the scriptural order by first telling it to the church, and much less by blazing it all abroad to an ungodly world. Do not wait for him to make the advance, but "go" yourself and tell him plainly just how you understand the case. Do not play the coward by telling somebody else, but "tell him his fault." Go in the right spirit and talk with him "alone," that there may be no outside pressure or exciting influences. If this step is taken according to the letter and spirit of the rule, it will generally prove effectual. How much better thus to extinguish the beginning of strife, than to add fuel to the flame till it becomes all-devouring and irrepressible!

If cases occur, as they sometimes will, where the first step fails of success, then let the second and third steps be taken in precisely the order prescribed. If the offender can be reached and reformed by any of these methods, the difficulty is ended. But if he prove incorrigible, let him be disfellowshiped as a "publican," who must return with hearty repentance if he ever expects to share again the confidence and privileges of the church. If the last painful resort becomes necessary, let the friends of Jesus be consoled with the reflection that it is better for an incurable member to be amputated, than for the whole body to be infected and destroyed. Though the process may be painful, it is sometimes necessary to life and health. Some churches will never have peace, purity, nor moral vigor, till they are pruned of certain branches that breed only death and putrefaction.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. Peck.

Dear Crisis:—How cheering to those of like precious faith to hear of the success of those who have left home and friends to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ in distant lands; to learn that the word of God groweth mightily and prevails,—for it is a powerful weapon with which to slay the enemies of the cross; to hear that sinners are being converted, and christians strengthened and encouraged to continue in the way everlasting.

Yet while we are made to rejoice at the good news from abroad, let us not be unmindful of the blessings that lie at our own doors. Although we have had no protracted meeting here in North Fairfield, O., the past winter, still the truth and light and the good news of the kingdom are advancing, and numbers being added to the church from time to time; those who, after hearing the word and a careful investigation of the same, are truly constrained by the goodness of God to yield obedience to the requirements of the gospel. Our present pastor, Bro. G. W. Stetson, is truly a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. Other Bro. labor among us to good acceptance. May the Lord keep us in the faith, unto his heavenly kingdom.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. E. L. Bitler writes from Catawissa, Pa.:—"An unknown friend has just sent me a copy of the Crisis, for which I am truly thankful. It seemed like a visit from an old friend. I have not seen a copy since I left New York. I learn from its pages that the truths which it teaches are spreading, and that the light is beginning to shine in some of the dark places of the earth. The people here are slow to believe the truths of the Bible. When we have presented the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, and the final destruction of the wicked, some have said, 'How can these things be, when so many learned men teach so differently? I can only refer them to the Bible with a 'thus saith the Lord.' Some believe the Lord is coming soon, but they are afraid to admit it in the churches. While talking with a prominent member of the church, she said: 'If our minister knew I believe these things, he would expel me. It is not necessary for me to give publicity to my views of the doctrine,' etc. This same minister not long ago expressed himself on this wise: 'What! talk of Jesus coming soon? Why, the gospel has not been preached to one quarter of the nations on the earth; and,' he added, 'the world must be converted first.' In one of his sermons not long since, he was trying to persuade the sinner to give his heart to God, by giving him the terrors of the law. Among other things, he said—'The soul that sinneth it shall die.' Look in your Bible; you will find it there; or, as the poet more plainly expresses it—

> 'What! to be banished from his face,
> And yet forbid to die!'

Comment is useless. Quite a number of tracts have been distributed here; some through the post-office by Sr. S. of Worcester, Mass.; others by myself. Many of the people here will not read them; others accep. and read them, but are slow to believe the truth. May the seed sown spring up and bear much fruit."

A Brother in Illinois writes:—"I have a few old numbers of the Crisis in which I find many excellent articles. I believe the stereotyped 'forms of godliness without the power' will never be shaken till the leaders of Babylon shall be made to see that creeds, confessions of faith, and confirmations, are building men up in error upon sandy foundations. I find that the people are accessible till their leaders teach them the danger of leaving the tradition of the elders. Even in the days of the Savior the common people received him gladly. What a close identity between the Jews in the times of our Savior and the mass of professing christians of our day!

And I am sorry to say that I have seen this spirit of compromise even among the Advent churches (which I regard as the exponent of the purest christianity that I am acquainted with). Let us, brethren, 'watch and be sober,' 'always abounding in the work of the Lord.' I 'thank God and take courage' when I read what great things the Lord is doing for the ministering brethren who seem to be 'faithful and wise servants, whom their Lord hath made ruler over his household to give them meat in due season.' I can truly recommend the Crisis for the many good things it contains. The Lord extend its power for good to the hearts of the people."

Bro. A. A. Hoyt writes:—"There has been a growing reformation in East Landaff since the middle of last winter. Many have found Christ for the first time, while others were reclaimed and started, as they declared, for better service. As the result of it, a church has been fully established; eight have been baptised; numbers joined the church; while others wait the next favorable time to follow in baptism and other ordinances of God's house. We trust the Lord will continue the work. Brethren wishing to preach there will correspond with Amos Morse, chairman of church committee.

I have not been able to fill my appointments for a short time past, on account of sickness; and although I am now able to be out, my lungs will not be strong enough for me to preach for a few weeks. My family is sick also, and needs my care. Let such as desire my labors talk to the Lord about it."

Bro. S. L. Manley writes:—"Jesus will soon come, and the everlasting kingdom be established; then no more sickness, sorrow, pain, or death. I have been sick much of the time for the last two months. I am on a sick bed the most of the time, yet hoping for the best. I do not say this to complain. I know all things will work together for our best good. If you have any communications for me, please direct to Marion, Wayne Co., N. Y. Remember me in your prayers."

☞ Bro. Chappell, of Colebrook River, requests the prayers of the church, that he may be restored to health.

Russell. Died, in Highlandville, Mass., March 26th, 1871, Sister Paulina A. Russell, wife of Bro. Wm. Russell, and daughter of Bro. and Sr. Samuel J. and Sophia Low, aged seventeen years and four months.

Cruel death has done a very sad work for this heart-broken family. The husband was called to witness the dying anguish of the choice and companion of his youth, while an infant daughter, motherless and helpless, was thrown upon his sobbing bosom; and amid the darkness of sorrow's stormy night, he laid his dear one down to rest, until the glorious dawning of Messiah's return shall break her dreamless slumber.

> "Then the faded flower shall freshen,
> Freshen, never more to fade;
> Then the shaded sky shall brighten,
> Brighten, never more to shade;
> Then the child will find its mother,
> And the mother find the child;
> Then dear families be gathered,
> That were scattered on the wild."

J. Couch.

Sister Sibley was the daughter of Mark N. and Mehitable H. Sibley, of Wakefield, N. H., and is the first of their twelve children with whom they have been called to part. She was converted in 1850, and has since that time maintained a consistent christian walk.

Her friends sorrow, but not without hope, and the comforts of the gospel are their stay and staff in hours of darkness and distress. May they fully know these divine consolations.

Funeral services were conducted in Boston by H. L. Hastings, after which she was removed for burial to Wakefield, N. H., where a discourse was preached by Eld. Joseph Spinney, from Rev. 14: 13.

Scenes in and about Paris.

Paris, April 25. At an early hour to-day ports Bineau and Ternes presented extraordinary scenes. Carriages, ambulances, and all kinds of vehicles crowded with men, women and children, rich and poor, all clamorous to leave the horrible city. Only the persons possessing conveyances were allowed to leave, however. Some took up decent women, who wished to search for their relatives at Neuilly. There was great distress outside the gates. The sight was pitiable. Many of the Nationals were drunk; thousands of poor collecting remnants of furniture; ambulances seeking wounded; houses torn open by shells; railings and lamp-posts were ripped up; trees were cut off, and horses killed at the barricades, where, in spite of the armistice, the Nationals were working devastation horribly. At the point near the junction of Avenue Roull and Rue Orleans it was evident that nothing with life could have existed under such a storm of iron hail, and many were the impromptu places of shelter resorted to. There was a strange mixture of ruins and magnificent furniture.

The asylum for the aged and bed-ridden is full of wounded and every body is hurriedly placing the sick and young in vehicles and their goods in vans before the slaughter would recommence. On the Elysee crowds of persons were viewing the scenes of destruction or moving furniture.

The Ottoman Embassy is being dismantled. Many distinguished persons are present. By five o'clock 50,000 people had gathered at the ramparts waiting to see the first shot fired. St. Croix is all in ruins. In it I found a young man much emaciated, who had lived in a cellar three weeks. Last week the Nationals came to the place and demanded the plate and money and the following day the priests removed to the English Convent, the next door. On Friday last the Communists returned, visited the English Convent and demanded the priests. The Concierge attempted to save them, but those who could be found were seized and bound and taken to prison. The Nationals attempted to set the Convent on fire.

Versailles, April 26. The Prussians have ordered the arrest of the Cure of the Church of St. Denis. The cause is unknown.

Seven cannons in Fort Issy have been dismounted and Fort Montrouge is an utter wreck.

From China.

Shanghai, April 12, via London, April 26. Advices from Pekin state that the imperial Government has made a demand upon foreign ambassadors, that the schools for the education of females be abolished: that the teaching to the male subjects of the Empire of all doctrines opposed to those of Confucius be forbidden; that missionaries shall be considered Chinese subjects, and that the women shall not be permitted access to the empire in that capacity.

The Ambassadors are also notified that the attendance of women upon religious service was one of the reasons for the recent massacres of foreigners, and that though these events cannot but be deplored by the Imperial Government, compensation for their commission is absolutely refused.

Versailles, April 27. Thiers, in a speech to the Assembly to-day, tells the country that the situation is painful. French blood is still flowing, but it is consoling to know that the denouement is near. All are doing their duty, especially the army, to which he alludes in terms of high eulogy, which is, said Thiers, commanded by a Chevalier without fear and without reproach, who, completely unfettered in his actions, has now completed the investment of the works of Paris and commenced active operations. Fort Issy has been silenced and Les Moulineaux captured. We are not assailants: we are the defenders of law and order. We wish for conciliation, but we also wish to save liberty from despotism and from unbridled license. After eloquently defending republicanism and the Assembly, Thiers concluded as follows: "The insurgents are isolated and all France is with the Government and Assembly in our efforts to combine unity with liberty."

The Communists have been defeated at Les Bruyeri Deseveres and some of their officers captured.

Brussels, April 28. The Etoile publishes a report from Paris that four National Guards taken prisoners by the Versaillists having been shot, a proposal was made in the Commune to shoot the Archbishop of Paris in retaliation for the outrage, but it was rejected.

London, May 1. It is reported in Paris that the sister of Archbishop Darboy has been arrested and taken to the prison of St. Lazare.

The German troops have received an intimation that it is probable that they will remain in France two years.

The members of the Republican Alliance of the Departments held a meeting yesterday in the court yard of the Louvre, at which speeches were made and resolutions adopted denouncing the Versailles Government.

Versailles, May 1. The insurgent garrison at Issy this morning displayed a flag of truce and a party has been sent forward from the Government lines to convey the terms upon which the surrender of the fort will be accepted.

Garibaldi and La Commune.—In a letter dated at Caprera and addressed to the committee of the insurgent National Guard at Paris who had offered him the supreme command, Garibaldi gives unmistakeable evidence that his sympathies are with the Red Republicans. He recommends the committee to appoint some one to the chief command and give him absolute authority. "If you have the fortune," he writes, "to find a Washington, France will rise again in a short time from her ruins, greater than ever." He closes his letter by expressing a hope that an opportunity to fight by the side of the brave defenders of republican France will yet be accorded him.

DOMESTIC.

Ku-Kluxism in North Carolina.—The Herald publishes a letter from Raleigh, N. C., stating that Cleveland, Hornett, Chatham, Cumberland and Rutherford counties of that State recently had been the scene of several murders by the Ku-Klux. George Matthews, an aged negro, was dragged from his home and riddled with fifty-eight bullets. There is great excitement among the citizens.

☞ The Rome (Ga.) Chronicle publishes a rumor of a terrible tragedy in St. Clair County, Alabama. A band of disguised men broke into the house of the tax collector of that county, who was absent from home at the time, and demanded the amount of the taxes from his wife. She refused to give it up or tell where it was. After attempting in vain to force her to tell the hiding place of the treasure, they searched for it and found it. They then ordered her to get them some supper. While she was busying herself with this forced task, she conceived the idea of poisoning them, and thus preserving at once the money and her husband's honor. She deftly slipped some arsenic in the coffee she was mixing. They drank heartily, and fell dead shortly afterwards. She stripped the disguises off, and found that two of the villains were strangers, but the third was her husband, who had taken this means of stealing the taxes of the people.

Elder Miles Grant.—This preacher, of the Advent Christian faith, closed his mission labors in this city, Monday evening last, when he administered the Sacrament of the Holy Communion to a large circle of partakers, at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. A long table was spread in imitation of the Last Supper pattern of Christ; and the communicants sat around the board. Each communicant gave his or her "testimony," after the bread was broken and the wine poured out. The spectacle was very interesting and impressive. On the occasion of his final preaching service, Sunday evening last, at the Minna-street Church, fully two-thirds of the large audience present publicly testified to having received great enlightening and converting benefit from Elder Grant's ministrations in this city. The Elder came here last December, and, with brief intervals, has labored as a revivalist in our midst since that time. In this city he has been the publicly acknowledged means of converting or recalling from a backslidden state three hundred persons. A revival was started in Vallejo under his preaching, and great interest awakened in religious subjects by a short service—less than a week—at San Jose. The Elder has baptised fifty-five persons since his arrival on this coast; and has brought the Minna-street church from a struggling to a high and prosperous condition.

It ought to be said for the Elder, that notwithstanding he holds and has here advocated peculiar and what are termed unorthodox views, his advocacy in his sermons and in his public discussions has been so kind, so free from all bitterness, though firm and full, that he has won a host of personal friends from among the number of his listeners, who could not accept as true all the doctrines he proclaimed. Beecher once said that Rev. Dr. Chapin (Universalist) could do more with an old jack-knife—that was his comparison for the theology of his friend—than some ministers could do with a whole chest of tools. If the Elder is in great error as to man's nature and destiny, he is able to present to the people—and has been recently witnessed in this city—a bold contest for peculiar religious ideas, unblemished by a single sentence or any manner of asperity or vexation. Under the circumstances it is not remarkable that he should be a successful revivalist, although he neither charms with his rhetoric, nor thrills with his oratory.—San Francisco Bulletin, April 15th.

☞ A remarkable and very touching instance of death in the pulpit is given in a St. Louis paper. Rev. Benjamin Eaton, first and only rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, Galveston, Mo., was struck with death while standing in his pulpit. He was preaching from the text—"There is yet room." He had just pictured the time beyond this life with wonderful distinctness, as though he already spoke from within the veil. When he found himself sinking, he struggled to finish, as though realizing that it was his last work, and as he fell into the arms of those who gathered around him, he extended his hand as if in benediction, and said, "To God the Father," and never spoke again.

In Brief.

—— Nearly one half the residents of Chicago are of foreign birth, a larger percentage than is to be found in any city of any note in the country. ——The Chaplain of the Kansas State Prison is Mrs. Lydia Sexton, an old lady of seventy years. ——Twelve thousand dollars is what the vestry of Christ's Church, Fifth avenue, New York, have appropriated for music the coming year.——California crops are languishing under unusually severe and scorching winds.——Louis Napoleon is hard at work at Chiselhurst paying old debts.—— It is estimated that the number of women in the United States ordained to preach the gospel, is between seventy and eighty.——It is worthy of note that in just ten years after the beginning of the slaveholders' rebellion there should be five members of Congress of African descent.——At the noon meetings of the Young Men's Christian Association the large reading room in Tremont Temple is daily filled, and an earnest profitable season always characterize the hour. Many conversions have recently taken place. Only the other day a young lady widely known in New England as a popular and acceptable Spiritualist lecturer was convinced at one of these meetings of the error she was disseminating and announced her determination to abandon her old doctrines, and seek the truth as revealed by the Scriptures. She left the city the next morning to fulfil an engagement [illegible] great atheist.——A feature of peculiar interest in the Colored Representative, a paper published at Lexington, Ky., as an organ of the colored people, is the advertising by former slaves for their wives, their children or their friends from whom they were separated at the behests of the slave system before their emancipation. Many of the appeals for information of this kind are very touching, and serve to illustrate the peculiar wickedness of an institution now happily extinct.

Webster's Dictionary, Illustrated Edition.—In short, there is not an art or a science, in the whole range of arts and sciences, a knowledge of which may not be acquired here. But time and space both fail to tell of all the new and wonderful and valuable things to be found in this book. It should be one of the necessaries of life in every house. It is a library in itself, and contains the pith and the essence of all other books. With this and the Bible, we might go comfortably through the world, and find no great lack.—Independent.

Tent Meetings.

The time has almost come for the Mission Tent to be in the field, and the mission work to be vigorously prosecuted. The Mass. Conference intend to double their effort for the spread of Bible truth, hoping and expecting the brethren will help by their means and prayers. Let those who see a good opening, and desire a meeting in their neighborhood, write us of the prospects, and their desires, for we shall soon make arrangements for meetings. L. Boutell, For the Committee.

EXTRA SESSION.

As the executive board has been petitioned to call an extra session of the Maine Second Advent Christian Conference, to be holden in Portland, in Union Hall, on Free Street, and as there are several items of important business to be attended to; we therefore appoint to meet at Union Hall, Portland, Tuesday, June 13th, at two P. M. A full attendance of the ministers and delegates is desired. Remember, each church or society is entitled to one delegate, and one additional for every ten members, duly chosen and furnished with certificates. Come, brethren, praying that the Lord may direct us in all our work, and make the conference a blessing to his cause. Let all collections for the Maine Mission and Tent cause be reported at conference.

I. C. Wellcome, Sec.

Wisconsin Campmeeting.

This meeting is to be held at Prairie du Sac (Upper Sauk), Sauk Co., on the old camp-ground, beginning on the 4th of June. We hope to witness a large gathering of pilgrims. Come with tents, if possible. All coming by R. R. between Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien will stop at Mazomanie, and take stage ten miles to the meeting. Those coming over the R. R. between Milwaukee and La Crosse, can take a steamboat every other day at Portage City, or a stage daily at Kilbourn City, direct to the meeting. Particulars hereafter.

O. N. Knapp,
P. W. Matts, Committee.
Wm. Sheldon,

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The Wisconsin Conference will convene in connection with the State campmeeting at Prairie du Sac, and hold its first session on the 10th of June. Let the churches elect their delegates in time, and let all ministers who wish to unite come in season. Members and churches unable to attend, will please report by letter to the Secretary in season for the meeting. Wm. Sheldon, Secretary.

Conference.

The Conference for Southern Indiana will commence at Jeffersonville, Wednesday, May 24th, 1871. As we wish all the State to be included in the organization, it is desirable that there should be a full representation from all parts of the State. Let the churches, then, send delegates and provide for their traveling expenses. The church at Jeffersonville will make ample provision for all who may attend. N. Field, Pastor of the Church at Jeffersonville.

Barn Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting for the worship of God in the barn of M. V. B. Shattuck, near North Sutton, Sunday, May 7th. We hope the Lord will send along whom he will with the Word and Spirit. M. V. B. Shattuck.

Conference.

Forgotten Themes: or, Facts for Faith.—This work contains 112 pages, and consists of six lectures delivered by Eld. Geo. A. Brown, in the Temperance Room, Weymouth, England. They were reported by the writer. The titles of the Lectures are, (1) What is Truth? the Bible or Tradition? (2) The Nature of Man: is he Mortal or Immortal? (3) Immortality through Christ alone; and no Immortality promised to the Wicked. (4) The Doom of the Ungodly. (5) The New Birth. (6) The Kingdom of God upon Earth; and Christ, the King, to sit upon the throne of his father David. In addition to these Lectures, a small tract, "How to be saved." 25 cents a copy; by post 30 cents. Fifty copies for distribution for $10. Orders may be sent to Eld. W. Kellaway, Fairhaven, Mass. Any English work procured to order.

"The Mediatorial Kingdom, or Reign of Christ."—The above is the name of a work by Bro. W. N. Pile. I am pleased with the general tenor of the work. It can be read by all without having their minds particularly excited, if the young preacher does give occasionally the opinions of those who differ from him—some negative argument, which he certainly has a perfect right to do. Persons fond of expository literature will be benefited by its perusal. I am more and more a lover of the inspired maxim (1 Thess. 5: 21)—"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Will you do it?

This work is for sale by the author, Eld. W. N. Pile, Springfield, Mass., and at the Crisis Office. Price 25 cents. S. S. Brewer.

New Tract.

"The Harmonium," being an exposition of those passages of Scripture thought to teach the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and conclusively [illegible]

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

SPIRITUALISM UNVEILED.
WHAT IS MAN?
THE SOUL—WHAT IS IT?
THE SPIRIT—WHAT IS IT?
THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

SPEAK THOU THE TRUTH.

Speak thou the truth. Let others fence,
And trim their words for pay;
In pleasant sunshine of pretence
Let others bask their day.

Guard thou the fact; though clouds of night
Down on thy watch-tower stoop;
Though thou shouldst see thine heart's delight
Borne from thee by their swoop.

Face thou the wind. Though safer seem
In shelter to abide;
We were not made to sit and dream;
The safe must first be tried.

Where God hath set his thorns about,
Cry not, "The way is plain";
His path within for those without
Is paved with toil and pain.

One fragment of His blessed word
Into thy spirit burned,
Is better than the whole, half-heard,
And by thy interest turned.

Show thou the light. If conscience gleam,
Set not thy bushel down;
The smallest spark may send its beam
O'er hamlet, tower and town.

Woe, woe to him on safety bent,
Who creeps to age from youth,
Failing to grasp his life's intent,
Because he fears the truth.

Be true to every inmost thought,
And as thy thought, thy speech;
What thou hast not by suffering bought,
Presume thou not to teach.

Hold on, hold on—thou hast the rock,
Thy foes are on the sand;
The first world-tempest's ruthless shock
Scatters their shifting strand;

While each wild gust the mist shall clear,
We now see darkly through,
And justified at last appear
The true, in Him that's true.

LETTER FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

ELDER GRANT'S DEPARTURE.

A goodly number of the Elder's friends accompanied him yesterday morning across the Bay of San Francisco to the eastward bound train. Among the party was Bro. Bailey, the pastor of Minna St. church, Elder Grant's first friend in San Francisco. As they both stood on the deck of the ferry boat, I could not help noting the contrast between the two men. The Elder, you know, is rather below than above the average height, is somewhat spare in body, and inclined to be pale-faced. Bro. Bailey is the very opposite of all this; in person he is a six-footer, a broad-shouldered, large-framed, muscular and ruddy-faced man; in fact, the very impersonation of physical strength and power. He could if he chose handle the Elder with as much ease as a mother handles her baby. Indeed, if Elder Grant had ever felt that he had need of a protector in this far-off region, he could not have selected an abler friend than the esteemed pastor of Minna St. church.

Well, we all went across the bay to see the Elder off, and, considering how very early the hour was, we mustered well for the occasion. He was, I am sure, surprised to see us, and glad also; for among the number were some of his young converts, young people who felt it hard to part with him.

The Elder's last evening in San Francisco was spent in partaking of the Lord's Supper with those who were in sympathy and could sit with him at the same table. All christians were invited to join in the Communion in the large hall of the Y. M.'s Christian Association. This hall, large as it is, was not half large enough to accommodate all who came. The disappointment therefore was very great, as the Elder follows the primitive mode in administering this Sacrament. The occasion was to us as novel and interesting as it was solemn.

As soon as the services were over, the Elder was immediately surrounded by his friends to bid him farewell. The crowd was so dense it was impossible to get near him for some time. Such a rush to say good bye is seldom seen even in this excitable city; but it was a a pretty good indication of the hold the Elder has on the hearts of the people. It is quite evident that many of the people of San Francisco have reserved a warm corner in their hearts for Elder G.

I need scarcely say that his labors here have been greatly blessed; indeed, such a refreshing season of spiritual grace and power, as we have been favored with this year, was never known in California, and is unprecedented in the history of our city. To say that hundreds have been converted would not convey an adequate idea of the results of his mission; for his influence has been powerfully exerted and felt outside as well as inside of the christian community.

Many who have stood aloof from all christian influences have through him been brought to forsake their skepticism and embrace the truth as it is in Jesus; and others who were led away by the delusions of spiritualism have through his influence been brought again to reason and to the Bible.

Spiritualism has for many years been bold and defiant in this city and has led thousands astray; but since the Elder has unveiled the delusion, and shown the source from whence it springs, the eyes of the people have been opened, and the very name of spiritualism is becoming odious in our city. THE BARREN FIG-TREE.

F. M. CHAMBERLAIN.

We read of a certain man who had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard, "and he came and sought fruit thereon and found none." Year after year, for three years, he came seeking fruit, but found none. "Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, behold these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?"

What kind of fruit should be borne by those who profess to be God's people—"trees of the Lord"? Paul says "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." If all these are found, then the tree is good; for corrupt trees cannot bring forth good fruit, neither will a good tree yield evil fruit. But how is it with you, reader? Are you filled with "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost"? Isaiah tells us of a vineyard "in a very fruitful hill," in which everything had been done that could be done to cause it to yield good fruit, yet it brought forth only "wild grapes."

What kind of fruit do you bear? Wild grapes? Evil fruit? Some professors yield such fruit as envy, self-will, variance, wrath, strife, covetousness, hatred, pride, self-righteousness, hypocrisy. This is bitter fruit, and proves the tree to be evil. Can it be that men who have been blest with all the advantages of this age of Bibles, and Sabbath schools, christian education, evangelical preaching, and even all the light to be found among the most favored class of God's chosen people; can it be be that men so highly favored yet fail to yield good fruit?

Alas! that it should be so. Barren fig-trees, withered branches, "without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots." Not only here and there one solitary case, but whole societies, whole churches wither, droop and die, and become scattered and apparently lost. Is there no remedy for this? "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? Wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?"

"Still may this barren fig-tree stand,
And, cultivated by thy hand,
Verdure, and bloom, and fruit afford,
Meet tribute to its bounteous Lord."

DANIEL 9: 27.

BY "PILGRIM ON THE WATCH-TOWER."

"And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week."

This "one week," like the key to a lock, has been filed down and applied to various places and in various ways to the sealed prophecy of Daniel; but tradition and darling theories, also an earnest desire for the nearer coming of Christ, have stood in the way of applying it as Gabriel directed; therefore the bolts have been unmoved and the seal unbroken, until many have supposed that the 2300 days could afford us no further light upon the time of Christ's coming and the end of the age. But not so with all. After experimenting in every conceivable way without success, they have bowed like Daniel at the feet of Gabriel, listened more carefully to his instructions, applied the key as he directed, and the massive bolts roll back of their own accord; sight and understanding come rushing in upon their pathway, and joy and gladness fill their hearts.

In the text we find brought to view a covenant, and a confirmation of that covenant; also the time allotted for its confirmation, and a person to confirm it. A right understanding of Gabriel's instruction to Daniel must give us the desired information, as it did Daniel. And he said after this interview with Gabriel that he "had understanding of the vision," "but the time appointed was long." Dan. 10: 1.

Says Gabriel, "Understand the matter, and consider the vision." The "matter" to which Gabriel refers is the covenant made by God to that people, as recorded by Moses; and the confirming of that covenant would give the end of the time allotted them (seventy weeks), and make sure the vision and prophecy. And that there might not be a mistake about that "week," he says—"In the midst of 'the week' he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." Daniel had been praying about his people and the holy city, and confessing their transgressions in departing from God and breaking the covenant that God made with them at the hand of Moses. He says—"O Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant." Mark: it is the covenant that is in the mind of Daniel, and it is the covenant that Gabriel says shall be confirmed. And Daniel further designates this covenant by saying that it was written in the law of Moses. 9: 11. He makes it still plainer by acknowledging that the destruction of that city and people was involved in the breaking of that covenant. He also shows that to confirm that covenant would be to bring upon them the evil written in that covenant. Hear him—"We have sinned, and by departing from thy precepts" (or covenant, as he calls them in verse 4). In verse 10 he says—"Neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God to walk in his laws, which he set before us by his servants the prophets." "Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice. Therefore is the curse poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses. And he hath confirmed his words which he spake against us, ... by bringing upon us a great evil." Verses 10, 12. One of the curses or evils written in that covenant was the scattering of that people into other lands, or, as Daniel says in verse 7—"Through all the countries whither thou hast driven them, because of their trespasses that they have transgressed against thee." This driving them out of their land Daniel calls confirming his word or covenant. But greater evils were written in that covenant, even the destruction of that people and city; likewise the manner by which it should be accomplished.

A covenant is an agreement by which one binds himself to perform certain promises or conditions, or otherwise. This covenant to which Gabriel and Daniel refer is a covenant recorded in Deut. 28, in which God promises to bless them if obedient, and let great evils or curses come upon them if disobedient, even to the destruction of that people and city, which David feared was then to come upon them. We will turn to that covenant and read—"And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and do all his commandments that I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all the nations of the earth. And all these blessings . . . . shall overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field. Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground. . . . . Blessed shall be thy basket and store." They were to be blessed in going out and coming in; blessed with rain and with everything temporal here, if but obedient. "But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken . . . . to do all his commandments, ... cursed shall be the fruit of thy body," etc., etc. Turn and read. And in the thirty-sixth verse we have the evil of which Daniel spoke in his prayer as the confirming of his word in bringing upon them a "great evil." That was, by taking them from their land to Babylon in the days of Nebuchadnezzar, as he said: "The Lord shall bring thee, and the king which the Lord shall set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone."

This great evil of this covenant was confirmed in the days of Daniel, but they did not all bow to the image. There were "worthy" ones there that said—"We will not bow down." But other and sorer evils were to overtake them. "The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, ... a nation of fierce countenance." Verse 49. Just what Daniel had seen in vision, "a king of fierce countenance," who shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favor to the young. "And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst. . . . . And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and daughters, in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee. . . . . The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil towards her children; . . . . for she shall eat them for want of all things secretly in the siege and straitness wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in thy gates."

Here are some of the evils of that covenant to which Daniel referred, and had reason to suppose that all the evils denounced against them would overtake them; therefore he prays (Dan. 9: 16) that they might be turned away. "O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thy anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain." The dreadful curse that involved that city and people weighed heavily upon his mind, and he cries—"O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not, for thine own sake, O my God; for thy city and thy people are called by thy name." His cry had reached the throne, and Gabriel with swiftest flight is at his side. "Greatly beloved!" cries that holy messenger, "I am come to show thee. I am come to give thee skill and understanding; therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." Your people are not yet to be utterly overthrown. Your city must be builded. Messiah must come, and be cut off. "Then the people of the prince that shall come [in the covenant it reads, a nation of fierce countenance] shall destroy the city and sanctuary"; "he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." So "I am come to show thee" that "seventy weeks" are allotted, cut off, or "determined" upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish transgressions, to make an end of sin-offerings, to bring in everlasting righteousness, to seal up the vision, and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy.

The curse concerning Daniel's people and the holy city, written in the covenant of Moses, was the burden of Daniel's prayer; and the burden of the message which Gabriel brought was to show Daniel that seventy weeks were allotted to that people and that holy city. The city must be restored; Messiah the prince must come, and that people must finish up their transgressions by cutting him off. Then the king of "fierce" countenance would come and destroy them according to the covenant—"The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from afar to destroy thee." Gabriel says the prince of the people that shall come shall destroy the city and sanctuary. And "he [the prince that destroys the city and sanctuary] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." What remained of that covenant to be confirmed was to bring about that siege upon the city that should hem them in on every side; or, as the covenant reads, "besiege thee in all thy gates," bring down those mighty walls, cause parents to eat their own children, and cause their sacrifices and oblation to cease.

The Savior foresaw it. He does not pray like Daniel to have the Father "turn away the curse." The die was cast, and he bemoans their dreadful state and their soon-coming calamity. He knew about the covenant that his Father had made with them. He had seen them rejecting the prophets and the Son. He knew they would crucify him, and then it would be too late. He weeps, and in the anguish of his heart he says—"O that thou hadst known, even now at this time, the things that belong to thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes." "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Then he repeats the curse pronounced against them in the covenant of Moses—"For the days shall come upon thee that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and shall not leave thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." "The day-spring from on high hath visited us," was the exclamation of Zacharias. Luke 1: 78. But "because they knew him not, neither the voice of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him."

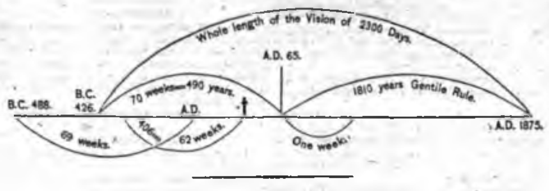
The allotted time runs out, and the army of Titus surrounds the city. That awful sword is seen in the heavens. There is that strange voice day and night from one whose voice never fails, crying, "Woe! woe! woe! to Jerusalem!" He is whipped, he is stoned, but his voice is still heard breaking upon the stillness of the night, and the dawn of the day—"Woe to Jerusalem!" There the heifer brings forth a lamb while being led to the altar, and there is that unearthly voice amid the silence of the temple saying—"Let us depart." A few are admonished by the voice of the Lamb of God —"When ye see Jerusalem encompassed by armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains, and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto; for these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written [in the covenant of Moses] may be fulfilled," or confirmed. A few fled, but with "many" the covenant was confirmed. The siege began, provisions were exhausted, every avenue was searched for food, but oft in vain. The soldiers who were driven to desperation at length smell savory food. They demand of the "delicate woman" to bring it forth. The platter appears. Its contents are uncovered, and there are the remains of the mother's own child, of which she had been eating. The soldiers retire, leaving the mother the sacred privilege of eating her own child, as Moses in the covenant had declared. Was not this confirming the covenant? Was it not brought about by Titus, the Roman prince? It was. And that is just what Gabriel said. "The princes of the people that shall come shall destroy the city and sanctuary. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." All this did Titus, and he caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the midst of that "seven years' war"; and no Jewish altars have smoked with the fat of lambs since. And when the Jews were asked why the sacrifice and oblation had ceased? the reply was—"There is nothing to sacrifice, and no one to offer it." How could we have been so misled? Titus did bring upon them the evils of that covenant, thereby confirming it. Titus did cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the midst of that confirmation week. Why not believe? The "seventy weeks," their allotted time, were up, and the dreadful week then and there began.

But what of the sixty-nine weeks, and the sixty-two weeks? They had their time and purpose, and the events predicted were accomplished. The sixty-nine weeks reach from "the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah the prince." So says Gabriel. The sixty-two weeks reach to the cutting off of the Messiah; for "after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." But the seventy weeks are allotted "thy people and thy holy city," and when that time runs out, their probation as a people had expired, and the "one week" begun.

If this be so, what is the sequel? It is this. As four hundred and ninety years, or seventy weeks, were cut off for that people, it follows that eighteen hundred and ten years only remain to bring us to the end; for "at the time appointed [says Gabriel] the end shall be." This event of besieging them occurring in A. D. 65 (according to Josephus), it follows that the remaining 1810 years will expire in 1875. Thus the allotted time for that people and that holy city being four hundred and ninety years, we can have only 1810 remaining to make to make up 2300.

The Savior does not direct his disciples to the commencement of the seventy weeks for information, but to their ending. He says—"When ye see Jerusalem encompassed by armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." The seventy weeks (says Gabriel) are to seal up the vision; i. e., make it sure; and I sit cheerfully and hopefully at his feet. My brethren, we are a covenant people. Our time of probation is ebbing. The Savior says—"Blessed is he that watcheth." May the Lord help us to "watch and be sober."

The following diagram will aid in simplifying the above, to which I invite your candid and prayerful attention:—



WHAT TO GIVE.

Under the above head the Golden Age says the following good things:—

"But we are very apt to imagine that the only thing worth giving, the only thing we have to give, is money or its equivalent in comfort or care; and we underrate the value of that personal notice, attention, and ministry which money cannot procure. When things go wrong with us, and we are prostrated with sadness and discouragement, it is not a present but a personal presence that we need, communicating stimulus and cheer from a sympathetic mind. In any of the troubles and crises of life, we value the companionship the counsel, the magnetic hopefulness, the enlivening and uplifting faith of friends, a thousand times more than any check they could give. We all set a far higher value on persons than on purses, and feel nothing more keenly than a slight. The man who cheats us we can forgive more easily than the man who cuts us. This is because we all instinctively feel that persons are the most precious property this planet carries, and know from our own experience what comfort and virtue, cheer and quickening, a kind heart and sympathetic mind can communicate.

And this fact indicates the character of the most useful and precious giving. Of course, the poor need money, medicine, food, clothes, and coal. They must have creature comforts or they will suffer, if they do not perish. No amount of philanthropic commonplace, no number of the platitudes of charity, can ever take the place of food in a hungry stomach, or of clothes upon naked or shivering limbs. Ejaculations of sympathy pay no rent bills. The poor and perishing classes want a gospel in acts,—a Testament whose texts are translated into loaves and fishes, fuel and flannel; and without that material beneficence, they must die. But they want more than this; they want personal notice, sympathy, counsel, and cheer, a hundred times more than any gifts we can bestow upon them, and without these the most generous gifts are unavailing. The chief reason that so much of our charity is wasted, if not worse; that the poor are confirmed in the very pauperism we would lift them out of, and in part by our own gifts; that wretchedness and want spread in spite of the growth of kind sentiments and the increase of charities is, that our gifts are so exclusively material. We have given things, but not thoughts. We have bestowed money, but have not given ourselves.

It is an easy matter to give a little unneeded money, a few cast-off clothes, or an order on the grocer; and many people give these in order to get rid of troublesome applicants. But to give personal attention, interest and direction to those in trouble and want, is a much harder thing to do. The difficulty with our modern charity is that it is so purely mechanical. Giver and receiver do not come into personal relations. There is no actual contact and communication between them. Their hearts do not touch each other. No virtue goes into the gift, and through that into the recipient's soul. We have the mechanics of charity without its mind. And what is wanted to make our charity blessed and a blessing, is just that personal quality we so crave for ourselves, but are so reluctant to bestow; that interest in, and sympathy for, and kindly direction of, the poor and unfortunate, which are a thousand times more valuable and precious to them than anything else possibly can be. It is not pleasant to lay down the book, or to rouse from the dreamy luxury of an evening tete-a-tete, and visit some unventilated attic or noisome cellar to look after those whose vices are as bad as their environments are repulsive; but there is all the more merit in the sacrifice, and the personal visit communicates a positive pleasure and moral force which no gift could convey; it throws a restraint around the wayward will, while it infuses needed cheer into the heart. A young woman of our acquaintance goes every day to rub the limbs of a poor old paralytic, whose loneliness is so relieved, and whose heart is so soothed and irradiated by such personal kindness that even her body shares the renewal. Who can tell the virtue there is in a sympathetic touch? Who knows what healing lies latent in the heart, waiting to be evoked by the call of the right occasion? The voice kindly with hope, melting with tenderness, tremulous with love,—who has fathomed its miraculous power? The magnetism of a kind, thoughtful, sympathetic personality,—who can describe or define it? It is these that the poor and sorrowing need more than any thing else. They want your mind more than your money. There is more help in a hand, with a warm heart beating in its palm, than in any goods that may be dropped at the door.—The greatest gift, and the best, is the giver of gifts. Almighty Love crowns all his other gifts with himself."

McCOSH ON MATERIALISM.

James McCosh, D. D. LL.D., President of Princeton College, has been delivering a course of lectures on "Natural Religion and Apologetics," at the Madison-square Presbyterian Church, New York City. The subject of his seventh lecture was "Materialism." Among other things he is reported to have said: "The tendency toward materialism in this country must be met." We are glad to learn that the doctrine of materialism is to be met. We hope it may be fairly met. Hitherto, its opponents have relied chiefly on misrepresentation and blackguardism. Materialism asks only a fair field and no favor. Its onward tendency cannot be checked by raising the mad dog cry of "heresy" and "infidelity." Let it stand or fall according as it is true or false. Prove it false and all good men will unite to oppose it. Establish it as a truth and all good men will sooner or later accept it as such. Whoever furnishes demonstrative proof either of the truthfulness or falsity of materialism performs thereby a valuable service in the cause of truth. Dr. McCosh treats the materialist as a "foeman worthy of his steel." He has for him no gibes, sneers, or contemptuous expressions. He is in evident good humor, for his allowances and admissions are of the most generous and sweeping kind. He says, by way of beginning, that "it may be allowed that there is a certain relation between mind and body." This is not a very bold assertion, but what is far better, it is an eminently safe one. No one will deny its truthfulness, or charge its author with extravagance in making it. We may take it for granted, then, that there is a certain relation between mind and body.

The question to be determined is, what is the relation between mind and body? Is the mind dependent upon the body, or is it not? Dr. McCosh's next "allowance" is rather more generous than his first one, and serves as an admirable proposition from which most important inferences may be fairly drawn. "It may be further allowed," says the President of Princeton College, "that there is a general correspondence between the size of the cerebral hemispheres and the powers of the intellect." Why this should be so if the mind or soul be a separate entity, and immaterial, the learned lecturer did not deign to inform us. If intellectual power be measured by volume of brain; if a large brain be the exponent of great mental power, and a small brain of little mental power, why may we not in the descending scale go a step further and say, no brain, no mind? If in this life the mind is entirely dependent upon an active brain for the manifestation of thought or intelligence, what reason have we for supposing that when the brain becomes inactive in death the mind will still exist with all its active powers unimpaired?

Near the close of his lecture, Dr. McCosh concedes the whole question in these words: "I am inclined to admit that without physical force distributed in the brain the mind will not work, as a water-mill will not run without water; and when this force is exhausted the mind is helpless for a time." This admission is as broad as the most zealous materialist could have hoped for. Without an active brain the mind is helpless. It cannot work without it. As the water-mill is useless without water, so is the mind helpless without an active brain.

We do not claim Dr. McCosh as a convert to materialism. But we think his immaterialism is almost as "gross" as our materialism, and quite as heterodox.—A. C. Quarterly.

Gems.

We must not hope to be mowers,
And to gather the ripe gold ears,
Until we have first been sowers,
And watered the furrows with tears.
It is not just as we take it—
This mystical world of ours!
Life's field will yield, as we make it,
A harvest of thorns or flowers!

— Let your promises be sincere, and within the compass of your ability.

— The time is short; if faith and patience hold out, we shall be placed forever out of the reach of sin and Satan and reign triumphant with Him who shall make our foes become our footstool.

— The crown of all real manliness, of all Christian manliness, is purity.

— It is pleasant to remember that by doing our best in our station, however humble it may be, we can each serve Jesus just as acceptably as those who occupy the most responsible positions.

— He who waits to do a great deal at once, will never do anything.

A sense of an earnest will,
To help the lowly living,
And a terrible heart-thrill,
If you have no power of giving;
An arm of aid to the weak,
A friendly hand to the friendless;
The world is wide, these things are small,
They may be nothing, but they are all.

— If thou bearest slight provocations with patience, it shall be imputed unto thee for wisdom; and if thou wipest them from thy remembrance, thy heart shall feel rest—thy mind shall not reproach thee.

— Doubtfulness and untruth are the daughters of ignorance.

— The troubles of life are like the sticks in a bundle of faggots. It is easy to take one at a time; but we choose to increase our trouble by carrying yesterday's stick over again to-day, and adding to-morrow's burden to our load before we are required to bear it.

— Who thinks before he does, thriveth before he thinks.

— It is too much for one good man to want.

DICE-THROWING MINISTERS.

WM. KELLAWAY.

The following extract from "Four Years in the Old World," by Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, will serve to show the corruptions which prevail in the present day preachers, and at the same time show what other devoted servants of Christ think of these things, besides also proving the words of the Book which says of professors in the "latter days," they shall be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

"While I write this, I have a subject pressing on my heart of which I hesitate to speak. I hesitate, because I do not wish either to be, or seem to be, uncharitable. Seeing the people so generally engaged in various kinds of games, we took pains to draw our dear W. from witnessing these scenes, which we have regarded as worse than vain. But he came to us repeatedly, saying, 'I saw Rev. Mr. ——, and also Rev. Mr. ——,' and so on, till he numbered four out of the five ministers on board, that he had seen engaged in playing at various games, such as chess, dice, etc.

Now, think how it would strike you to see a duly-accredited Congregational minister and a Baptist minister together at a game in the presence of a score of beholders! This moment, while I am writing, I hear a jocose laugh, and looking up see a minister whose name I will not mention, but one who is a well-known professor in the Union Theological Seminary of New York, playing a game, at which one of the party seems to have gained the better of the other, and therefore the merry laugh. I turn to the lady sitting near me, and ask,

'Do you know what game that minister and the other gentlemen are playing?'

'THEY ARE THROWING DICE,' is the reply. The same minister addressed us yesterday in the saloon. When I heard he was to officiate, I was really thankful, and said to Dr. P.,

'This is well for the cause; for he is the only one that has not been seen playing at games in the presence of the passengers.'

The Church of England service was read by the captain, and the responses by the surgeon, as on the preceding Sabbath; and it was currently reported that no other would be permitted. But the captain, on being asked whether Prof. ——, of the Theological Seminary, might not address the passengers after the Church of England service was over, consented, and said 'he had occasionally asked ministers of different persuasions to officiate, but they had generally pleaded ill health, and refused. [Would Paul have refused? or have been glad of the opportunity? Are elders to be apt to teach?] But,' he observed, 'their health did not discommode them in any other way, as they were generally ready for their meals, or any thing else, as usual.' . . . .

Prof. —— gave us a good address on Sabbath. As the company were dispersing we met the professor walking out on deck, and congratulated him in view of his having been called to officiate. As one reason why we were thankful that he had been chosen rather than either of the other ministers on board, we observed, 'That he alone of all the ministers had not been engaged in playing at various games.' The professor seemed embarrassed as we made these remarks, and said he had himself played games since he came on board.

We spoke of what we thought to be the injurious tendency of such games, leading to gambling of every species, and as concomitant with various vices, especially as connected with habits of intoxication. This latter view neither he nor any other of this ship's company could gainsay. Seldom does a company sit down to play, but in a short time the steward is called to bring a bottle of brandy, wine, porter, or something of the kind. These, of course, veto the wagers. The difference, I suppose, between ministers and others was, that there were no wagers in the case.

Said Prof. ——, 'That some of these games lead to gambling and dissipation, in various forms, must be admitted, but others I have been accustomed to regard as harmless; and it has been a question with me where the line of demarkation is.' He said he had been accustomed to fix the proscribed line with cards, as these were generally used in gambling. Perhaps he may have thought us puritanical, or too severe in our methods of thought; but I was free to acknowledge that we were Methodists, and said, 'If I were to see one of our ministers playing at games of dice, or any thing of the kind, I should actually be frightened.' We of course intimated that we could not conceive how ministers in their public or private capacity could, as ensamples to the flock, do it for the glory of God, and maintain a conscience void of offence toward God and man. Now, think of the text, 'Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God,' and then think of a minister of the New Testament holding a leading position in a theological institution for the training of young ministers, treading on ground allowed by himself, and by the religious community generally, to be at least so questionable! Can we wonder that the gospel has not more power when ministered under such training?"

Brethren, are not these faithful words of testimony from loyal hearts?

"This is for your Health."

LETTER FROM THE POET BRYANT.

We take the following interesting letter from the Herald of Health:—

NEW YORK, March 30, 1871.

To Joseph H. Richards, Esq.:—Dear Sir:—I promised, some time since, to give you some account of my habits of life, so far, at least, as regards diet, exercise, and occupation. I am not sure that it will be of any use to you, although the system which I have for many years observed seems to answer my purpose very well. I have reached a pretty advanced period of life, without the usual infirmities of old age, and with my strength, activity, and bodily faculties generally in pretty good preservation. How far this may be the effect of my way of life, adopted long ago, and steadily adhered to, is perhaps uncertain.

I rise early, at this time of the year about 5½; in summer, half an hour, or even an hour, earlier. Immediately, with very little incumbrance of clothing, I begin a series of exercises for the most part designed to expand the chest, and at the same time call into action all the muscles and articulations of the body. These are performed with dumb bells, the very lightest, covered with flannel; with a pole, a horizontal bar, and a light chair swung around my head. After a full hour, and sometimes more, passed in this manner, I bathe from head to foot. When at my place in the country, I sometimes shorten my exercises in the chamber, and, going out, occupy myself for half an hour or more in some work which requires brisk exercise. After my bath, if breakfast be not ready, I sit down to my studies until I am called.

My breakfast is a simple one—hominy and milk, or, in place of hominy, brown bread, or oat-meal or wheaten grits, and, in the season, baked sweet apples. Buckwheat cakes I do not decline, nor any other article of vegetable food, but animal food I never take at breakfast. Tea and coffee I never touch at any time. Sometimes I take a cup of chocolate, which has no narcotic effect, and agrees with me very well. At breakfast I often take fruit, either in its natural state or freshly stewed.

After breakfast I occupy myself for awhile with my studies, and then, when in town, I walk down to the office of the Evening Post, nearly three miles distant, and after about three hours return, always walking, whatever be the weather or the state of the streets. In the country I am engaged in my literary tasks, till a feeling of weariness drives me out into the open air, and I go upon my farm or into the garden, and prune the trees, or perform some other work about them which they need, and then go back to my books. I do not often drive out, preferring to walk.

In the country I dine early, and it is only at that meal that I take either meat or fish, and of these but a moderate quantity, making my dinner mostly of vegetables. At the meal which is called tea, I take only a little bread and butter, with fruit, if it be on the table. In town, where I dine later, I make but two meals a day. Fruit makes a considerable part of my diet, and I eat it at almost any hour of the day without inconvenience. My drink is water, yet I sometimes, though rarely, take a glass of wine. I am a natural Temperance man, finding myself rather confused than exhilarated by wine. I never meddle with tobacco, except to quarrel with its use. That I may rise early, I, of course, go to bed early: in town, as early as ten; in the country, somewhat earlier. For many years I have avoided in the evening every kind of literary occupation which tasks the faculties, such as composition, even to the writing of letters, for the reason that it excites the nervous system and prevents sound sleep.

My brother told me, not long since, that he had seen in a Chicago newspaper, and several other Western journals, a paragraph in which it was said that I am in the habit of taking quinine as a stimulant; that I have depended upon the excitement it produces in writing my verses, and that, in consequence of using it in that way, I had become as deaf as a post. As to my deafness, you know that to be false, and the rest of the story is equally so. I abominate all drugs and narcotics, and have always carefully avoided every thing which spurs nature to exertions which it would not otherwise make. Even with my food I do not take the usual condiments, such as pepper, and the like.

I am, sir, truly yours, W. C. BRYANT.

POPULAR ERRORS.—To think that the more a man eats the fatter and stronger he will become. To believe that the more hours children study the faster they will learn. To conclude that, if exercise is good, the more violent it is the more is done. To imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained. To act on the presumption that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in. To argue that whatever remedy causes one to feel immediately better is good for the system without regard to more ulterior effects. To eat without an appetite, or to continue to eat after it has been satisfied, merely to gratify the taste. To eat a hearty supper for the pleasure experienced during the brief time it is passing down the throat, at the expense of a whole night of disturbed sleep, and a night of weary waking in the morning.—Good Health.

SORE THROAT.—Everybody has a cure for this trouble, but simple remedies appear to be most effectual. Salt and water is used by many as a gargle, but a little alum and honey dissolved in sage tea, is better. Others, a few drops of camphor on loaf sugar, which often affords immediate relief. An application of cloths wrung out of hot water and applied to the neck, changed as often as it begins to cool, has the most potency in removing inflammation of anything.—Ex.

PILLOWS.—A lady says that the best pillows she ever saw were made of oat chaff. One particular advantage is in their use in time of sickness, especially in fevers, as they are much cooler than feathers.—Ex.

THE READY RECKONER.

"Father, do you remember that mother asked you for two dollars this morning?"

"Yes, my child; what of it?"

"Do you remember that mother didn't get the two dollars?"

"Yes. And I remember what little girls don't think about."

"What is that, father?"

"I remember that we are not rich. But you seem in a brown study. What is my daughter thinking about?"

"I was thinking how much one cigar costs.

"Why, it costs ten cents—not two dollars, by a long shot."

"But ten cents three times a day is thirty cents."

"That's as true as the multiplication-table."

"And there are seven days in the week."

"That's so, by the almanac."

"And seven times thirty cents are two hundred and ten cents."

"Hold on. I'll surrender. Here, take the two dollars to your mother, and tell her that I'll do without cigars for a week."

"Thank you, father; but if you would only say a year. It would save more than a hundred dollars. We would all have shoes and dresses, and mother a nice bonnet and lots of pretty things."

"Well, to make my little girl happy, I will say a year."

"Oh! that will be so nice? But wouldn't it be about as easy to say always? Then we would have the money every year, and your lips would be so much sweeter when you kiss us."—Everybody's Paper.

CHILD'S EVENING HYMN.

Lord, through the day now past and gone,
Thou hast watched over me;
Safe until another day shall dawn,
May I be kept by thee.

My food and clothes, my home and friends,
Thou dost on me bestow;
Be thou my guide until life ends,
My shield where'er I go.

And when the shades of night are past,
Refreshed, may I again
March boldly on till I at last
A crown of life obtain. —Telescope.

GOD KNOWS.

A little boy and girl, brother and sister, were playing in the dining-room, where their mother had set a basket of cakes on the tea-table, and then had gone out.

"How nice they look!" said Charlie, reaching out his hand to take one of the cakes.

"Oh! don't do that, Charlie," said his sister Jane; "you know mother told us not to take any of them."

"But mother didn't count them, and she won't know if I take just one," said Charlie.

"But remember, Charlie, that God counts," said his sister, "and He will know."

Charlie put back the cake, and turned away from the temptation, looking very serious. Presently he said: "You are right sister; God does count, for the Bible says: 'He telleth the number of the stars;' and 'The hairs of your head are all numbered.'"—Sunday School Paper.

BE GOOD, MY BOY.—"Be good, my boy," may seem a very short catechism; but let us add to it, "Be good, my boy, for God's sake," and we have in it very nearly the whole of the law and the prophets.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

WHO ARE THE CHARITABLE?

They, who bearing heavy burdens over life's most hilly road,
Strive to cheer a weaker brother bowed beneath a heavier load;
Who, with dear ones round about them, on whom plenty never smiled,
Yet can stretch their heart's affections round some tearful orphan child;
They, who hungry, feed the hungry in the moment of distress,
They, who having but a little, give to those who have still less;
They, who needy, yet can pity when they look on greater need;
These are Charity's disciples—these are Mercy's sons indeed.

They whose lips with gentle instinct ever watchfully restrain
Random jest, or keen allusion, that can give another pain;
They who yield their own fond wishes, even for a stranger's sake,
Well content, by self-denial, others' happiness to make;
They whose conscience bids them scruple o'er some deed they fain would do,
Asking if the work of pleasure be a work of duty too;
They who in the world's great market do as they would be done by,
These, and such as these, are children always true to Charity.

They who suffer wrong from others, rather than an other wrong,
Meeting all unkindness kindly, quite content to suffer long;
They who quickly own a trespass—promptly seek to make amends;
They who take without a murmur whatsoe'er a Father sends;
They who treat an erring brother as a brother none the less,
Ever ready with forgiveness, not disposed the weak to press,
Granting mercy as they hope to have it on themselves some day,
These are Charity's disciples, walking in the better way.

GENESIS.

O. R. FASSETT.

The book of Genesis has ever been regarded as written by Moses, and as a historic record of facts. It was so regarded and esteemed by the Jewish nation, and counted as one of their sacred books. In fact, the book of Genesis is the only reliable history of the earliest creation of things, and of the earliest periods of human existence. It is the foundation and beginning of all archæology and ancient history. "The book of Genesis has an interest and importance to which no other document of antiquity can pretend. If not absolutely the oldest book in the world, it is the oldest which lays any claim to being a trustworthy history. If the religious books of other nations make any pretensions to vie with it in antiquity, in all other respects they are immeasurably inferior. Genesis is neither like the Hindoo Vedas, a collection of hymns more or less sublime; nor like the Persian Zendeevesta, a philosophic speculation on the origin of all things; nor like the Chinese Yih-king, an unintelligible jumble, whose expositors could twist it from a cosmological essay into a standard treatise on ethical philosophy. It is a history—a religious history. . . . . From first to last it is a religious history. It is very important to bear in mind this religious aspect of the history if we would put ourselves in a position rightly to understand it."—Dictionary of Bible.

But never were there bolder or more determined efforts to destroy the character of this book, as either a divine revelation or reliable history, than in this age. And thus men seek to sap the very foundations; and "if the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

It is endeavored to be made out that Moses was not the author of this book, nor of the Pentateuch, and that they were not written until the days of Samuel and Daniel; or may have been the work of the time of Ezra, and perhaps from his pen. Says Mr. Sawyer—"The ascription of the Pentateuch to Moses is a Jewish fiction."—"Reconstruction Biblical Theories." Of the record of the creation (Genesis chap. 1) he says—"We can accept this as a fiction, and acknowledge a sublimity and beauty in it; as a narrative of facts, it is absurd and ridiculous. Eve's temptation is only a laudable stride after useful knowledge; and her eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, is her fortunate discovery of the cereal grains and luxuriant fruits by which man becomes perfect"! "Serpents being sufficiently intelligent to be tamed and domesticated, and to wait on a mistress like a dog, and take food from the hand, Eve perhaps had a pet of this kind on which she might have purposely tried the new food. The serpent satisfied her that the new food was harmless and beneficial; perhaps he grew fat upon it, and Eve added it to her stores, set it on her table, and ate it, and gave to her husband, and the serpent's augury was fully accomplished. The soul, as well as the body, thrives on it."

It is astonishingly marvelous in how many ways the devil gets men to teach his satanic lie; and even good men, we fear; and certainly intelligent men. For men of this stamp are not fools. When men rid themselves of the idea that there is no devil, they can well preach his doctrine, and "the doctrine of devils," as has Mr. Sawyer—"Satan is a night-shadow, and on being pushed to the wall may some day prove fictitious." He proceeds:—"The story of Cain killing his brother is a tale often repeated, and a tragedy often re-enacted. . . . It may be accounted one of the laws of the race, that the stronger branches shall destroy and absorb the weaker; and it is by this means that the advancement and increased elevation of the race are secured; it is a beneficent law."

Thus murder, which is condemned as a heinous crime, and even fratricide, is justified by this christian author. What will not men teach when they deny the divine origin of the Bible?

If the book of Genesis and the Pentateuch can be proved to be unauthentic, and not written under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, then the whole Bible falls with them! Moses as the author is referred to in Joshua, Psalms, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Malachi, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts, most of the Epistles, and book of Revelation. We see, therefore, the desperate effort of Satan, and men who act as his agents, to destroy "the foundations." With this attempt, the divinity of our Lord and Savior is impeached; for he gives sanction to Moses as the author of these sacred books; and sets his seal upon them as being a record of facts. (See the Evangelists.) He also says: "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Lk. 16:31.

We cannot yet give up Genesis, the first sacred book of the Bible, for we cannot give up the Bible itself. We shall believe the word of God, and revere the God of the Bible, till men give us better proofs that the Bible is a book of "fictions," and that there is no God in the universe wise and good enough to give his intelligent creatures a written revelation.

SOLEMNITIES.

WM. KELLAWAY.

To-night the sky is intensely dense, and flashes of lightning appear in almost every part of the horizon. They dart, and quiver, and disappear. Here is a flash, and another, and another. O how brilliant, how vivid, how terrible, this one. It lights up the whole neighborhood. To-night the ungodly tremble and shiver like the leaves of the forest when blown by a terrific wind. To-night the blood slackens its speed for a moment, and the heart thumps at the unexpected messengers of Jehovah. To-night there is pallor on the face, and a numbness in the limbs of the impenitent. To-night, my God! as thou drawest nigh, men are afraid. Confronted by thee, and warned by the tokens of thine existence and power, the rebel halts often in his way. We have often believed that there was a God. Thy works have told us so. The revelation of thyself in the gospel has further enlightened us as to thine existence. But now we know, for we feel that thou art. There is no need now to reason the fact with the sinner; he is most awfully sensible of the living God whom he has offended.

How do I feel to-night, in the midst of this scene of terrible grandeur? Well, I feel the preciousness of Jesus. I feel all is well. I must own that my nature sympathizes with the disturbed atmosphere. I am charged with the electricity; but I have to-night Jesus. O, he has not forsaken me now. I am on the Rock of Ages. I am in the Ark of safety. I am sheltered in God's best City of Refuge. I am hid in God. Christ is my friend. My faith desires him near; my heart expects him near; he is near. Then if the flash comes, I am forgiven. If I should be a scorched balck in a moment hence, Christ will save me in the great day. For I am shielded by the blood. O that blood on my conscience by faith! Better far than the blood on the lintels and door-posts of the Israelites in Egypt. Even that saved from the stroke of the destroying angel; but this saves even more—to the uttermost. Precious blood of Christ! I am lighted inside this moment as the physical world is thrown into view. I have been a sinner in the past. Yes, and against the majestic God, who controls the air and its elements. They damn me. They destroy me. God is impartial. God is terrible in his justice. But I repented. I flew to the mercy-seat. My sins were forgiven. But since then I have sinned. Yes, but yesterday I came back to the Father again. I told him I had gone far, far away. I told him my heaviness on account of sin. I rested on the promises which told me he pardoned me. I found the joy of forgiveness again. I tasted again the good word of life. Will I not trust him now in danger? I will. God is love. He is my Father! O how infinitesimally little am I to be his child!

But I look onward. A day comes to-morrow. Tick—the last moment of probation is gone. The skein is wound up. The tale of sin is finished. The history of the world is closed. See! Now for lightnings. What is to-night to that day? The elements are melting with fervent heat. O the action going on above. I see a world beneath them. What spectacles I behold! O despair, despair, despair! O cries unutterably full of sorrow! "The mighty man shall cry there bitterly." 'Tis come. The great and terrible day is come. "The great day of His wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" Realities now. Prophecy is history to-day. No more proclaimed, it is here—"Day of judgment, day of wonders."

Reader! you are there in a brief time. I would have you saved from meeting that day with no rest for the sole of your feet. I would save you with fear. "Knowing therefore the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men." Come to Jesus and rest. Trust God, believe in Christ; obey him, and you will stand then. Christ will know and save you then. Jesus bids you come and find peace in him. Come and put him on. "Let the same mind be in you as was in Christ." And we will stand if all the rest of the world perishes. But delay not—delay not—delay not. I feel intensely in earnest with you. I am not overwrought. With that day so near, and its coming so certain; with the knowledge that it may "overtake" you at any moment, and the immense interest you have at stake; with the thought that God is "ready to pardon" to-day, can you linger or refuse to heed my God-sent appeal to you to at once repent, and be converted? You will die if you do not come. What will you do in the solemn day? Lord, I wish thee to draw the reader to thee to-day. Amen.

A CHRISTIAN.

C. MENDENHALL.

A christian has something within him that is unseen by the world, and unknown to the moralist. He has a fountain of life, a well of living waters, a spirit to help his weaknesses, and a constant Comforter to cheer him when trials compass him about, and to console him when met by afflictions and disappointments.

This inward hope and faith makes the weak strong, and the timid bold for the cause of Him upon whom we rest all our anticipations. Though we are told that they who serve the Lord must suffer persecution and see many sorrows, we can rejoice always, knowing that He doeth all things well, and works for the good of those he loves. He has given to his followers a deep, settled peace, which cannot be destroyed by anything the world, the flesh, or the devil, may bring to disturb or uproot it.

Is it not, then, indeed blessed to follow Jesus, to love him above all things, and to keep his commandments? Through the Holy Bible we have learned that he is the Son of God, and that his atonement was for our benefit; yea, for all who accept it he offers in mercy salvation, cleansing us from all condemnation, for "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." The inspired writer says (Rom. 10:9)—"That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." How plain, yet how beautiful is the plan of salvation; it is by grace through faith we are saved; from this faith good works naturally spring, giving us the two great essentials which procure a "title clear" to our inheritance. A christian is nothing and can do nothing of himself; all depends upon the Fountain Head, which is Christ.

God in his infinite wisdom has so constituted and circumstanced mankind that no one has a purely separate existence; no one can be independent; we all depend on others, directly or indirectly, for all we have, and nothing is received without the knowledge of Him who holds the waters in his hand. So it is with the christian; his whole being must be swallowed up—so to speak—in Christ; he must be entirely covered with Jesus' righteousness, losing his individuality as a citizen of this world, striving to be pure, even as He is pure, who, though tempted in all points as we are, knew no sin.

Let us then strive on, brethren, being faithful and earnest, then we shall be raised up in the last day to inherit life eternal. Sinner! will you not turn to Him who gives the victory over death, and be found with those who at the last trump shall be clothed with immortality? We are surely in the last days of this universe; now is the time to be in readiness to welcome the King of kings, and then you shall become one of his joint-heirs, inheriting the land which has been prepared from the foundation of the world.

"No more shall sin and sorrow grow,
Nor thorns infest the ground;
He comes to make his blessings flow
Far as the curse is found."

REST.

J. W. THOMAS.

"There remaineth a rest to the people of God."

In the connection from which this text is taken, three "rests" are brought to view. Past, present, and future. The past refers to the rest of Canaan, which was held forth as the hope of ancient Israel. A land flowing with milk and honey was to be their possession when the conflicts and weariness of the wilderness were past. But of all the multitude which came out of Egypt only two (except the little ones who grew up during the forty years wanderings) were permitted to enter the promised land. To whom aware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them who believed not? Caleb and Joshua had "another spirit," and followed God fully; and as the result of their faithfulness they were permitted to roam the vine-clad hills, and feast upon the delicious fruits of Palestine. All this is worthy of serious meditation. Let us fear lest we come short.

The present rest is embraced in these words—"We which have believed, do enter into rest." It is the rest of faith. All true believers know something about it by experience. In the midst of conflicts, tumults, toils and sorrows, there is blessed rest. Rest in Jesus. As Noah's dove could find no rest for the sole of her foot until she returned to the ark, so our wandering thoughts can find no rest until they centre in Jesus the Lamb of God. He is the only and true resting place. "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Storms and tempests may rage without, but within there is solid rest and abiding peace. "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace." This rest and peace is the "earnest" and "foretaste" of that which is to come. How few there are who live up to their privilege in this respect. They fret and worry, and know but little about calmly resting in Jesus.

The third is the future rest. "There remaineth a rest." The scene of this rest will be the kingdom of God. The earth will be at rest. Now it is rent and torn, tossed and shattered with volcanoes and earthquakes; tornadoes make bare its forests and desolate its most beautiful fields. The effects of the curse are visibly manifest, and the whole creation groans and travails in pain for deliverance. But then it will be free from the curse, with all its blighting, withering effects. There will be no internal eruptions or external disturbances to deform its loveliness, or mar its beauty. The great Peacemaker will lift his voice and say, Peace, be still, and the world's tumultuousness shall be hushed in an eternal calm. God shall make the place of his feet glorious, and there shall be nothing to hurt nor destroy in all his holy mountain. In this new world, beautiful and lovely as the presence and glory of God can make it, the saints will find the rest that remaineth. It will be a rest from sorrow, rest from conflict, rest from labor, rest from pilgrimage, rest from sickness, rest from death, rest with Jesus, rest with angels, rest with loved ones, rest in glory, rest forever.

O, how desirable is the rest that remaineth! In this world there is no permanent rest. All is confusion and unrest. A voice from the sick bed, from the grave, and from broken and bleeding hearts, continually sounds in our ears,—"Arise ye, and depart, for this is not your rest." Over yonder there will be no sin, no temptation, no pain, no grief, no separation. This mortal shall put on immortality, and death shall be swallowed up in everlasting victory. He who sitteth on the throne will make all things new, and years, centuries, and ages shall roll on and on, still all will be rest and tranquility. Let us labor to enter into that rest. Weary, wayworn pilgrim, cheer up. We are almost there. Soon we shall rest at home.

PRESS ONWARD.

L. M. PROCTOR.

Press onward, christian, onward; why halt ye on the way?
Again a new foundation from out dead works to lay,
The doctrine of baptism the rising from the dead?
Press onward, christian, onward, the prize is yet ahead.

Add to your faith much virtue, and knowledge broad and deep;
A perfect understanding of the word that thou must keep;
A learning of the Master and of the heavenly way,
Your watchword, christian's, onward! heed not the call to stay.

Press onward, christian, onward; be temperate in each thing.
Excess in any matter a sad reward will bring;
But patiently continue in each good work and word,
Thus by a life of godliness do honor to thy Lord.

Have for each weak disciple a brotherly true care,
With unfeigned love and kindness all burdens help to bear;
Even a cup of water in Jesus' name when given,
By our Father's not forgotten, but is registered in heaven.

Press onward, christian, onward; add yet one other grace,
Completing all thy virtues, a bond of perfectness,—
The golden chain of charity, binding the whole in one
Divinest ornament, a polished, lively stone;

And set within the building, with other precious gems,
Will form a glorious temple, on which God's love descends,—
A holy, royal priesthood to offer to our God,
Spiritual sacrifices through Jesus Christ our Lord.

THE PRAYER MEETING.

"I could not get through the week without the prayer meeting," said a professional man to us a few days since. "Why, then, we replied, "do we not hear from you oftener?" "Because," he rejoined, "there is no time. I cannot bear the thought of robbing some humble brother of the opportunity of adding his testimony to the power of an experimental and practical faith."

His words gave rise to a train of thoughts, interesting, at least, to us; they may be of some utility to others who love to gather around the mercy seat.

May it not be that his experience is the experience of many who are seldom heard in prayer or exhortation? Call it what you please, modesty, timidity, or a benevolent purpose to give others the opportunity to contribute to the interest of the meeting—many manifestly are silent who might add very materially to the enjoyment of the best hour of social pleasure which the week affords.

Is it not possible that some upon whom the meeting seems to depend, take up too much of the time? Why should so many who speak feel called upon to pray? Are not an address and a prayer more than one's share? Besides, the prayers are, in a majority of cases, too long. If one cannot get to the end naturally or easily, or rhetorically, let him cut it off, and giving the usual ascription, pronounce the "Amen." Five minutes is too long for most men to pray when others are hearing. It is impossible to ask for everything in one petition. Let some one burden of the soul find its expression, and that may suffice for that meeting. We can afford to take the rest of the load to the closet. And then, when one feels more like speaking to the brethren than addressing the throne of grace, he should remember that there are at least a dozen, if not twenty, who have a similar offering, whether richer or poorer than theirs, is known only to the Master. In five minutes, a man in earnest, can give the best item of experience the week has afforded him, besides speaking words of encouragement which will surely reach some one present.

It should be remembered that the prayer meeting belongs especially to the membership. The pastor knows he will grow the richer in materials if the time is almost entirely consumed by his brethren. All he need do is to give the signal and push from the landing. That is a selfish church indeed which will exact formal and lengthy exercises from a pastor at a meeting where he as well as others come for refreshment, not labor. Many years ago we heard a pastor say that the materials of his richest sermons were gathered up at his covenant meetings.

The greatest drawback to a prayer and conference meeting is the notion that a few must carry it on, and that a certain rut of formality and sanctified decorum must characterize it. In no other assemblage of persons is there so much stiffness—in no other should there be less, for we come by a freedom there which was purchased by the blood of Christ, and we meet on a plane where no one is our superior, and we become cognizant of a kinship which will last forever, and we can speak, a common language whose sentiments are felt alone by those who have been in the company of Jesus. Child language, brotherly sentiments, spontaneous utterances, fresh heart out-gushings—these, with songs and hymns suggested by the occasion, and prayers which, by their transparent sincerity, will unite all hearts, make the chapel the very gate of heaven. Here is one of the features of a pure religion—a feature which tests the genuineness of religion, and furnishes a striking contrast with the show and glitter of a priestly system. Let us make the most of the prayer meeting.—Central Baptist.

TRUSTING IN THE LORD.

J. E. WHIPPLE.

God has always had a watchful care over his people; even in the minutest affairs of their temporal, as well as their spiritual life, his guiding hand has led them, and in some instances their deliverance has been almost miraculous.

We recently met with a christian lady, who related to us the following incident in her experience, which has greatly strengthened our faith, and has proved that God is a prayer-answering God.

A relative of hers died, leaving in her possession a sum of money, to be used for a certain purpose, and to be paid at a specified time. Before the time expired for the payment to be made, an object of charity was made known to her, which she was very anxious to relieve; but having no money of her own, and not knowing where to procure it, she felt with a saddened heart she must refuse; but it came to mind that God's storehouse is always full, and the golden key of prayer was able to unlock the door; and having made it a rule to make all her wants known to Him who "seeth in secret,' she accordingly withdrew to her place of secret prayer (the old garret), and there falling upon her knees before God, relieved her burdened heart.

While praying she remembered the money which had been left in her care, and it occurred to her to use a portion of it, and before the time for the money to be paid, she could replace it; and feeling it was from the Lord, she took the money and relieved the person in distress, and her mind of a great burden.

As the time drew near for the payment to be made, she had not replaced one cent, and she began to fear that she would not be able to make out the sum; but she remembered she used the money in answer to prayer, and the same God was able to help her again. So she retired to the garret, and again poured out her soul to God. When she arose from her knees, her mind was free from all anxiety regarding the money, feeling that God would in some way relieve her if she would only trust him.

A short time afterwards she received a letter "from a friend," containing ten dollars, which she joyfully acknowledged as coming from the Lord; and she felt she could safely trust him for the remainder. In a day or two before the time expired, some one gave her three dollars to buy her a new dress—just the sum she needed to make out the required amount; and when the time arrived she paid the money; but, added she, "I did not go without my new dress. In a few days afterwards my daughter came in with a bundle in her hand, and said, 'Here is a present for you, mother. I thought you needed a new dress, and so I bought one for you.' Praise God! he does not forget the little ones who put their trust in him."

We thought as she concluded, surely there is a God in Israel, and blessed are they who have put their trust in him; for he has promised never to leave nor forsake them; but is a very present help in time of trouble.

SEEK THAT YE MAY EXCEL.

"Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church."

This injunction brings before us the building of the temple at Jerusalem. We see young and old working with busy hands and earnest hearts,—all Israel interested.

Before the death of their beloved king David, the people had gladdened his heart, "because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord" of their treasures of gold, silver, and precious stones. Having consecrated themselves to the service, they went on with the erection of the temple, and rejoiced as it rose in beauty and unrivaled splendor before them.

Other nations had built pyramids, temples, and wondrous works of art, but had not the motive that inspired the myriads of workers in Judea. Israel built for God, the Lord of heaven and earth, who had promised—"I will dwell among you."

When reading the scriptural account of the temple-building and the dedication, one is prompted for a moment to wish he might have been a fellow-laborer in the work; that he had been within the temple praising God when as a cloud the "glory of the Lord filled the house."

Let us not forget that for us is reserved a greater honor. We may "excel to the edifying of the church," the spiritual temple of our God. Apostles, martyrs, prophets, have finished their course. Our day of labor is come. What have we to do? Most of us are so weak and poor spiritually, and withal so ignorant, what can we do? Let us consecrate ourselves to God with an honest heart and willing mind. Let us believe that he receives us in Jesus, whose blood can purge the conscience from dead works to serve the living God. Let us trust Jesus to raise up, by his life-giving word, the buried talents of our soul. Then, losing no time in regrets for the past, or bewailing our want of power, "let us do good to all."

Look about us; there is plenty of work for willing hands. Enter our Sunday Schools; there are goodly stones there,—infant and youthful minds to be taught the way of holiness. Many of them are already deeply imbued with the follies and sins of the world, and Zion mourns as she sees her jewels in the hand of the wicked one. Can we not do something in God's strength to wrest them from the enemy? Go to our social means of grace, specially where all may work as the Spirit impels them. The object of these gatherings is to "call upon his name, and make known his doings among the people." Have we done our part in this work, or have we only enjoyed, and perhaps in some instances only criticised?

Let us not excuse ourselves by pleading, "We have no talent for speaking or praying publicly." God commands, "Seek that ye may excel." He promises, "To him that hath shall be given." He threatens, "To him that hath not from him shall be taken away even that which he hath."

If we give ourselves to the work, God will supply the power, and we shall find many other ways besides those alluded to, in which we may help to build Zion. As the reward and result of our labors, it may be ours to see the glory of the Lord fill many human hearts with peace and purity. Even though we may not behold the end for which we have labored, we may hope to hear, "Well done, it was in thine heart to build." . . . . .

Let us, in view of God's faithfulness, seek that we may excel, to the edifying of the church, remembering the promise—"If any purge himself from these [sins], he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work."—Guide to Holiness.

ORTHODOXY against ORTHODOXY.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Nearly all the creeds and formulas of modern sects claimed by themselves to be "orthodox," describe their God to be an unorganic, impersonal being, "without body or parts." Theologians also are very eloquent at times in so representing him, and very bold in denouncing as "heresy" the doctrine of there being a "personal God."

But it has come to pass that orthodoxy, having exhausted every other source of supply for evidence of the immortality of the soul, and failing to prove it, one of the "doctors" has ventured to use one of the "literalist's" fundamental truths to sustain the heathen dogma, and by inferential analogy, dogmatically asserts that the soul is immortal. Hear him. Ebenezer Dodge, D. D., President of Madison University, in a work entitled "The evidences of Christianity," says on the "existence of God,"—

"Now the power on which we depend, and the authority to which we owe our allegiance, and the goal for which we strive, can find their sympathies only in a living personal God." To this we can heartily say Amen. It is well said. But on the "immortality of the soul" he says again,—

"If God is personal, the soul is immortal. These two truths mutually support each other. If God is distinct from the cosmos, the soul is distinct from any physical organism."

Thus the doctor declares that the "power on which we depend," and "to which we owe our allegiance," "and the goal for which we strive, can find their sympathies only in a living personal God." He next seeks to impress the idea, without an atom of proof, that therefore man's soul is immortal (if God is personal.)

But this claim for a personal God being an intrusion on orthodoxy, the Dr. treads back; and in a chapter on the "soul," he says,—"Possibly the Supreme Being alone is without any organism whatever."

Is such "evidence" in support of Christianity? We think not. First, "All the power and authority on which we depend, and to which we owe our allegiance," and in which to find sympathy "is a living personal God."

Second. The doctrine of the immortality of the soul rests on God's personality.

Third. God is possibly the only being without any personality. Thus the Dr.'s hetrodoxy proves to him the soul's immortality. But when he assumes orthodoxy, he destroys the dogma of immortality, and becomes infidel in denying that there is any "power" or "authority on which to depend" or "to which we owe allegiance."

But the Dr. goes further, and seems determined to use the dogma which orthodoxy calls heterodoxy. He again says,—"If there is no personal God, then there is no place for the individual life of the soul after death. A full belief in either of these truths insures complete conviction of the other."

But the Dr. claims that the Supreme Being has no organism, consequently no personality; therefore "there is no place for the individual life of the soul after death." Thus to be orthodox on the impersonality of God, he must hold to the annihilation of the soul of man at death. This is orthodoxy against orthodoxy. But the Dr. fears these syllogisms (?) are not sound, and do not sustain the dogma; he therefore makes another case for it, as follows,—

"The doctrine of the immortality of the soul may be more distinctly grounded on the following considerations:" "First, on the expectation of a future life. This is found everywhere. It has imbedded itself in the mythologies of the old world, and wrought itself into the superstitions of ancient and modern times. It emerges in the oriental dogma of transmigration of souls, and it comes before us in an integral part of the old platonic philosophy. It is now the inheritance of the ages."

Here, then, we have the dogma more distinctly proved than on the personality of God. Is this the best orthodoxy can do? If so, we had better turn to Christ and find how "life and immortality are brought to light in the gospel." But the Dr. feels the mist of the darkness of orthodoxy on this whole subject, and tries hard to open some window for a gleam of light, and thus he strikes another blow on the creed. "A man may give a false direction to the dominant thought of his mind, and, holding to the impersonality of God, he must make his future life equally unconscious."

All this he has done, and therefore "makes his future life unconscious," if his logic is good. But once more. He says,—

"The soul is godlike in its character, and so endless in its life. Without this belief, martyrdom would be extreme folly. If, then, this belief be general, and be the mark of true manhood, it must be natural and so legitimate." . . . "The soul, then, may not share in the fortunes of its present organism, for it does not seem to be identical with it. It may under different conditions form another organism quite different from the one which it now inhabits. It may be under the necessity of using some medium of communication with the universe suited to its altered surroundings." This last remark assumes the soul intangible and unorganized itself, and needing an organism to enable it to communicate. It also rejects the promise of "a body fashioned like Christ's glorious body."

But all this reasoning is without one test of Scripture. "To the law and to the testimony" let us go for light and truth.

WHY?

N. D. BABCOCK.

Why must Christ die in preference to all else? Man in the beginning was made upright, and held a high position, being made in the image of his Creator, and ruler over all the earth. But he disobeyed, fell, lost his high position; and all things else fell with man.

Now who shall bring man, the earth, and all things, back to their original purity? Could the blood of animals? No, for the curse rested upon all living creatures like the earth. We must have something pure and holy. Shall man's good works restore him back again? shall riches? shall honor? Nay, verily, man with all his riches, honors, and ingenuity, would never have dreamed the way back again. Then who but the Son of God could say—"I am the way"—"Follow me"—"There is no other way under heaven given among men"? I see a few follow him to the mountain, to whom he said, Are you tried and tempted? I shall be tried and tempted. And as I overcame, so may you. I will show you the way to be peacemakers; to be merciful; to be pure in heart; for you must be, if you ever see my Father in peace. Does the world hate you? It hated me before it did you. You must not lie, swear, or commit adultery. You must not fight, nor hate your enemies, but do good to all; and, "Be ye perfect, even as my Father in heaven is perfect."

What a strait path. Can we ever travel it back from where we fell? Follow me. I will show you the way. Many of us are poor and despised, have no place we can call our own. Neither have I, but follow me, and as I overcame, ye shall have grace to overcome. Man is subject to death, and must go down into the silent grave. I will go there too, and show you the way, if you will follow me. Like a lamb led to the slaughter, without a murmur, you can go. I will come up again, and you may have this hope that you too may come again from the dead.

Who first of all could have endured all these things without a murmur, and by his grace shown us the way but the Son of God? How important that we follow Him who is the only true way.

"I will follow thee, my Savior, Wheresoe'er my lot may be."

CREDIBILITY OF THE WITNESSES OF CHRIST.

The credibility of a witness depends upon two things, 1st., the truthfulness of the witness." 2nd, the opportunities he has for knowing, with absolute certainty, the facts concerning which he testifies. Of two witnesses, equally truthful, the more weight must always be given to the testimony of him whose opportunities for knowing the things affirmed were the better.

If the interest of a witness coincides with his testimony, that is, if his own well-being or the well-being of a friend, or if any temporal good or favor comes to a man in consequence of the things concerning which he testifies, being as he says they are, it casts a shade of suspicion over the testimony of the truest man. If on the other hand his testimony runs counter to his own interests, if it brings evil, reproach, disgrace on him, it makes sure the testimony of the worst man.

Now the testimony of the apostles was concerning facts, about which it was hardly possible to be mistaken. It was in reference to the identity of Jesus. Was he whom they saw after the death of Jesus, the veritable one who had been nailed to the cross, whom they saw expire and who was buried in the grave? In an interval of only three days he appeared. They handle him, scrutinize closely his person from day to day, and week to week. They feel of the nail prints in his hands, they thrust their hands into his pierced side. They cannot doubt. They cannot be mistaken. He is the same.

Are their interests promoted by their testimony? On the other hand, it brings poverty, disgrace, persecution, death in its most repulsive forms. No man can believe they intentionally testified falsely. Not a single motive could prompt them so to do. On the other hand every temporal, earthly interest drew them to testify in the opposite direction. No honest man can believe the apostles intentionally testified falsely—when the testimony brought on them such terrible consequences. No man can believe twelve men knowing Jesus as they did could be mistaken as to his identity after a separation of only three days.—Gospel Advocate.

☞ Do not be troubled because you have no great virtues. God made a million spires of grass where he made one tree. The earth is fringed and carpeted, not with forests, but with grasses. Only have enough of little virtues and common fidelities, and you need not mourn because you are neither a hero nor a saint.

END OF THE 1000 YEARS.

We have followed the current of events, as laid down in the Scriptures, till we arrived at the period when we found the saints reigning "with Christ" "on the earth," during the period intervening between the first and second resurrections. During that period Satan will be bound, and the wicked dead remain in their graves. The earth, outside of the cleansed sanctuary, will enjoy her Sabbaths while the saints are reigning with Christ in the renewed paradise. But "when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." Rev. 20: 7-9.

From the foregoing Scripture it appears evident that, when Satan is loosed, at the end of the one thousand years, the wicked dead will be raised, at the same time and be deceived by their arch leader, being made to believe that they can go up and take "the camp of the saints," and then have paradise for their own use. With this object in view, they will rally for the conflict, when fire will "come down from God out of heaven" and devour them. Then all the wicked will be burnt up in the gehenna fire, and be no more forever. That will be the burning day described by Peter in his second letter, when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." 2 Pet. 1: 10. When the wicked shall be burnt up, the saints in the sanctuary will remain unharmed, as did Jerusalem when Sodom and the other cities of the plain were destroyed by fire and brimstone. Abraham beheld the smoke rising from those burning cities, but he remained uninjured; thus it will be when the great gehenna fire shall devour the wicken.

When the fire shall have done its work in destroying the wicked, and purifying the earth outside of the sanctuary, then this planet will have been restored to its original condition, as it was when first possessed by Eden's happy pair. Then sin will be "finished," the works of the devil destroyed, and the saints will take the kingdom and dominion "under the whole heaven." Then the Savior will have completed his work, and the time will have come for him to deliver "up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power" (1 Cor. 15; 24); and will himself become "subject" to the Father, "that God may be all in all." 1 Cor. 15: 28. From that time forth, "for ever and ever" (Dan. 7: 18), the whole earth will be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea.

How blessed to live then. How glorious the thought that those living then will never die. No pang of pain or sorrow will ever shade their perfect bliss. Friendships there will be eternal. Hatred, variance, evil-speaking, backbiting, envy, jealousy, and every thing evil will be forever unknown. This seems too good to be true; but it is what God has promised; and his word is true. Dear reader, let us live so that we can meet in that beautiful land, where peace and joy shall be ever abounding.

SALT LAKE CITY.

We are now (April 20th) at Salt Lake City, where we arrived at 10 o'clock A. M. yesterday. It is a delightful, home-like place, in a beautiful valley, gradually sloping towards the South, surrounded by wild mountain scenery, with snow-clad peaks; while the fruit trees and flowers are in blushing bloom in the Salt Lake Valley. We have seen no place between Boston and San Francisco, so well adapted for a community of those entertaining "one faith," as the one chosen by Brigham Young, the President of the Mormon society, at Salt Lake City. The plain is four thousand and three hundred feet above tide water, and surrounded by wild, picturesque mountains, ranging from 8000 to 7400 feet above the city. Some of these peaks are covered with perpetual snows, presenting a lively contrast between them and the verdant plain below. The basin valley, with its mountain rim, is some thirty-five miles long and twelve to fifteen wide. We learn this valley was first discovered by Col. Fremont, during his exploring expeditions. When the Mormons were driven out of Ill., in 1840, they started in search of a resting place in the far west. After suffering very severe hardships, in company with their leader, the noted Brigham Young—a party of one hundred and forty-three persons arrived at Salt Lake Valley, July 21st, 1847. The main body of Mormons soon followed. They found the valley covered with sage brush. Since then they have built over one hundred towns and cities in the Utah Territory, having a population of about 100,000, of which about eighteen thousand are in Salt Lake City.

Before this valley could be made fruitful, it became necessary to provide some means of irrigation, as there is a lack of rain in the summer sufficient to bring vegetation to maturity. The melting of the mountain snows constantly in the gutters of the city, and is taken from them to every garden spot, thus rendering the land very fruitful. In the warmest summer weather, when the most water is needed, then they have the largest supply, because the snow on the surrounding mountains is then melting most rapidly. After supplying the city with water, the streams pass on to refresh the fields below. The gradual slope of the land from north to south, where the city is located, is specially favorable for taking advantage of the mountain streams, to water their lands.

SALT LAKE CITY

Is laid out with much regularity. The streets are one hundred and thirty-two feet wide, lined with trees, and run north and south, east and west. Each square contains ten acres; and about every lot has a good supply of peach, pear and apple trees; besides strawberries; all of which grow very thriftily, and bear an abundance of fruit every year. The city is spread out some nine miles in extent, and well supplied with ornamental trees. The houses are mostly of plain style, built of adobe brick, or wood. The brick are unburnt, and made from the adobe clay, found in the valley. This clay is now nearly exhausted. There are several first-class houses, surrounded by very pleasant yards; but a large number of the people are poor and live in very plain style. The best houses are generally occupied by the apostles, bishops and elders of the church.

President Young has a large house, or more properly, a cluster of houses, and other buildings, which are the most prominent among the residences of the city. His ten-acre square is surrounded by a pebble-stone wall, cemented together, sixteen feet high, and six feet wide at the base. In the "Temple Block" are two tabernacles, one holding three thousand people, and the other twelve thousand. They are both unique in their style of architecture. The smaller one is used on ordinary occasions, and the larger for their annual conferences, when it is filled. It has the largest organ ever built in the United States; and the third largest in America. It was constructed by Mr. Ridges, a Mormon, at Salt Lake City. The gallery of the Tabernacle will hold some four thousand people. The building is elliptical in form, two hundred and fifty feet long, and one hundred and fifty feet wide inside. There is a gradual rise of seats from the front to the rear of the house. There are nine tier of seats in the gallery. In both tabernacles, after rising a few feet from the ground floor, the grand arch of the spacious rooms begins, and spans the entire building, without any support below. The tabernacles are so constructed that they are easily filled by the voice of the speaker. The larger is the most conspicuous building in the city. The outside top is shaped quite like the half of an egg shell, cut lengthwise, allowing that both ends of the egg were of the same size. There is nothing upon the outside of the roof but a single flag staff. There is no apparent effort for display or show, in either of the tabernacles; and the same is true of their dwellings and public buildings.

In the "Temple Block," near the great Tabernacle, the foundation is laid of an imposing temple, to be constructed of granite. The foundation is eight feet in thickness, and is laid sixteen feet below the surface. The temple was commenced April 16th, 1853, but during the last eighteen years, the work has been hindered, and the walls have only been raised to a level with the ground. A number of hands are now at work upon it, and it is purposed to finish the building as soon as practicable. It is to be 186½ feet long, and ninety-nine feet wide. It is purposed to have three towers at each end of the building, the two centre ones being two hundred feet high. The foundations cover an area of 21,850 feet. There are several smaller tabernacles in the different wards of the city, where meetings are held, which will hold some three or four hundred. These resemble ordinary meeting-houses. Besides these, there is a city hall, a court house, council house, and theatre. The latter will seat some seventeen hundred. The theatre is sometimes turned into a ball room, by taking out the seats in the parquette, and putting down a floor kept for this purpose. There are several good hotels, among which the Townsend House, kept by Mr. Townsend, takes the lead.

In the vicinity of Salt Lake City, are some warm and hot springs, which will boil an egg in a few minutes. We took a delicious bath in one of the warm springs, which was strongly impregnated with sulphur. Farther away is the river Jordan, and the great Salt Lake. There are no fish found in the latter. The waters contain some elements which are destructive to animal life.

Very rich and extensive silver mines have been opened from twenty-five to two hundred miles from Salt Lake City, which are receiving the special attention of a large number of capitalists, who are flocking to Utah. This gives Salt Lake City a very lively appearance. The hotels are crowded with tourists, and men interested in the mines. This city presents the most lively business look of any we have seen in the western country; and there is no doubt but that there will be a constant and rapid increase of the same, in consequence of the vast mineral wealth stored away among the mountains of Utah. It is said that President Brigham Young knew about these mines, but wisely discouraged his people from working them, lest they should neglect their home interests. More anon.

EIGHT WEEKS MAY WEATHER.—About the middle of March, the peach, pear, and other fruit trees, on the Pacific coast, were in blushing bloom. After enjoying the pleasant sight for some three weeks, we went to Nevada City, some two hundred miles from San Francisco, where the spring was a week la- [illegible] bright blossoms. From thence we went to Salt Lake City, where the season is still a week later; and found the fruit trees in fresh bloom. After staying there about a week, we came on to Iowa, Ill., and Mich., where the season is another week later; and then to New England, where the fruit trees blossom later still. Thus we have had the pleasure of an eight weeks' spring.

"WATCHING THE SIGNS.

The secular press betrays a tendency to discuss the warning it finds in the action of the elements of late, and the pulpits follow on with their warnings. There is no question that both are pretty well exercised over the strange, if not unparalleled proceedings of the year. Let us run them over in a moment; earthquakes, tidal waves, hurricanes, water spouts, wildly flaming auroras, frightful meteors, protracted drouth, ocean tempests—all these up to the present date, and one of the most beautiful months for October that ever crowned the summer with its brilliant glories. There is much in what has been witnessed and felt to start the human mind on a new course of inquiry. So many marvels within the limits of a single year—who can tell what the year 1871 may have secreted for the world? It is a fact that these startling phenomena tend to make people more serious, however much they may try to turn it off with superficial laughter. When the earth itself grows unsteady, like the waves of the sea, and the forces of the air are let loose to ravage the face of nature, and the deep heavens flame nightly with fires of whose kindling no man knows the cause, and when, as now, these phenomena are all crowded together in so small a compass of time, men's minds might reasonably become stirred to deeper strata of reflection, and it is a fair subject of thought whether all these distinctions and ambitious projects are of any account in comparison with the one thing that alone has reality, and that is the spiritual."

The foregoing, from the Banner of Light, Nov. 19, 1870, is quite in harmony with things we have often said, which have been frequently turned to ridicule by the same paper. We are glad to find the Banner now talking in harmony with the Bible and facts. We desire that it may give more light.

FRANCE.

The French situation remains in a very critical condition. No rays of political sunshine yet appear to illumine the deep darkness that has settled down upon that nation.

Napoleon keeps still, anxiously watching his opportunity to seize the reins of government, in order that he may again lead the French to their former high position among the nations of the earth, where they may enjoy once more the political, financial, literary and social position of other days. A change must come soon, and it will not be one of small moment.

The interests of all the European governments are involved more or less in the results of the French war. Should the Republicans be successful, it will be difficult for England and other countries to keep the same class in subjection to monarchical power. The Republican fires are all aglow in thousands of hearts in every county in Europe; and they are determined to overthrow despotism in all its forms. The struggle has commenced in France; but should the imperial power prevail there, it will be a strong check to Republicanism throughout the continent.

THE PRESENT WORK OF GOD.*

It is to this, the only true church ground, that God is bringing back in these last days the twos and threes in various parts of the world, to meet in the name of Jesus. Not to reconstruct a fallen church. Not as claiming to be the church. Not as disowning in any sense true believers in every and in all denominations. Not as presuming to be anything—nor assuming superior sanctity. But in lowly confession of past failures, and in the present consciousness of entire weakness and nothingness, desiring in simplicity and faith to walk in the pathway of obedience to Christ; gathering in his name alone, around his own blessed person, to meet on the principles of God, the principles of the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

Every real believer in Ephesus or Corinth, in the apostles' times, belonged to the church of God. So every true believer now in any given city, town, village or district, belongs to the church of God.

But in Ephesus or Corinth all believers were also associated together in the confession of the name of Jesus, and formed the one church of God there—one in spirit, and one in manifestation. They were associated in separation from the unbelieving world, from Judaism, and from heathenism, and sects among themselves were then unknown.

The question which God by his Spirit is now pressing on true hearts and tender consciences is this, Ought not all believers now in each locality, seeing that they are one in Spirit, to associate together around the person of their common Savior, in separation from all evil, moral and doctrinal, which would dishonor him, and in the acknowledgment of his supreme Lordship?

When this is truly done, there is a rallying point for every simple believing soul that desires fellowship with true believers—for every one that loves holiness, and hungers and thirsts after righteousness, and is anxious to enjoy the communion of saints "with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart."

A rallying point for every one that values the truth of Christ, and desires to guard it, in association with those that "love each other in the truth, for the truth's sake." And for every one whose heart is true to Christ, and who desires to pay to him the honor and subjection which is due to him alone, in separation from the usurped authority of man, and in combination with those that own his Lordship and desire to obey him.

We most fully indorse the sentiments of the foregoing, and believe without a doubt it is in keeping with the teachings of the Holy Spirit and the word of God. Let us rally around this standard, and do all in our power to break down the sectarian walls that separate the children of the Lord. Remember Jesus prayed that all his children might "be one." Let us be careful to do nothing to prevent this oneness. We shall not all see alike on every doctrinal point, but we may all possess the one Holy Spirit, which is the bond of union. That, and that alone, unites us to Christ, and to each other. We can have that Spirit as long as we keep the eye single to the glory of God; but when hatred, variance, covetousness, envy, jealousy, etc., take possession of us, then the Holy Spirit is grieved away, and the spirit of division at once enters, and desolation follows. "Let us therefore follow after the things that make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." Rom. 14: 19. The hour has come for all christians to make a united effort to break down sectarian walls, and persuade those who truly love Jesus to meet together in harmony, for the worship of the Lord, and to get ready for the marriage of the Lamb. Dear Brs. and Srs. let us not be in the background in this important work, but take our position in the front ranks.

WESTWARD TRAVEL.—Those going west will find the express trains on the Michigan Central R. R., from Detroit to Chicago, noted for speed, comfort, and gentlemanly conductors.

THE AGRICULTURAL PROSPECTS of the west are encouraging for this year. Of course there is no certainty yet as to the farming results.

THE PROMISED KINGDOM.

The apostle James pronounces the saints "heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised them that love him," and Jesus is to say, at his coming, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25: 34), hence, that is the promised kingdom. A sky kingdom is nowhere promised to the saints in the Bible. When earth was created it was made as the home of man in his sinless state; and had man been obedient while here on trial, he might have eaten of the tree of life, and have lived forever; but in consequence of sin, the territory of the kingdom to be enjoyed by the saints hereafter is now in a sin-defiled and dilapidated condition, and stands in need of a renovation before becoming the endless abode of glorified state.

That earth is really "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," is evident, as Gabriel affirmed to Daniel that "the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints" (Dan. 7: 27), and as they cannot occupy two kingdoms at the same time, and are to have "the kingdom under the whole heaven," they are identical. Christ refers to the same kingdom in this statement—"The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. . . . Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 41, 43. The kingdom to be enjoyed by the saints ultimately, is now the residence of evil doers; not a sky-kingdom, but the very kingdom which God prepared "from the foundation of the world. That kingdom is now under the curse, and under the dominion of the "god of this world," who rules "in the hearts of the children of disobedience"; but it is ultimately to be redeemed; hence, Paul speaks of "the redemption of the purchased possession." Eph. 1: 14. Christ not only purchased salvation for his people, by his death upon the cross, but he also purchased a "possession," or a home, for them; and that possession is one that needs to be redeemed. Surely, heaven does not stand in need of "redemption," therefore it cannot be the possession which Christ has purchased as a home for his people. But "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," now groaning beneath the curse, and under the polluting tread of the enemy of righteousness needs "redemption."

It is to be redeemed, firstly, from the possession of its present occupants. Said Christ, "Many shall come from the east and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." It is to be redeemed, secondly, from the curse; and for this purpose it is "reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment" (2 Pet. 3: 7); after which it is recognized as the "new earth," or the renewed earth. Verse 13. Christ likewise informs us when the saints are to inherit the kingdom prepared for them: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. . . . Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 31, 34. Not at the hour of death, but at the revelation of Christ.

Let us look for the right kingdom, at the right time; but above all things, be ready to inherit it when he comes. Are we ready to see the heavenly King descend? W. S.

THE TABERNACLE TO BE "PUT OFF."

Both Peter and Paul speak of dwelling in a certain tabernacle to be finally dispensed with; but neither of them speak of a tabernacle for the soul, but for the man himself. Peter had a tabernacle, and Paul had a tabernacle; but neither Peter nor Paul were tabernacles for ghosts. This claim that the body is a tabernacle for the soul, is an assumption totally out of harmony with the record. The tabernacle was that in which Peter himself dwelt, and which Peter himself was to "put off"—not that in which his soul dwelt.

The term "tabernacle" is used in a figurative sense, or it could mean nothing but a literal tabernacle; and if used in a figurative sense, what is it used to represent? Paul explains what he meant by "tabernacle" in telling us, "We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life" (2 Cor. 5: 4), thus expressing his anxiety to be divested of his "tabernacle" by being invested with "life" beyond mortality, or by exchanging a mortal life for immortal life; and as certainly as the reception of the future life would divest him of his tabernacle, that tabernacle is the present mortal life, or a life of mortality. Let us read the entire statement with this inspired definition: "For we know that if our earthly house of mortal life were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this mortal life we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this mortal life do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the self same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the spirit. Therefore [seeing God "hath wrought us for the self same thing," "that mortality might be swallowed up of life"] we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body [the mortal body], we are absent from the Lord (for we walk by faith, not by sight). We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body [the mortal body], and to be present with the Lord." 2 Cor. 5: 1-8. Paul is here simply contrasting our mortal life with the immortal life. We now tabernacle in mortal life. This tabernacle is not eternal—we put it off—but in due time we shall be "clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life"—endless life—and by virtue of this change we shall be "absent" from the mortal body, and present with the Lord in our immortalized state, without mortal bodies, but with bodies changed and fashioned like Christ's glorious body.

Let us see if Peter uses the term tabernacle in the same sense that Paul does: "I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me." But did Christ put off mortal life, and sleep in death awhile, and then become immortal? Yes; for "Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him (Rom. 6: 9); that was the only way Christ ever put off his tabernacle, and Peter expected to put off his in the very way Christ had shown him. Let us read the entire statement of Peter, with this definition of the figurative use of tabernacle. "Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this mortal life, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease [exodus—departure from life] to have these things always in remembrance." 2 Pet. 1: 13-15.

Let the following points be observed: (1) The possessor of the tabernacle is not the soul, but the man himself; hence the tabernacle cannot be the man, but something possessed by the man. (2) This possessor of the tabernacle dies, for the same personality is referred to in both these phrases—"my tabernacle"—"my decease," or my death. (3) The possessor of this tabernacle desired to be clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life"; hence the possessor of this tabernacle is certainly mortal, and therefore cannot be an immortal soul. (4) When we receive the life beyond mortality, or when "mortality is swallowed up of life," this tabernacle is dispensed with, and immortality takes its place, as in the case of Christ. All the saints will put off this tabernacle, this mortal life, either at death, or at the Lord's coming, and be invested with immortality in its stead. But we nowhere read that the soul puts off a tabernacle, or that the body is a tabernacle for the soul. W. S.

IS MIND A PERSONALITY?—If mind is a personality, then it follows that there can be no mind where there is no indwelling personality; but if mind is not a personality, then its various characteristics cannot be claimed as proof of its immortality. According to Webster, "thinking, willing, choosing," are some of the actions of the mind; but man is not the only being that can will, think, and choose; and if these cannot be exercised by man without an inward personality to give them rise, how can the same results exist in animals? If it is said they are more perfectly developed in man, there is a reason for it, as man is a superior organism.

It is sometimes said that if mind were a property of matter, all matter would think. I might as reasonably affirm, if instinct is a property of matter, all matter would possess instinct, and then set up the claim that instinct is a spiritual entity in the beast. While unorganized matter possesses neither mind nor instinct, it would be folly to deny that matter can be so organized by the Divine hand as to produce both mind and instinct. Who will claim that the organism of the beast is so far superior to that of man, as to produce instinct (a species of mind), while man's organism produces no such result, and stands in need of another personality inside of him, to think for him? Is man's physical organism inferior to that of the animals? Then why can they think without the help of an immortal soul, unless man also could? W. S.

ARENA, WIS.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is still working here. The little church is all awake. On Sunday, Apr. 23d, fourteen happy souls were buried in the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection. Since then, some fourteen or fifteen more have started in the service of the dear Master. The whole community seems stirred, either in approval or opposition. And in the midst of all, God is gathering in such as we trust shall be eternally saved. Earnestness and zeal are marked characteristics of the little band here; and they bid fair to become one of the strongest churches in the west. I am exceedingly rejoiced at the progress of the good work on the Pacific coast. Effectual doors are opening everywhere for the promulgation of the "gospel of the kingdom." Surely the end must be near.

I do trust that your California correspondent "C." will re-consider his resolution. I feel sure that all the readers of the Crisis will unite with me in requesting a continuance of his highly interesting and instructive letters. Your Bro. in Christ,

May 2nd, 1871. GEO. THOMSON.

REMOVAL.

For the last five years I have traveled quite extensively in northern New York, proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom to good acceptance, and with satisfactory results. I have visited numerous places where the truth had never been preached, and have formed the acquaintance of many dear ones who now rejoice in the blessed hope; but circumstances are such that a change in my field of labor is demanded. For the past year my health has failed very much in consequence of being exposed to inclement weather, and almost incessant labor. Therefore with reluctance I quit the field, and take up my abode with the good people of Wolcott, Wayne Co., N. Y. I shall preach only on Sundays, until my health improves sufficiently to allow of more extensive labor. I hope some brother in the ministry, who has health, will go into northern N. Y., and fill the vacancy. Brethren and sisters will please remember me at Father's throne. C. H. WILLIAMS.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

Two neighbors are seen running in the same direction. One apparently sees a prize of inestimable value ahead, and he has undoubted assurance that he can obtain it; he feels a perfect confidence that if he endures to the end, the prize will be his; his thoughts and desires, his affections and ambitions are all concentrated in that direction; he cares for nothing on the right hand or the left, "forgetting the things behind, he pushes on for the prize;" running with implicit faith, he runs joyfully and thankfully, using every means by which he is authoritatively assured of obtaining.

The other neighbor apparently sees some terrible danger behind, upon which his gaze is constantly reverting; he has been pointed to the prize for which his neighbor is hastening, and has been told that there is safety from this much dreaded calamity; but he fails to see the prize, and catches merely the one idea of safety; aside from this he sees no attraction—nothing worth running for, and is in constant doubt about being able to reach the point; he has no relish for the race, it is an intolerable burden to him, and he looks hither and thither for some other way to avoid that haunting danger (which is his impelling power,) and says to his neighbor who is running for the prize: "If I saw as you do, I would not run another step." In his confusion he stumbles upon a company of persons who tell him they are going to the same place, but by a circuitous route which is the only sure way; anon he comes upon another company, and another, and another—all going different ways, and sometimes at open war with each other, but all claiming the same destination; he is ready to sit down in despair, when a venerable evangelist tells him he must unite with some one of the companies—that it is the only means, the way having become so cut up and nearly obliterated by sectarian feuds, that it is impossible for him to find it without traveling with some of the organized companies. He finally selects his company, closes his eyes and gives his hand to some blind leader, nods assent to some peculiar tenets probably entirely foreign to the real subject, and tries to make himself and others believe that he feels safe. He thus entails upon himself the additional duty of gathering in and carrying along all the supplies necessary for the maintenance of party government, but also the obligation to beat back his neighbor who is running for the prize—with the Chart in his own hand and his eyes open to the fact that a "kingdom divided against itself cannot stand."

The foregoing is a fair representation of two classes of Christians. One follows Christ because he believes he will thereby obtain eternal life; the other endeavors to follow Christ because he thinks God will torture him forever if he does not. One feels that eternal life is an inestimable boon in itself, with which all this life is not to be compared, seeing it cost the blood of the Son of God, and in view of the promise that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man" the joys of eternal life without sin. The other looks upon it as nothing, only as an escape from imaginary eternal torments. One looks upon death as a dire punishment—an "enemy," because it will deprive him of eternal life; the other tries to look upon death as a "friend," an angel of mercy," because he has been told it will immediately accomplish his end and admit him to heaven, and, if there is no eternal torture, because it will release him from all obligation to God and man. One runs a race of love, joy, confidence and peace in believing, "supported by Jesus and his word;" while the other runs a race of compulsion, doubt and fear, supported by the "traditions of men."—The Nazarene.

Correspondence.

From SR. O. CASE.

DEAR BRN.:—"The Adventists are dying out in our place; not so much interest as formerly."

So said an individual who had said, "The Adventists have more truth than any other people." Shall it be said of us, who profess to believe the next great event is the coming of Christ to judge the world in righteousness, and that it is just at the door, that our interest is dying out? God forbid. Nay, verily, let us gird on the armor more closely. When the tares are ripening for the great harvest, as well as the wheat, it requires renewed exertion to stand firm, to be kept from conformity to the world, unspotted from the world. How often is the cry extorted—"Who is sufficient for these things?" It is well for us it is written—"Our sufficiency is of the Lord; in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." He has promised to be a present help in every time of need. He that is for us is more than all that can be against us.

Suppose we have to stand alone; no matter; it is not expected that the servant is to be above his Master; he was forsaken by all, left alone. Suppose the finger of scorn is pointed at us; no matter; just the same was done to our Master. Suppose we are scoffed at for believing Jesus is soon coming, being thought to be wise above what is written; no matter; just as Peter said it would be in the last days. Suppose we are called fanatical, because we cannot go with the popular crowd; just the same has been said of the real children of God in all ages, who have taken the word of God as the man of their counsel, instead of taking for doctrine the commandments of men; and to cure them of their fanaticism, how many have they put to death, thinking they were doing God service. Says Jesus, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." It always was a little flock, and always will be; but Jesus says, "Fear not." If any man come to me and forsake not all that he hath, his own life also, ready to lay it down, if need be, he cannot be my disciple. Have we the martyr spirit, or are we seeking honor that comes from men, instead of that which comes from God only? It is time to bestir ourselves. May it not be truthfully said of us, that we are dying out.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. P. S. DEYO writes:—"March 25th I preached at Boylan's Grove. Had a good hearing. March 31st spoke to the people near Howardville, some twelve miles north of this city, where I was in Jan. April 1st went on to Michall Co., three miles south of Brownsville, where Bro. Pilcher lives. Spoke three times, and organized a church of ten members. There was one new convert for baptism. Looking over this field I can see the need of men moving in the right time. Much more might have been done here which is now lost, perhaps never to be gained. April 3rd, went to a new school-house, three miles from the Little Cedar church, to meet Elder Nelson, of the Disciple church, to commence a debate, or make arrangements for the same. Found that he had said he would meet Bro. Wilbur, or any one, on the question of 'Soul,' and 'Punishment of the Wicked'; but when we were engaged to meet him, his friend said that he would not challenge. As I had not, and do not, nor wish my friends to do so, it put things at a stand still. I told them that he might fix it any way he pleased, and call it as he wished, only come on and discuss. It finally ended in a back-down, plain to all. I preached to them on the soul, which made quite a stir, and think it will be the means of doing good with the tracts I left.

April 8th went to Clear Lake. April 15th preached in Floyd, there being no regular appointment. April 23rd went back to the new school-house to preach on the punishment of the wicked."

SR. M. E. STREETER writes:—"I feel like praising my God with all my heart for his loving kindness to me, and I will try and serve him faithfully the remainder of my days. For I do want to wear the crown of life, and have a home in the paradise of God. I long for the time to come when the saints will be gathered home. I believe the time is very near when all our trials and sorrows will have an end, the cross be exchanged for the crown, faith lost in sight, and prayer in praise."

BRO. S. L. MANLEY writes:—"Sickness, and having no home and no lawful claim on any one for earthly necessities, impels me to make this communication to my brethren, confident that I shall have their prayers and sympathies in my present trial. I am, as ever, waiting for the dawn of redemption's day. My address is Marion, Wayne Co., N. Y."

TRUE LOVE AND FRIENDSHIP.

True love and friendship were brought vividly to our mind, while reading the farewell of that loving friend of Bro. Grant. It caused the tears to freely flow, mingled with joy and grief. While we were joyful in the prospect of the return of our beloved Bro. G., we felt sad at the thoughts of the parting of that dear friend "C." We long for the time when those partings will end in a meeting with all the dear friends of Jesus, in the beautiful new earth; and we pray the Lord to return Bro. G. in safety, and remain with his loving friend "C." We have read with great pleasure the progress of the work of the Lord through the instrumentality of Bro. Grant in California. We hope and pray it will not cease when he leaves; but may we hear that the work of the Lord continues to prosper. While they bid adieu to beloved Bro. G., may we continue to hear through the Crisis from his dear friend "C."

Clinton, Mass. A. M. BARNES.

A NIGHT ON VESUVIUS IN ERUPTION.—We find the following very interesting account of a night passed on Mount Vesuvius during an eruption in the Naples and Florence Observer of April 15. The writer, Mr. F. Capen of Boston, predicted this eruption, and the editor of the Observer gives his testimony to the general correctness of the weather predictions of Mr. Capen. The following graphic account will be read with interest:

"This was, by far, the most thrilling and eventful night of my life. My interest in the volcano had been raised to enthusiasm by the outbreak of its torrent of lava on the evening of the 3d inst., against the opinions of experienced residents. During a late walk on that magnificent road the Corso Vittorio Emanuele, which overlooks the finest city and bay, and the most charming scenery I ever beheld, I heard, on the evening of the 8th, a succession of violent explosions from the crater, the distance being about twelve miles. Similar reports were frequent on the morning of the 9th, and in the afternoon a party of us—among whom were Mr. W. W. Griscom, a sound scholar and scientist from Philadelphia, and his pupil, Master S. C. Stanton of Boston, now a resident of London—started for the scene. To omit the amusing incidents of the journey, we reached the stream of lava before sunset, and the summit before dark. We had a close view of the new crater, at the foot of the great cone, which, having no accumulation of ejected matter, i. e., no cone of stones and ashes, shows clearly how it was first formed. A thick bed of solid rock seems to have been rent by the pent-up forces beneath, and forced upward into a vertical position, like the jaws of a monster—broad at the base and tapering at the top. Three or four of these vast rocks form the chimney, through which pour volumes of steam and smoke, roaring flames and lava, with great violence, as if from a mighty conflagration under intense pressure below. Our party were in haste to descend, as the night drew on; but I was not satisfied, and, being on the ground, I resolved to stay till morning; and I was well repaid for my trouble and privation.

It is impossible to do justice to such a subject in a brief article. There are really three separate throats, so to speak, from the depths below, quite distinct in their mode of action. Two are within the main crater at the summit, and on a line with the new one above named, which is near the N base of the great summit, or apex cone, and whose action I have described. The middle throat or register is the only one that was violent in its action, and through the night, at longer or shorter intervals, it was terrific. After brief periods of rest it broke forth again, with a tremendous explosion, as sudden and intense as that of the heaviest cannon, but many, many times vaster and grander, as if a magazine of powder or nitro-glycerine had suddenly been ignited far down in the deep bowels of the earth. Sometimes one, oftener several reports, came in quick succession. Sometimes the first was loudest, but often the second and third reports followed with increasing rapidity and violence and with much greater intensity than the first. At all the explosions of this opening, immense volleys of glowing stones and red hot cinders were thrown to the height of from one hundred to two hundred feet, spreading into magnificent boquets of great brilliancy, many of these stones, some of large size, falling outside the crater and rolling down the cone in glowing fragments to its base. Sometimes the explosions were preceded by subterranean rumblings far down in the deep cavern of the mountain, accompanied by a trembling of the solid frame to its very base.

The action of the third spout or register was wholly different from the other two. There was no violent explosion, as of pent-up power, as in the case of that just described, though, like that, its delivery was blowing out at intervals, and never uniform, continuous and unexplosive, like the first described new crater outside the cone, whose flow was a copious compressed volume of smoke and flame, as from a well-fed furnace, and with no noise, except that of the constant roaring of the flames. This third register made a great blowing noise like an immense fuse, and very much like the noise of an ascending rocket, of immense proportions. It threw out volumes of black smoke and great boquets of glowing cinders, but with much less violence than its companion, as if the opening were much larger—so much larger in proportion to its discharge as to divest it of all explosive violence. I should regard this as the old and nearly spent crater. There are many other very interesting topics that should be noticed in this connection, but I have already intruded too far, both in your space and the patience of your reader.

Respectfully, F. L. CAPEN.

Obituaries.

TURNER. Sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, April 20th, 1871, at Syracuse, N. Y., of consumption, Marial, widow of Eld. C. B. Turner, aged thirty-five years and three months.

The intelligence of Sr. Turner's death will bring deep sorrow from many a loving heart, and many eyes will be wet with tears as they read the notice of her death. She was an affectionate and loving mother, a true, every day christian, loved by all who knew her. To know her was to love her. Her faith was practical and powerful in its effects. She has left three lovely children, orphans, in a merciless world, to the protection of their heavenly Father. In her last moments her anxiety for her children was very great. She exhorted them with deep earnestness to prepare to meet their dear father and mother in the kingdom. She clung to her eldest son, seventeen years old, until he promised to live a christian life, and meet her in the bright world to come; and then she died in the triumphs of faith, expecting soon to be reunited with her dear husband, who sweetly sleeps in Jesus by her side.

Her family and relatives render their sincere thanks to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad for their deep interest manifested in her behalf in so kindly administering to her temporal wants. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at her funeral, Sunday, April 23d, before a large circle of relatives and friends, from Ps. 17: 15.

A. C. Times, please copy. E. F. SERGISSON.

DOUGLASS. Died, in New York City, April 25th, Caroline, wife of Franklin Douglass, formerly of Syracuse.

Sister Douglass has not been able to walk for about eleven years. Her suffering (with rheumatism) at constantly returning intervals was excruciating in the extreme, requiring the most tender and watchful care. She greatly rejoiced in the hope of the coming kingdom, and longed to be admitted to that glorious rest that ends all earthly sorrows and banishes all pain. She leaves three interesting children, in charge of their father, whom may our kind Father sustain in his great affliction. T. J. COX.

A. C. Times, please copy.

AGNER. Departed this life, March 30th, 1871, Bro. Martin Agner, of Rockbridge, Ohio, aged thirty-seven years.

He was immersed into the Christ Feb. 23d, 1860, and joined the S. A. C. Covenant on the 27th ult. In Oct. last he was one of the two delegates from the Rockbridge church to our Ohio conference in Nevada, where the writer met him for the first time, little thinking we should so soon be called to discourse at his funeral. He died in full assurance of hope. His aged father and mother, with one sister, and a daughter, await his coming again from the dead. G. W. STETSON.

JEWELL. Died, in East Farnham, P. Q., April 19th, 1871, Mrs. Mary E., wife of Eri Jewell, aged thirty-five years and ten months.

Our sister has fallen asleep, but not without hope. She early learned to love the Savior, and fully manifested a christian character in her daily walk. The funeral services were attended by the writer, who addressed a large circle of mourning relatives and sympathising friends from 2 Sam. 14: 14. May the Lord sustain the afflicted.

E. G. CHADSEY.

MILLS. Died, near Charles City, Iowa, Feb. 10th, 1871, Sister Almira Mills, wife of Jos. Mills.

Bro. Mills removed from Springfield to Iowa about fifteen years ago. Sr. M. died in hope of a resurrection to eternal life through Jesus Christ. She was a great sufferer for two or three years before her death, but bore all with christian meekness and patience. "So He giveth his beloved sleep." R. E. LADD.

MARSHALL. Died, at Hooksett, N. H., April 26th, Parmelia P., wife of G. W. Marshall, aged sixty-seven years, two months, and two days.

Sr. M. was sick one week. She found peace by believing in Christ in 1842, and was a strong believer in his second coming. She sleeps, and waits the sounding of the last trump, when she will awake in the likeness of Christ. She left a companion and children to mourn her loss.

P. C. MOORE.

GOODWIN. Died, in Groton, Vt., April 25th, Mrs. Eunice Goodwin, widow of Mr. Rufus Goodwin, aged sixty-one years.

She sought and found the Savior in her youthful days, and since then her life has been that of a consistent christian. She died in faith of soon being made like Jesus. C. DARLING.

BRAMLY. Died, in Chicopee, Mass., April 5th, 1871, Philena Bramly, aged sixty-seven years.

She died a christian, with no fear of death, but a perfect reliance on God. She was a firm believer in the second coming of Christ to reign on the earth in righteousness. A. M. B.

CHAPPELL. Died, in Colebrook, Conn., April 26th, of consumption, Samuel T. Chappell, aged fifty-one years and two months.

Almost his last words were—"Come, Lord Jesus"; and my heart responds—"Amen, even so, come, and come quickly." S. E. CHAPPELL.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, May 5. The Times special dispatch from Paris says that all hopes of peace are abandoned. Delegations of Freemasons have gone to the provinces to agitate in favor of the Commune. There was constant heavy firing yesterday between the forts.

The Times Versailles dispatch says that Favre, Pouyer and Quertier have gone to Frankfort-on-the-Main to meet Bismarck.

The Daily News special says that the Versailles forces are shelling Anteuil from a battery at Montretout.

The Prussians allow provisions to enter Paris, which occasions uneasiness at Versailles.

The Castle of Issy has been burned.

A letter to the Telegraph says that Rossel defends the conduct of Cluseret.

The Republican Union League demands the negotiation of a truce for twenty days.

The railway station at Anteuil was damaged by the fire of the Versailles batteries, and the inhabitants of the place are flying.

Since Friday the insurgents have lost 2000 in killed, wounded and prisoners.

PARIS, May 5. The Communists still hold Fort Issy and are having it entrenched. The fort continues to fire slowly upon the Versaillists batteries at Clamart and Bois Meudon, and receives in return a perfect hail of projectiles. Fort Vanvres also keeps up a slow fire and is vigorously assailed by the Versaillists at Chatillon.

The Assemblists have unmasked a formidable battery at Montrefout, near St. Cloud, which menaces Anteuil, Port du Jour and Passy.

VERSAILLES, May 5. St. Germain has been taken possession of by the Versaillists, who have established a battery there with which to shell the insurgent gunboats in the Seine. A naval combat is expected.

Fort Montrogue and Haute Bruveres are constantly bombarded by the Versailles batteries at Chatillon, but without important result. The Communists have occupied the trenches of Villejuif. Fort Issy replies sharply to the fire of the Versailles batteries.

A great movement is expected upon Neuilly and Levallois.

It is reported that the Commune requested those of the Orleans Princes still in Paris to leave the city.

It is positively stated that Thiers refuses to enter into a commercial treaty with Germany, and Bismarck has protested against the unjust discrimination by France against German commerce.

VERSAILLES, May 5. The mission of Jules Favre and Quertier to meet Bismarck at Frankfort is in consequence that the German authorities have telegraphed that if the Versaillists do not enter Paris by Monday the Prussians will on Tuesday. Favre hopes to gain an extension of the time, but he is unlikely to succeed. It is probable that the Prussians will bring back the empire if they enter. Favre and Simon are likely to resign shortly in consequence of the dissensions in the Assembly.

VERSAILLES, May 6. The regulars captured over a thousand insurgents in the trenches before Vanvres on Saturday; the insurgents voluntarily surrendering. The fourth line of Government works has been opened.

The Assemblists have destroyed the Communist force near Neuilly, and are now marching on Clichy. A heavy battle has opened.

A dispatch states that Germany gives to the Versaillist Government the immediate possession of the Eastern forts.

The insurgent losses during the attacks of Friday and Saturday were 2000, including 1500 taken prisoners in the brilliant affair at Moulin Saguet and before Vanvres.

The Imperialists are very active in the rural districts of France.

ANOTHER BLOW AT PAPAL INFALLIBILITY.—The recent protest against the new dogma of Papal infallibility by the learned Dr. Dollinger, has been followed by one equally frank and outspoken from the professors of the Roman University. In their address these learned Italians state: "The episcopacy which dwells in our land is of no country, and has nothing in common with the Italian people. The syllabus infallibility, Papal autocracy—all these negations of divine and human reason—compose a system which has no connection with the Italian character, with Italian thought. Our Roman, that is to say, Italian race, abhors as much as the Germanic, that evil system of the bondage of the understanding." They add that in the sacred cause of reform the German and the Italian people will fight and conquer together.

THE PAPACY.—The political power of the Pope of Rome, once so mighty, but now so weak and daily becoming weaker, has received another staggering blow, this time from its ever willing patron, Austria. By cable the fact is announced that the Minister of Instruction in the Austrian Reichsrath has made declaration that the Government was in favor of the abolition of the Concordat with Rome, and this is supplemented by the statement that Reichsrath has taken up the discussion of the dogma of infallibility in its relation to the Empire. This is very significant. Heretofore Austria has been the devoted friend and upholder of the Papacy, opposing all concessions to the people in the interests of popular government. Whence this change? Of course, in seeking for the answer to this question, we cannot ignore recent political occurrences, such as the unification of Italy, France defeated and a by-word in the mouths of the nations, Germany united and at the head of the European powers—all of which events have had their effect on retrogressive, despotic Austria; but, admitting their full significance, is not this change due mainly to the action of the Ecumenical Council which decreed Papal infallibility? This decree, determined upon in the interests of Papal political supremacy, seems to have had a contrary effect. Reviving a dogma of the dark ages, when Rome was regarded as not only the centre of civilization and Christianity, but also of supreme power, political and religious; it has aroused the jealousy and the opposition of kingly governments, and in less degree of many of the leading ecclesiastics of Catholicism, who regard it as trenching upon their prerogatives. So we see Catholic and Protestant governments of Europe hastening to interpose against the promulgation of this decree, and declaring its assumptions hostile to the interests of the State. The Jesuitism which sought, therefore, to save a tottering power is no wise an aid to Catholicism, or to its propagandism, by engrafting upon it a new dogma, have overleaped the mark, and thereby hastened the very end they wished to avert. The world moves forward, never backward.

WOMEN IN PARIS PREPARING TO FIGHT.—A letter from Paris says:—"We hope against hope, in awaiting a bloodless termination of the drama. Women are beginning to take an active part, and, according to all past experience of French revolutions, whenever the gentler sex rouse themselves to do man's cruellest work the end is sure to be a sanguinary one. 'Citoyennes' meet nightly in solemn conclave at their different mairies and issue appeals and inflammatory placards. 'When our fathers' swords are hacked and broken, when our sons and husbands have bitten their last cartouche, our place will be upon the barricades with picks and shovels, and upon the housetops with stones to hurl upon the foe.' So runs the concluding sentence of one of the last of their appeals, printed on very red paper to designate the redness of their sentiments. Others propose plans for a more elaborate system of barricades, suggesting the planting of mines at the corner of the streets, so as to bury all Paris simultaneously in a Sardanapalian heap of ruins, in the event of failure or defeat."

DOMESTIC.

"DOMINIE JOHNSON'S" REBUKE.—Mrs. Conway's new theatre in Brooklyn is rising on the ashes of one of the oldest Episcopal churches of the city. The rector of the old church, Dominie Johnson, was one of the landmarks of the town. He was a sort of Rowland Hill, devotedly pious, full of wit and humor, distinguished for keen practical judgment and strong common sense, and he would have remained fifty years longer rector of the church, if he had lived as long. He was celebrated for his method of rebuke. His smitings were like those of the Psalmist—"An excellent oil that would not break the head." One Sunday he was greatly annoyed by the irreverence and talking of two young men in the gallery just before the service commenced. Dominie Johnson arose in the chancel and said: "I want to say a word to those young men sitting in the gallery. The Sexton did not do right to give them so poor a seat. I know they don't like it, and they have been talking about it ever since they have been in the church. They need not talk any more about it, for I will see next Sunday that they have a very comfortable seat provided for them." The Dominie, as he was called, received the undivided attention of the young men during the rest of the service.—Cor. Boston Journal.

☞ INOCULATION, which, prior to the great discovery of Jenner, was regarded as the best protection against the horrors of the small-pox, was practised in China at a very early period, and probably found its way to Europe by the same secret channels as those other arts whose footsteps are so difficult to trace. Western Europe obtained it from the Turks, Lady Mary Wortley Montague having made the first experiment of its efficacy by inoculating her son while residing at Constantinople.

☞ A very aged couple, Reuben Mason and his wife, after living together for sixty-five years in Morrisville, Vt., died suddenly a few days since—she at eleven o'clock in the morning, and he only ten minutes later. The shepherd king's elegy upon Saul and Jonathan will well apply here: "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided."

In Brief.

—— Germany is making extensive preparations to cultivate friendly relations with Japan. A German school is to be established at Yeddo at once. ——Columbia (South Carolina) advices say that another negro has been taken from his house in Darlington county and hanged by the Ku-klux.—— One of the most famous London physicians has written in favor of good living in the treatment of nervous disorders.——Advices from Buenos Ayres of April 12th state that the ravages of yellow fever are dreadful. The deaths from the disease have increased to seven hundred per day.—— Naples advices say it is probable that a meeting of Bishops will shortly be held at Fulda, when they will consider measures to be taken in the case of priests who oppose the new dogmas, and the relation of the Church to the Empire.——San Francisco is to have one cent, two cent, and three cent pieces. Heretofore their smallest coin has been the five cent piece.——The Methodists of Portland, Me., decide that no candidate for the ministry who uses tobacco should be admitted.

I. C. WELLCOME, Sec.

New York Campmeeting and Annual Conference.

Dear Bro. of New York Conference:—At a meeting of your committee in Rochester, May 1st, a quorum, as undersigned, being present, it was thought advisable, as suggested at last conference, and therefore decided unanimously, to hold a campmeeting in connection with the coming annual session in June. Certainly the cause demands a grand rally of all the working forces of this State to come up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

It needs but a casual christian outlook over this great State to know and to feel how lamentably low are the banners of Christ and the standards of truth. We feel like calling upon the men of God and our brethren in Christ in this State to awake to the duties of the hour. Has not the "enemy come in like a flood," and shall not "the spirit of the Lord lift up a standard against him"? Who has the spirit of the Lord—who? We trust in God that the echoes shall not answer alone, but that the good work already begun in our State may be a testimony to us in the increased energy with which it shall be carried on to the glory of God and the salvation of many. We want humble, unpretended, persevering efforts in much patience, prayer, fasting, and faith, that the glorious truths of the Bible may run and be glorified. Jesus is soon coming! Brethren, let us prepare ourselves for the short warfare now before us. Come one and all up to this meeting, and strengthen yourselves for earnest labor this season, if time continues. Hewers of wood and drawers of water, come, and every one that has a shoulder for burdens, come and enlist for service in the work of God.

The meeting will be held in Stephen N. Whitney's grove, one mile and a half south east of Albion, commencing on Thursday, June 8th, 1871, and to continue one week. All trains stop at Albion, and ample arrangements will be made for the transportation of persons and baggage to and from the camp-ground. Further particulars hereafter. WILLIAM E. BROWN, Secretary.

The business of conference, which is rather important for this session, election of officers, etc., will be disposed of in the morning and A. M. sessions, as early in the meeting as possible. Let all ministers and delegates be as early at the meeting as they can. The large new State Tent will be put upon the ground for dedication. The old "State Tent" and the "Lord's Tent" will also be on the ground for the accommodation of strangers, and such as cannot well supply themselves with family tents. Let none forget overcoats, thick shawls, quilts, and such other articles of clothing and bedding as are necessary for camping out.

It is expected that as many as can will associate themselves in family tents, providing themselves with board, etc. But there will be a small boarding tent, though sufficient to supply all those that cannot arrange for themselves, at reasonable rates.

WM. E. BROWN,
LAUREN GRINNELL,
A. RIGGS,
N. WITHINGTON,
N. MCCULLOCH,
Committee.

Wisconsin Campmeeting.

This meeting is to be held at Prairie du Sac (Upper Sauk), Sauk Co., on the old camp-ground, beginning on the 4th of June. We hope to witness a large gathering of pilgrims. Come with tents, if possible. All coming by R. R. between Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien will stop at Mazomanie, and take stage ten miles to the meeting. Those coming over the R. R. between Milwaukee and La Crosse, can take a steamboat every other day at Portage City, or a stage daily at Kilbourn City, direct to the meeting. Particulars hereafter.

O. S. KNAPP,
P. W. MATTS,
WM. SHELDON,
Committee.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The Wisconsin Conference will convene in connection with the State campmeeting at Prairie du Sac, and hold its first session on the 10th of June. Let the churches elect their delegates in time, and let all ministers who wish to unite come in season. Members and churches unable to attend, will please report by letter to the Secretary in season for the meeting. WM. SHELDON, Secretary.

Conference.

The Conference for Southern Indiana will commence at Jeffersonville, Wednesday, May 24th, 1871. As we wish all the State to be included in the organization, it is desirable that there should be a full representation from all parts of the State. Let the churches, then, send delegates and provide for their traveling expenses. The church at Jeffersonville will make ample provision for all who may attend. N. FIELD, Pastor of the Church at Jeffersonville.

Conference.

The Advent Conference of Nova Scotia will hold its next annual meeting at Bear River, Digby Co., Nova Scotia, commencing Saturday, June 3d. A general invitation is extended to all, especially to preaching brethren. The churches are particularly requested to send delegates.

J. J. WOODWORTH.

Notice.

Having closed my labors as pastor of the church at Darien, I am at liberty to labor in other fields, as the way may open. Address A. C. NEWELL, Darien City, N. Y.

Notice.

Our Conference, which has formerly been held at Carr's Corner, will be held at the school-house, on the South Ridge, in Dexter, Me. Come, brethren, to this monthly meeting, and work for the Lord. In behalf of the Brn., O. G. TRUNDY.

"THE MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM, OR REIGN OF CHRIST."—The above is the name of a work by Bro. W. N. Pile. I am pleased with the general tenor of the work. It can be read by all without having their minds particularly excited, if the young preacher does give occasionally the opinions of those who differ from him—some negative argument, which he certainly has a perfect right to do. Persons fond of expository literature will be benefited by its perusal. I am more and more a lover of the inspired maxim (1 Thess. 5: 21)—"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Will you do it?

This work is for sale by the author, Eld. W. N. Pile, Springfield, Mass., and at the Crisis Office. Price [illegible] cents. S. S. BREWER.

SATURDAY EVENING.

How sweet the evening shadows fall,
Advancing from the west,
As ends the weary week of toil,
And comes the day of rest.

Bright o'er the earth the star of eve
Her radiant beauty sheds;
And myriad sisters calmly weave
Their light around our heads.

Rest, man, from labor; rest from sin;
The world's hard contest close;
The holy hours with God begin,
Yield thee to sweet repose.

Bright o'er the earth the morning ray
Its sacred light will cast;
Fair emblem of the glorious day
That evermore shall last.

EXTRACTS FROM SPURZHEIM.

F. H. BURBANK.

"J. G. Spurzheim, M. D., of the Universities of Vienna and Paris, and Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of London," and the leading Phrenologist of the nineteenth century, was at heart in entire sympathy with the Mosaic and Pauline view of man. This is our opinions, based upon his writings.

Dr. Good, in his "Book of Nature," while trying to show that Spurzheim was not a Materialist, candidly admits that he speaks "upon this topic [the soul as a distinct being from the body.—F. H. B.] with a singular hesitation and reserve, more so, perhaps, than upon any other point whatever." Again he writes, "The mind of this celebrated craniologist seems to be wonderfully skeptical and bewildered upon the subject, and studiously avoids the important question of the capacity of the soul for an independent and future existence."

Spurzheim was not the only great mind that looked upon the popular theory of man as bewildering. Dr. Frederick Lees, of England, Christendom's greatest champion of the temperance cause, rejects that theory. Bp. Law, Archbp. Whately, Milton, Luther, Tyndale, and a host of others, reject the popular view. But we will now listen to the distinguished Spurzheim. The work from which I quote is entitled—"Phrenology, or the Doctrine of the Mental Phenomena."

"Till our day, the external forms of the brain and its parts only were known; their internal structure was quite overlooked; and the physiological ideas on the brain and nervous system, have been but a succession of errors, ever conformable to the prevailing philosophical system of the day.

"Besides the natural difficulty of inquiring into the causes of the functions, there are many artificial obstacles. The metaphysical notions of the schools have greatly impeded improvements in psychology. By substituting such metaphysical opinions, on all occasions for data, which the observation of nature would have furnished, physiologists, and even anatomists, came to regard those opinions as sacred. The schoolmen, for example, say the soul is simple, and therefore its material residence must be simple also, and all the nerves can have only one origin, because each individual has but one soul. Bonnet, Haller, and others, having its seat extended to the whole substance of the brain, were contradicted by the metaphysicians, who did not reflect, that a little more or less room could not enable them to explain the nature of the soul any better; nor that, according to the remarks of Van Swieten, Tiedemann, and others, a material point, in which all ideas and sensations should centre, is inconceivable, in consequence of the confusion and disorder which would result from such an arrangement. It appears, indeed, ridiculous, that the naturalist should be guided in his researches and inductions by such frivolous speculations. If metaphysicians, on the contrary, would observe facts, and ascertain the conditions with which these are coupled,—on which they depend,—their notions would never be at variance with the inferences of anatomy and physiology; and one science would not arrogate the right of setting bounds to the progress of another. The doctrine of a single origin and central point for all the nerves, is neither true nor possible; as may be verified by examination. If, after this, the metaphysician cannot comprehend the unity of his individual consciousness, I ask him, if he can understand how, in automatic life, such different apparatus concur by their varied functions in forming one whole? If he can reconcile in animal life, the occurrence of double organs with unity of function and simplicity of consciousness? if he can comprehend any single power in the material world?

"The principal artificial impediment to the improvement of psychology was the blameable method pursued in the study of human nature. All phenomena were explained by the imagination alone, or by hypothesis. There exist, even at the present day, philosophers who maintain that man is in nowise subjected to the laws of nature; that he can begin a series of actions independent of all cause and motive, and that his actions admit of no explanation. According to these schoolmen, man is separated from all other beings, and is considered as regulated by laws peculiar to himself. They attribute all his operations to his soul; several of them even give it unbounded power over the body. This negligence, in not comparing men with other beings, has been a great obstacle to the progress of psychology. . . .

"The doctrine of immaterial substances is not sufficiently amenable to the test of observation; it is founded on belief, and only supported by hypothesis. It is an essential item in metaphysics. Opinions upon such points must vary continually, and none can ever gain general assent. Those which flatter the wishes of man the most, and promise the greatest advantages, will be the most readily and generally believed . . .

"Metaphysicians are pleased to say that the mind acts independently of organization, and adduce in support of their opinion, the fact of the mind's having no consciousness of the organic conditions which Phrenology assigns as necessary to its manifestation.

"It is allowed, that the mind does not know, by intuition, that its operations are performed by means of the cerebral organization; but it is a general truth that the mind requires to observe the instruments of its actions, in order to know them. Voluntary motion is impossible without nerves and muscles, but the mind in itself has no consciousness of the existence of these organs. In the same way the external senses cannot without the respective nerves of each; the mind cannot see without eyes, nor hear without ears, but it becomes acquainted with these nervous apparatuses or instruments only by observation. In precisely the same manner it is, that the mind knows the instruments of its affective and intellectual operations; by observation alone. Thus, the arguments of the metaphysicians against the dependence of the mental functions on the brain are unfound, and leave the first principle of Phrenology; the brain is the organ of the mind, in its original integrity." (Phrenology, Vol. I.)

Ere long I will send extracts from the second volume, which I trust may prove both useful and instructive to the many readers of the Crisis. Many minds need just such articles as these, for they confirm the statements of the Bible in regard to man's physical nature. The tidings from the West and South are heart-cheering. Keep the ball rolling. Let unity and peace prevail. Our work is of immense importance. May it all be done to the glory of God. Peace be with all the saints.

OHIO A. C. CONFERENCE.

The second quarterly conference of the A. C. C. of Ohio met in Norwalk, Huron Co., April 22nd, 1871, at ten A. M., with Pres. E. McCullock in the chair. Those present from localities where there is no church organization were invited to participate. Rockbridge, Norwalk, Fairfield, Nevada, W. Salem, and Jackson, of Wayne Co., Hartland of Huron Co., Olmstead of Cayahuga Co., Berlin of Erie Co., and Toledo, were represented.

Eld. G. W. Stetson reported the condition of the church at Rockbridge as growing, and though young, were determined. They have built for themselves a house wherein to worship, which will soon be dedicated. They need help from the Conf. to give them preaching.—Eld. J. M. Judson reported Olmstead. He is preaching at that point on the first Sunday of every month. There is a prevalence of truth at that point, and although they have no regular organization, are ready to work.—Bro. Erastus Cone of Toledo reported quite a number of believers in his locality. They take the Times and the Crisis. Thinks if they had preaching could organize a church.—Bro. Joseph Barker reported the church in Fairfield as steadfast in the faith, and in a growing condition. Four additions since last October.—Bro. Sam'l Lyon reported the church in Norwalk on the increase, and a growth in the church membership; are still looking for Jesus.—Bro. F. S. Walker reported the church in Nevada. Had a revival in the winter, with four additions to the church. Have regular preaching by Eld. E. McCullock, who also preaches regularly at Bucyrus and the Union. Have a large and flourishing Sabbath School of about eighty members.—John Eshleman of W. Salem, and Joseph Eshleman of Jackson, Wayne Co., have just come into the faith and want the truth spread there.

The business committee reported the following, which was adopted:

1st. That under the circumstances we consider the numerous calls from the different parts of the State to "come over and help us" demand an exertion and a sacrifice from us, as a conference, to respond in Christian love and energy; we therefore offer the following consideration:

Resolved, That we appoint Bro. G. W. Stetson an Evangelist to travel and visit those places where God in his providence may open for the dissemination of truth, according to the faithful record.

2nd. And whereas, money in different localities has been pledged to sustain a Tent in the field, but not to a sufficient amount to justify such a course; we therefore invite and earnestly entreat the donors to permit the amount of their pledges to be applied to the sustaining of said Evangelist in his labors of love.

Resolved, That we recommend the committee appointed by the annual conference at Nevada to solicit pledges, to continue their efforts with renewed energy for the maintenance of said Evangelist.

Resolved, That we heartily recommend Bro. Geo. W. Stetson as an Evangelist, and commend him to the faithful in Christ Jesus.

The committee appointed by the President is as follows:—A. B. Benedict, J. M. Treadwell, D. W. Huls, S. F. Rogers, A. Mackey, Martin Bacon, P. T. Light, Dr. H. Kesler, Eber Bradley, Thos. Boorman, Henry Rust, Wm. Siddall, Geo. English, N. R. Cheadle, G. B. Terwilleger, Aaron Rittenhouse, Erastus Cone, Lucy Spoor, Philo Bradford, Dr. C. S. Hyde, John Eshleman and Joseph Eshleman.

Any one desiring the labors of G. W. Stetson will please correspond directly with him at Olena, Huron Co., Ohio.—The Secretary was instructed to prepare the minutes for publication in the Crisis and Times.—Adjourned to call of the Board.

W. F. JEFFERSON, Sec'y.

R. I. AND CONN. CONFERENCE.

The R. I. and Eastern Conn. Conference of Reformers met at North Scituate, R. I., April 5th, at half past two P. M. The afternoon was occupied in social prayer and conference, and the evening by J. S. Collins in preaching.

Thursday, ten o'clock, met for business. The following preaching brethren were present:—A. Durfee, E. Bellows, J. S. Collins, E. R. Wood, H. C. Hopkins, D. O. Hopkins, J. Eldridge, B. Roberts, D. V. Corey. Delegates present from different churches:—No. Scituate,—N. A. Angell, A. Bishop, R. R. Knight. River Point,—C. P. Turner. Foster,—W. P. Durfee. Danielsonville, Conn.,—N. Shumway. Putnam, Conn.—H. N. Reed. The clerk being absent, N. A. Angell was chosen clerk pro tem. Minutes of last meeting read and accepted, with slight correction of report of No. Scituate church. Treasurer's report read and accepted.

REPORTS OF CHURCHES. River Point, R. I. Social meetings on Sundays when no preaching, which are interesting and spirited. Have given one sister a letter to join the brethren and sisters at Lester Hall at Providence. Have been encouraged by the addition of seven members. The cause is still progressing. Death, the terrible enemy of man, has taken two of our number away. Preaching by Bro. A. Durfee once a month.

Lafayette, R. I.:—Still holding on to the "good part." Number only twenty-five under the new organization. Some are in good working order, others are backward and neglectful of duty. Preaching by E. R. Wood, Sr. E. Crumb, and J. J. Northup.

Wyoming, R. I.:—Have some who are determined by the grace of God to reach the kingdom. A few are indifferent and careless. One added since last meeting of the conference. Present number eighteen. Preaching regularly once a month, and generally two prayer-meetings a month.

West Gloucester, R. I.:—A strong church. Progressing in the good cause. Preaching by M. R. Phetteplace.

Arlington, R. I.:—Are holding on to "the faith once delivered to the saints,' expecting the Master to set up his kingdom soon. But little preaching the past winter. Expecting more this summer.

North Scituate, R. I.—Many have lost all interest, others have but little. A few old, experienced soldiers, and some who are younger in the cause, are at their posts, looking for His appearing and kingdom. Bro. W. Kellaway has preached to us part of the time. Bro. B. Roberts and J. S. Collins have preached here once each.

Foster, R. I.—In a low condition, although some are trying to serve the Lord. No regular preaching since fourth Sabbath in January. Bro. E. Bellows has been with us a number of times. His labors have not been fruitless. Three have recently joined with us.

Peace Dale, R. I.—A few striving to enter in at the strait gate. Preaching every Sunday. The Sunday School is good, with an average of sixty-five members.

Danielsonville, Ct.—Nothing very flattering nor discouraging, but about the same as last quarter. Preaching half the time. Bro. E. Bellows preaches here one Sunday in each month. Mean to stand by the old landmarks.

Putnam, Ct.—In good order. This church was received into the conference at this session.

Business. The Campmeeting committee gave a verbal report, which was accepted, and the committee was discharged. Voted to have a campmeeting in R. I. during the year 1871. Brn. E. Bellows, A. Durfee, N. Shumway, E. R. Wood, and W. Kellaway, were appointed a committee to arrange for time and place and all other matters which need be for a campmeeting. The following preaching brethren gave interesting and encouraging reports of their labors: A. Durfee, E. Bellows, M. R. Phetteplace, B. Roberts, J. Eldridge, D. V. Corey, J. S. Collins, D. O. Hopkins, W. Kellaway, and C. H. Sweet.

Resolved, That we recognize Brn. D. O. Hopkins, W. A. Fenn, R. W. Pierce, and J. Hemenway, as members in good standing in this conference. (The names of these brethren were, by oversight, not transferred from the old to the new list of membership.)

Resolved, That those women who labor with us in the gospel be invited to become members of this conference, and have equal privileges with the brethren in the transaction of business, and vote on any question coming before the conference. This resolution was adopted by vote without any discussion or asking of questions. But some thoughts were shortly afterwards expressed which brought the subject up for discussion. The vote adopting the resolution was rescinded. A spirited discussion followed. Most of the brethren present took part in the discussion, some speaking several times. Finally the subject was laid on the table for further discussion at the next meeting.

The Word was preached by Brn. Collins, Durfee, Eldridge, Wood, and Phetteplace, to the edification of those present. The attendance was good. Adjourned to meet at Putnam, Ct., July 5th, at half past two o'clock P. M.

Gems.

— Doubts are not overcome with violence, but with reason and understanding.

— Not the goods which we have acquired, but the good that we have imparted, will indicate the success of our lives.

There is many a rest in the road of life,
If we would only stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would make it.
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

— Sow belief is the handmaid of wisdom. He that knows not when to hold his peace, knows not when to speak.

— All things on earth are created for men; and men are created to worship God, and aid one another.

— It is pleasant to remember that by doing our best in our station, however humble it may be, we can each serve Jesus just as acceptably as those who occupy the most responsible positions.

— God giveth his wrath by weight, and mercy without measure.

— A genuine zeal is very jealous of self, but a false one is most secure upon the sins of others.

— We never know how profitable the presence of a friend is, until we have felt the want by his absence for a time.

God alone knows what pain
Some hearts endure;
How they need sympathy,
Tender and pure.
We oft in thoughtlessness
Grief round them wind;
Oh! when we can, to all
Let us be kind.

— Man has two chambers in his heart; the one for himself, the other for a friend; but the latter had better be empty than filled with that which is false.

— He that delights only in riches, delights in a dangerous pleasure.

— Happiness has many friends. The sunshine of prosperity has attraction for all those who love to bask within its influence, hoping to share in its sweets.

— Be glad of that day wherein thy tongue hath not mis-said, and thy heart hath repented of thy sins.

— Bad habits are the thistles of the heart, and every indulgence of them is a seed from which will spring a new crop of weeds.

— A friend loveth always, a lover but for a time.

— A good conscience is a continual quietness.

CASTING OUT DEVILS.

L. BOUTELL.

I see by reading an April number of the Advent Herald, that they have had a revival in Attleboro, Mass., in Bro. Geo. Childs' congregation, through the labors of a Bro. Mudge with himself. A successful work of grace has been going on. About eighty souls have been converted, and the devils, or unclean spirits, have been cast out, and they are clothed and in their right minds.

This seems to have been evangelically done. I feel glad and rejoice, any way, to get the demons out, and Christ put on; and we will not forbid any in this godlike work, nor "call fire from heaven to consume them," "even though they follow not us"; for "he that is not for us is against us," saith the blessed Jesus, the life-giving Son of God. We being workers together with him, and having his mind, shall delight to see the work of God in converting men from idols to the living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. So we will praise the Lord our Savior and Redeemer.

The Lord help us to be so sweetly in his love and fellowship that we shall rejoice when good is done in this direction, by any body, or any where. Let us be where we can but rejoice when men are being saved by the agency of truth, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

MULLER AND HIS ORPHAN-HOUSE.

"What do you think of Muller's orphan houses?" I said to a man who gave himself out as a liberal-minded Catholic. He looked at me as if he wished to convince me of the truth of what he was going to say: "Sir Ashley Downs, here in Bristol, has presented the most wonderful spectacle in the world since the founding of these houses. A poor man, and a foreigner besides, falls upon his knees in this city, and in answer to his prayers alone there rise up one, two, three, four, five houses, which would be cheap at $1,250,000. I am not a rich man personally, but I can see this after ten years' observation, that God blesses Bristol because Muller resides in it." Indeed, everywhere in Bristol, ask where you will, all, if they do not speak so decidedly as the above, still with one voice express their admiration of this noble work.

There are now 2,050 children in the Institution. If any person knows of a child who is a proper subject of its care, the applicant is required to give in writing the date of the child's birth, the names of his parents, and any other information of importance. If the child is healthy and under fourteen years of age, he is admitted. First he is carefully bathed; the clothes in which he came are laid away for him as a memorial, and he is dressed in the uniform of the orphans. The boys wear brown pants, dark blue jackets, and simple cloth caps. The girls wear blue striped frocks, a grey plaid shawl, and a straw hat covering the ears and shielding the face,—of an old fashion, but a fashion dictated by delicacy. Muller does not generally read the Paris fashions. Every child has two suits.

The day in the Institution begins at six in the morning, when all are required to rise. Between that hour and eight every one has time to wash, dress, make his bed and pray in secret. Then follow breakfast and family prayer. At ten o'clock is school time. All the usual branches are taught. Particular attention is paid to writing. Twelve o'clock, play time; twelve and a half, dinner. They have meat five times a week. The afternoons are spent in alternate play, study and work. All their clothes, except shoes, are cut, fitted and made by the children. They also do the washing. At nine o'clock in the evening, all is still. Every moment, day and night, the children are subject to the careful oversight of pious teachers, male and female.

When the boys are fourteen years old, they are taken to a safe place to learn a trade. The girls remain in the Institution till they are sixteen or eighteen, and then go out to service. Most of the number go out Christians.—Christian World.

MANNA.

[From Bishop Hall's "Meditations."]

— God's merciful humiliations of his own are sometimes so severe, that they seem to differ little from desertions; yet at the worst, he loves us bleeding: and when we have smarted enough, we shall be sensible of it.

— If that roaring lion, that goes about seeking whom he may devour, find us alone among the vineyards of the Philistines, where is our hope? not in our heels; he is swifter than we: not in our weapons; we are naturally unarmed; not in our hands, which are weak and languishing; but in the spirit of God, by whom we can do all things. If God fight in us, who can resist him? There is a stronger lion in us, than that against us.

— Softness of address is a great help towards the good effect of an admonition. Roughness and rigor, many times harden those hearts, which meekness would have melted to repentance. Whether we sue, or convince, or reprove, little good is gotten by bitterness.

— The less a man strives for himself, the more is God his champion. It is the honor of great persons, to undertake the patronage of their client: how much more will God avenge his elect, which cry to him day and night? He who said, I seek not mine own glory, adds, but there is one that seeks it and judges. God takes his part ever who fights not for himself.

— A good nature is ready to answer courtesies: we cannot do too much for a thankful man. And if a courteous heathen reward the watering of sheep in this bountiful manner, how shall our God recompense but a cup of cold water, that is given to a disciple?

— Christ's love is the church's fire; thither bring thy heart when it is cold, frozen, and dead; meditate on his love, and pray until you can say, "He loved me, and gave himself for me."

— The danger of mistaking is requited by honest minds with more than restitution. It is not enough to find our own hearts clear in suspicious actions, except we satisfy others.

— It is too much tenderness to respect the censures and constructions of others, when we have a direct word from God.

— Man has two chambers in his heart; the one for himself, the other for a friend; but the latter had better be empty than filled with that which is false.

A HINT TO MEDDLERS.

A little white rose bloomed all by herself in a nook in the hedge.

"Ah," cried the wind, in passing, "what a pity you should be be suffocated there! I will blow a hole in the hedge, and the breeze shall find you through it."

"I pray, sir, you will leave me as I am; I breathe well enough," said the rose.

"I know better," said the wind, and rent the hedge as he passed on, and the breeze rushed through and made her tremble.

"You are not well placed there," he said, as he came by again; "I will give you a better berth than that."

"I beg you will leave me as I am; I like my place well enough, if it were not for the gap you have made," said the rose.

But the wind would not listen; he broke her stem, and she fell to the ground.

"Oh, you mustn't lie there," he cried; "I will carry you to the spot that will suit you exactly."

"Nay, I entreat you to let me lie and fade on this pleasant grass," said the rose, beseechingly: but he caught her up and whirled her on a few yards, when her petals were scattered and her leafless stem was cast on the hedge.

"How is this?" exclaimed the wind.

"How is it? this is how it is," replied the hedge, "there are some folks that are never satisfied but when they are meddling in other folks' affairs; they think nobody can be happy except in their way; and you are one of them; and this bare stem is a specimen of your work."

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—The first book read and the last book laid aside by every child, is the conduct of its mother.

First, give yourself, and then your child, to God. It is but giving him his own. Not to do it is robbing God.

Let your whole course be to raise your child to a high standard. Do not sink into childishness yourself.

Give not heedless commands, but when you command, require prompt obedience.

Never permit cruelty, even to an insect.

Cultivate sympathy with your child in all lawful joys and sorrows.

Be sure that you never correct a child until you know it deserves correction.

Never allow your child to whine, or fret, or to bear grudges.

Early inculcate frankness, candor, generosity, magnanimity, patriotism, and self-denial.

Never mortify the feelings of your child by upbraiding it with dullness; but do not inspire it with self-conceit.

Pray with and for your child, often and heartily.

Encourage all attempts at self-improvement.

Never deceive nor break a promise to a child.

Reprove not a child severely in the presence of strangers.

Remember that life is a vapor, and that you and your child may be called out of time into eternity any day.—S. S. World.

TRUE HEROISM.—The truest heroism is that which is unseen and unknown. Public martyrdom of every shade has a certain eclat and popularity connected with it, that will often bear man up to endure with courage its trials; but those who suffer alone, without sympathy, for truth or principle, those who, unnoticed by men, maintain their post, and in obscurity, and amid discouragement, patiently fulfill their trust, these are the real heroes of the age, and the suffering they bear is the truest martyrdom.

☞ DURING Dr. Payson's last illness, a friend coming into his room remarked familiarly, "Well, I am sorry to see you lying here on your back."

"Do you know what God puts us on our backs for?" asked Dr. Payson, smiling.

"No," was the answer.

"In order that we may look upward."

☞ A TRAVELER once visiting the lighthouse at Calais, said to the keeper:

"But what if one of your lights should go out at night?"

"Never—impossible!" he cried. "Sir, yonder are ships sailing to all parts of the world. If to-night one of my burners were out, in six months I should hear from America, or India, saying that on such a night the lights at Calais light-house gave no warning, and some vessel had been wrecked. Ah, sir! sometimes I feel when I look upon my lights, as if the eyes of the whole world were fixed upon me." No one knows how much sorrow and suffering may ensue from a single neglect of duty.

☞ IT is an easy matter to commence tunneling a mountain; the difficulty is to drive it through to the other side. Yet this is done, not by a resolution or single effort, but stroke by stroke. Skill, labor, and perseverance are thus necessary in every department of life to accomplish whatever one ought to do.

☞ I AM coming, says Christ, therefore watch! Am coming suddenly, therefore watch! Am coming quickly, therefore watch! The Spirit and the Bride say, Come! Watch, therefore! The night is far spent, the day is at hand. Watch!

LITTLE THINGS.

"He that contemneth small things, shall fall by little and little."—ECCL. 19: 1.

"Oh, it is such a little thing,
It cannot be worth while!"
This is the enemy's device,
Our spirits to beguile.

We do not know; we may not judge;
For, in our Savior's sight,
The golden gifts were counted poor
Beside the widow's mite.

If flowers and mosses did not grow,
As well as stately trees,
How much of pleasure we should miss
From little things like these.

And He who formed the universe,
Has made each insect's wing
So marvelously beautiful,
And yet "a little thing."

The great Creator, though his throne
Is far above the sky,
Will stoop to hear an infant's prayer,
And listen to his sigh.

Then if, by kindly look or tone,
We can draw forth a smile,
And cheer some spirit's loneliness,
Is it not worth our while?

In climbing up a steep ascent,
Perchance we may have found
Some aid from the poor slender stems
That trail along the ground;

So little duties, well performed,
Will help the soul to rise
To heights, which those can ne'er attain
Who little things despise.

HOW TO FORGIVE.

"Good-bye, grandmother," said young Stanley. "I am going to the market-town, and shall not come home until day after to-morrow."

"The Lord go with you, my dear lad," said the aged grandmother; "but before you go I want to know if you have settled the quarrel with Ned Brooks."

"I have settled it, that I shall have nothing more to do with him. He has treated me very badly, I do not intend to treat him badly in return, but I do not intend to have anything to do with him."

"Have you forgiven him?"

"I do not intend to do him any harm."

"Have you forgiven him?"

"He has not asked me to forgive him."

"Remember what the Savior says: 'When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any; for if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.' We are allowed to ask forgiveness for ourselves, only as we forgive others. It is not safe for us to live a single day without being forgiven. If we would be forgiven we must forgive others."

"Well, grandmother, I will try to do my duty. Good-bye."

The young man went to the market-town. He was busy during the day, and thought but little of what he had said to his grandmother. At night when he came to lie down on his bed, he thought of what she had said. He thought of Ned Brooks and he became angry. As he thought of his own sins, and then he felt his need of pardon. He thought of the words of his Lord: "If ye forgive not men their trespasses." He felt that he must forgive Ned Brooks even though he did not turn and say, I repent. He tried to do it, and failed. He then knelt in prayer, and asked for a forgiving spirit, and continued asking till he felt that he could forgive all.

RAIN FROM HEAVEN.

Once a little girl who loved her Savior very much for having so loved her, came to her clergyman with eighteen shillings for a Missionary society.

"How did you collect so much—is it all your own?" the clergyman asked.

"Yes, sir, I earned it."

"But how, Mary? You are so poor."

"Please, sir, when I thought how Jesus had died for me I wanted to do something for him; and I heard how money was wanted to send the good news out to the heathen, and as I had no money of my own I earned this by collecting rainwater and selling it to the washerwomen for a half-penny a bucket."

"My dear child," said the clergyman, "I am very thankful that your love to your Savior has led you to work so long and patiently for him; now I shall gladly put down your name as a missionary subscriber."

"Oh! no, sir, please not my name."

"Why not, Mary?"

"Please, sir, I would rather no one knew it but him; I should like it to be put down as 'Rain from heaven.'"

"RELIGION TAKES THE MAD OUT."—So said a little girl of five summers, during our late meeting. This little girl knew quite well that her father, who was a member of the church, was at variance with an ungodly neighbor, for she had often heard the matter talked of in the home circle. When that neighbor, who would not speak to her father, became a seeker of religion, the subject of their difficulty was often discussed in her hearing. She came to the just conclusion that they were mad with each other.

When this little girl, who was a member of an infant class in our Sabbath school, saw her father approach that penitent neighbor at the mourner's bench, and saw the once revengeful man leap from his seat, and throw his arms around the neck of her father, and rejoice aloud; and when she saw him also meet her mother in the aisle with similar demonstrations of forgiveness and joy, her little head began to reason, and the conclusion she reached was this: "Mother, religion takes the mad out of people."

Here is embodied thought for a volume—a fine motto for a sermon. Let who will work it out.—Christian Standard.

☞ "WHAT ugly feet!" said a little girl, pointing from a window to another girl about her own age who was passing. To her surprise her mother answered:

"I think Caroline has the most beautiful feet of any girl in the village."

"Why, mother! just look at them!" she replied.

Then her mother said:

"'Beautiful feet are they that go
Swiftly to lighten another's woe
Through summer's heat and winter's snow.'"

"Now, Caroline's feet are carrying her on errands of mercy; sometimes to read to blind Peggie, sometimes to amuse poor lame Eddie West, and sometimes to hunt up new Sunday school scholars among neglected children. I think her feet must be beautiful, for the Bible says: 'How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace.'"

A WISE REPLY.—"Would you like to be a judge?" said a gentleman one day to a little boy. The child, after thinking a minute, replied, "I think I should like better still to teach children about Jesus dying to save them. That would make them love and obey him; and, if they loved and obeyed him, they would not need a judge."

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

CHRISTIANITY AND HEALTH.

The Maker of man knows what is for man's good. He understands man's needs, and his gifts and provisions meet the exact necessities of his creatures.

The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life. Length of days, and long life, and peace, are found in the path of obedience to him. The temperance, moderation, and chastity which the Bible requires, are just what any wise physician would prescribe, whether he followed his own prescription or not. Every passion and emotion which the Scripture forbids, is a source of physical disorder. Anger has laid many a man in an untimely grave. Excess of wine has slain thousands. Lusts and revelings war against the body as well as against the soul. Malice and envy cause indigestion and countless ills. Anxious care for the morrow has sent many a man crazed to the hospital, and many another, lifeless to the grave. Rage is worse than a fever. Grief wastes and withers its pale victims, and drags them to the tomb. Ambition gnaws away the life, which becomes a self-consuming sacrifice; and every base and godless desire works ruin and disorder in the physical nature of mankind.

On the contrary, every sentiment and emotion prescribed and enjoined by the sacred Scriptures, is healthful and life-giving. The love, joy and peace, which are the fruits of the Spirit; the patience which is quiet under reproach; the charity which suffereth long and is kind; the meekness that bends before an assailing blast; the hope that sings her songs of gladness through the night of tears; the faith that rests secure in trouble as in the hollow of the Almighty's hand; the trust which has no anxiety for foes or raiment, or for tomorrow's cares; the knowledge that all things are working for good, and will surely come out right at last; the surety that all is well, in sickness and health, for time and for eternity; the feeling that life's great care has not been neglected, but that the concerns of eternity are forever settled;—and in fact every thought, emotion, and peculiarity which distinguishes Christianity from superstition, and divine grace from human nature, conduces to health, happiness, and physical perfection.

If we pursue this subject, we shall find that while the precepts and practice of Christianity extend the average duration of physical life, the results of unchristian and heathenish courses work sickness and death in their most terrible forms among the sons of men.

Whence come those plagues and pestilences which desolate cities and nations? From lands where the gospel sheds its light? By no means. The cholera is called "Asiatic," and it, with the more desolating Plague, comes from eastern countries, where humanity lies festering in filth and sin; famishing and perishing for lack of the knowledge which ever attends the diffusion of the light of life.

From the ensanguined fields where men butcher each other for the amusement of kings, amid the pomp and glitter of military show, and where rotting carcasses of mourned and longed-for sons, and brothers, and fathers, fill the air with the effluvia of dissolution, sweeps the dire and deadly pestilence which falls like a withering curse upon the lowest, the filthiest, the most degraded, and godless inhabitants of the purlieus of our cities.

Thus righteousness ever tends to life, while sin brings death and ruin to the race. Why is this? Can infidels tell? Who knows? The answer is plain, God is the author both of nature and revelation, and each is fitted to the other as the wax to the seal, and in his favor alone is life and peace and blessing.—The Christian.

FLATULENCE.—Flatulence is simply one of the many symptoms of indigestion. Whatever tends to weaken the digestive powers of the stomach and bowels may be counted among the causes of flatulence, and whatever aids in improving the digestion may be reckoned among its remedies. Plain, easily digested food, not over two or three kinds at a meal, two meals per day, no eating between meals, no drink at meals, slow eating and thorough mastication, moderate quantity of food, gentle exercise, and thorough kneading of the bowels after each meal, as much out-door exercise as strength will allow, climbing hills, sawing or chopping wood, rowing, etc., where practicable, are the most important things to be observed in the hygienic home treatment of this very common affection. In the case of this correspondent, he probably eats too much, too many kinds at a meal, too often, food too difficult for digestion, does not masticate his food sufficiently, and does not take enough exercise. Vegetarians can and often do live as unhygienically as meat-eaters. One of their greatest errors is eating too much. Many of them seem to think that because vegetables, bread, and fruit are healthful that the more they eat the better. They had better eat meat, and eat a moderate quantity, than to over-eat as many do.—Herald of Health.

EFFECT OF WEARING CORSETS.—The chest may be deformed by compression during infancy, and by many of the injurious practices of mothers and nurses; but the chief agents in distorting this part of the skeleton are the various kinds of corsets. It is especially from the sixth to the last rib that this pressure is exercised; these, from their greater flexibility, are pressed inward, and all the organs within them—lungs, heart, stomach, liver, etc.—are more or less changed in their position and form; the amount of air introduced into the lungs is lessened, the circulation of the blood through the heart is impeded, the stomach cannot perform properly its functions of digestion, and the liver is displaced downward and presses upon the intestines, laying the foundation for diseases of the chest, consumption, heart disease, dyspepsia, constipation, and many other ills which shorten and embitter the lives of most of the votaries of fashion.—Health and Home.

☞ THE city of Dublin has taken the initiative in certain sanitary matters with a vigor which we earnestly trust may be imitated by all other towns. A raid has been very properly made on the confectionary and sweet stuff makers, and the poisonous wares found therein submitted for analysis. The result was even worse than those detailed from previous experiments. Chromate of lead, cochineal, vermilion (or mercuric sulphide,) were the principal poisons in vogue, the first named in very large quantities. Here is the autopsy of a Dublin confectioner's baby:—The cradle was made of Plaster-of-Paris and sugar; the body of the baby of sugar and rice starch; its eyes were Prussian blue; its cheeks of cochineal, and its clothes colored with chromate of lead. This one artificial infant had poison enough about it to have killed at least two live ones; and Heaven knows how many children have been sent to their last account by these manufacturers, not only in Dublin, but elsewhere.—Good Health.

☞ THE most certain purifier of the breath is health of body. Temperate living, early hours, cleanliness, and exercise, will do much towards keeping the breath sweet.

O CITY OF THE JASPER WALL.

O city of the jasper wall,
And of the pearly gate!
For thee, amid the storms of life,
Our weary spirits wait.
We long to walk the streets of gold
No mortal feet have trod;
We long to worship at the shrine,
The temple of our God!
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight!
Of every land the brightest, best,
When shall we there find peace and rest?

O city where they need no light
Of sun or moon or star,
Could we with eye of faith but see
How bright thy mansions are,
How soon our doubts would flee away,
How strong our trust would grow,
Until our hearts should lean no more
On trifles here below.
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight!
Of every land the brightest, best,
When shall we there find peace and rest!

O city where the shining gates
Shut out all grief and sin,
Well may we yearn amid earth's strife
Thy holy peace to win.
Yet must we meekly bear the cross,
Nor seek to lay it down
Until our Father brings us home,
And gives the promised crown.
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight!
Of every land the brightest, best,
Soon shall we there find peace and rest.

IMMORTAL JEWELS.

D. D. LATHROP.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it; and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. For behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—MAL. 3: 16-18; 4: 1.

The Lord of hosts is soon going to make up a fine lot of immortal, untarnishing jewels. They will be his never-dying children, glorified and made equal to the angels of God. The apostle James says: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." James 1: 12. A crown of life, such as the Lord has promised to them that love him, is the most valuable jewel that man can possess. Kings, queens and nobles have paid thousands of dollars for pearls. Cleopatra continually wore in her ears two of the largest pearls ever found, one of which was valued at five hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Julius Cæsar presented a pearl to the mother of Brutus, for which he paid six million sesterces, or three hundred and thirty thousand dollars. Ear-rings, set with pearls, were much worn. They were also woven in the hair; but the price paid for the jewelry was not so large as in Rome. A head-dress was valued at two hundred and fifty to four hundred dollars; and a single fine string cost about three hundred and fifty or four hundred and fifty dollars.

John, the Revelator, wrote of the woman (Babylon) "arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls"; and of the merchants weeping at the sight of her downfall, who had dealt largely in this kind of jewelry. See Rev. 17th and 18th chapters. None of these things can compare in value and brilliancy with the crown of which Paul speaks: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8. These immortal jewels will be exceedingly brilliant, shining with radiant glory. The angel said to Daniel, the prophet, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." Dan. 12: 2, 3.

Matthew says: "Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." Matt. 17: 1, 2. This was before Jesus was immortalized; hence it was not real, but it was a vision, or transfigure. Matt. 17: 9; Acts 10: 10; 22: 17. Paul said, "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his GLORIOUS BODY, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. 3: 20, 21. When the righteous are thus crowned with glory, honor, and immortality, they will be "equal unto the angels." This crown is to be given at the last trump, when the Lord comes. If each angel possesses such a glorious body as those who rolled away the great stone from our Lord's tomb, at the sight of whom the military guards fell as dead men, there is a good deal of meaning in the following language of Jesus: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. 25: 31. "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn; and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and GREAT GLORY." Matt. 24: 30.

When the tares are all gathered and burned up as chaff; when the heavens and earth by fire are cleansed from evil and made a fit habitation for glorified beings; it will then be called the new heaven and the new earth. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 43. O, what a delightful place the new earth will be. There will be no more sea, but the land will be drained by pleasant rivers, on whose banks sweet flowers bloom. Trees of beautiful form will spread their evergreen branches, as if to invite the beholders to come and regale themselves on their golden fruit; while ever the feathered songsters are warbling forth the songs of paradise. The earth will be replenished with an innumerable company of immortal jewels. Songs of everlasting joy will be there. White robes, bright crowns, and harps of gold, will augment the glory and bliss of those who will have been made rich by inheriting this everlasting kingdom. These will have been spared in that great burning day "that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall BURN THEM UP, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them NEITHER ROOT NOR BRANCH." Mal. 4: 1. This is the process of cleansing the earth.

"Then shall ye return." Coming again from the land of the enemy, death, is meant by this returning. "Come again," "brought again," and "bring," are used in a similar sense. See Isa. 31: 15-17; Heb. 13: 20; 1 Thess. 4: 14. BIBLE CHEMISTRY, or, the refining and purifying process. The material of which this immortal jewelry is to be made must first be made pure; for none but the "pure in heart shall see God." Matt. 5: 8. "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me; then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression. Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my Redeemer." Ps. 19: 12-14. "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me." Ps. 51: 10. "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried." Dan. 12: 10. "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Acts 2: 38. "And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us." Rom. 5: 3-5.

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." 1 Cor. 3: 11-15. "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every Son whom he receiveth." Heb. 12: 6. "The just shall live by faith." Gal. 3: 11. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." 1 Pet. 1: 22.

"And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, CHARITY." 1 Pet. 1: 5-7. Thus you see, dear brethren, that the Lord's jewels are to be made of the pure metal, or they would not stand the test. May it be our happy lot, to be found among the shining ones.

Words by M. V. SALTMARSH. CONSOLATION. Music by GEO. E. LEE.

1. Sweet it is to know, When the heart with grief is bend-ing low, When by sor-row press'd,
2. He would have us bring Ev-'ry tri-al that thro' life may seem Dark and hard to bear,
That we may in hum-ble prayer All our wants to Je-sus bear, And by him be blest.
Un-to him, and he'll im-part Comfort, strength to ev-'ry heart, And our bur-dens share.

3 Storms of life may blow,
Brightest scenes of earth be mixed with woe,
Friends may droop and die;
When no earthly hope can cheer,
All is darkness, all is drear,
And alone we sigh.—

4 We may always find
Sweet relief, if, with a trusting mind,
We to Jesus go;
Yes, in Him we'll find a friend,
Who will all our steps attend,
Through this vale below.

THE WICKED MUST BE RAISED.

NAAMAN GRANT.

"In Adam's fall, we sinned all." No such thing. Adam's fall brought death upon all. Adam died for his own sins, but not one of his posterity have ever died for their sins, yet death is the penalty for sin. A man may, for a certain crime, be condemned and put to death; yet had his execution been delayed a few days, or even hours, he might have died a natural death; so his execution would only be a shortening, or depriving him, for his crime, of a few days of his life; if peradventure he should die a natural death a few days previous to the day for his execution, it could not be said he died for his crime. Then why should man die, if he dies not for Adam's sin, nor for his own? Who can get a clean thing out of that which is unclean? Adam's whole system, by sin, had become subject to death; therefore, whatever sprang from him must die, as the stream cannot rise above the fountain. Justice could not hold Adam's posterity under death for his sin, as they had nothing to do in that which brought it upon them. It came upon them without their knowledge or consent. They had no trial for life; therefore, in justice, they must have a trial of their own for eternal life, as Adam did; not this present life, that they lost in Adam. This trial is in this life, and does not end until man is dead. "After this the judgment." How can a dead man appear in judgment? for "the dead know not anything."

To leave man forever under the power of death for Adam's sin would be unjust. Therefore justice demands that they shall be raised from this death, and brought back into the life they lost in Adam, and there be judged according to the deeds done here under this trial, there to stand or fall for themselves. Then the wicked will die for their own sins, "which is the second death." Therefore all men must have a resurrection unto life—not eternal life, but the life they lost in Adam. This is "the free gift" which "came upon all men unto justification of life"; "for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

SPOILED THROUGH PHILOSOPHY.

C. R. FASSETT.

The apostle admonishes christians—"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men." Col. 2: 8. There is true philosophy, mental, moral, physical, and theological; and it is yet to be proved that the Scriptures are not in harmony with all these. There is, however, much false philosophy put forth in "vain deceit" by learned men, calculated to beguile the ignorant and the simple christian, as well as feed the minds of the self-conceited. Also, there is true science, and the Bible is in harmony with it; while there is that which claims to be science which is very far from it. There are, too, many false deductions from both real science and true philosophy, by which the word of God is sought to be interpreted, and is thus "corrupted, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." Never in any age was there more of this, or greater efforts made to undermine the word of God by men of learning, who endeavor to array the sciences and their philosophies against the truth of revelation. Christians, "beware!"

If there is a God wise enough and good enough in the universe to give a written revelation, we have reason to believe he has done it, and not left his intelligent and responsible creatures to guess what he has done, what he will do, and what his will is respecting them; or to grope their way amid the dim light of nature, and by perverted human reason and finite intelligence. If this be so, the Bible is this divine book; for it stands out before the world as "The Book" of books, and has through all the generations of men to this day. The Bible, therefore, should be the rule and standard by which all philosophy and science, whether true or false, is to be tested; not that the latter are to determine what God's plainer written revelation teaches. Let christians cling to it, and not be "spoiled through philosophy"; and "avoid vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called." 1 Tim. 6: 20. Human systems of philosophy, and pretended science, unfounded in established and demonstrative facts, have arisen and lived their brief day and been exploded. Others are destined to share the same fate, while "the word of God endureth forever."

PRIMITIVE MAN.

The Scriptures reveal that "Adam" was created "in the image," and after the "likeness" of God. If this be true, we have reason to conclude that Adam was made the highest type of the human species, "in the beginning,"—in beauty of his physical conformation, mental power, and moral excellence. Besides, God, on the creation of man, his crowning work and glory, "saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." To suppose that man was not so created "in the beginning," and that the scientific theory of "progressive development" is correct, would be to derogate and detract from the glory of our Maker, deny the sacred record, and destroy all confidence in the Scriptures, as well as pervert authentic and reliable archæological facts. The idea that the Almighty, when he created man "in his own image, and after his likeness," created him in the form of a vegetable, oyster, tadpole, monkey, or baboon, or any other animal or four-footed beast, or in the very lowest scale of human being, is simply ridiculous. This, instead of being progressive knowledge "upward and onward," is progress downward and backward. Rom. 1: 21-23.

Prof. Lyell said, a few years ago, "The low antiquity of our species is not controverted by an experienced geologist." If this could have been said truthfully at that time (which is to be questioned), it is controverted now. Dr. Dods remarks: "The idea that man has ever been a monkey, a bird, or any other creature besides man, I deem wholly visionary, unphilosophical, and impossible; or, as the author of 'Vestiges of Creation' teaches, that man had been perhaps an oyster, or a vegetable, and passed through every possible link in the existence below him up to man." —Immortality Triumphant, p. 52.

Prof. Huxley says, "The Engis skull," the oldest human cranium found, "is a fair average," so that "the progressive development theory" is most seriously damaged by later facts discovered, and there is still an advance toward the Mosaic record in further developments.

Louis Fiquier, in his work entitled "Primitive Man," the "Revised Translation," though maintaining the theory of "pre-historic ages," "shows," as remarks one, "that so so far from resembling any of the monkey family, the oldest cranium found can only be distinguished from the existing Caucassian by the most careful and critical study; resembling the Simian skull no more than does the present human head. He argues the question at length, and demonstrates that the Simian anatomy and the human were as distinct at the beginning as they are now; and that all the facts go to show that the two species were always distinct." By this it will be seen that "Primitive Man," according to the language of Fiquier, had not only a skull the same as at present, but his "cranium" resembled the "Caucassian" species, which is the very highest type of the race. This is certainly coming back to the Biblical record as soon as we could have expected; and these Scientists are fast giving up their imaginary "pre-historic ages," as they will all have to do; for it is showing itself to be a myth, and is "ready to vanish away." We wait further discovery in confirmation of the Scriptures to the confusion of these men.

Carried away by the reasonings of Prof. Lyell, and others, respecting "the progressive development theory," there are christian men and ministers who have been "spoiled through" their "philosophy and vain deceit." Here is one author who endeavors to reconcile the scriptural record with this philosophy; but has hard work of it, owing to the language employed by Moses the inspired penman. "True he [man] was created in the image of his Maker—but he commenced at the lowest stage of humanity."—E. Royce, Med. Econ., p. 13. And then the author quotes from Prof. Lyell, in proof of his statement. Thousands of christian men are "spoiled" by not heeding the apostle's admonition.

That God "in the beginning" would create man "in the image of his Maker," and as the prototype, head, and ruler of his whole race, and yet "at the lowest stage of humanity"—inferior to his entire future posterity—is simply preposterous, and unworthy of the credence of an intelligent christian, and especially of a Bible student. How a professed believer in the Bible can make such a statement I cannot conceive; or how an individual can do it with the history of our world before him, I am unable to understand, only as the apostle has informed us of the danger of being "spoiled through philosophy." I maintain that according to the "Scriptures of truth" and archæological facts, man was at the first created in physical proportions and beauty, in mental power and moral virtue, superior to his begotten offspring under the curse and fall. He was created No. 1 of his species, and "was the figure of Him that was to come." Rom. 5: 14; Heb. 1: 1-3.

ABOVE THE CLOUDS.

T. L. WAUGH.

It is said of a traveler in the Alpine regions, that when he was upon those lofty heights, he looked down and saw the angry storm raging below him; while above him the sun shone brightly in a cloudless sky. He was above the darkness and gloom that enveloped the people below. What a comparison to the Christian, who dwells in the sunshine of perfect love. The world is under his feet, and he has risen above it in his thoughts and desires, and the Sun of righteousness shines upon him with undimmed lustre. There is no need of going through the world fearing and doubting, murmuring and complaining, fretting and worrying, as many do. A good Methodist brother once remarked at a camp-meeting, "The baptism of the Holy Ghost is the best cure for nervousness." I have found it a perfect cure for every thing contrary to the fruits of the Spirit.

And if we want to live in the sunshine of God's love, where it is our duty and privilege to be, we must make a full surrender of ourselves to God; an entire consecration of every thing; then we shall feel a sweet submission to his holy will, accept him as our Savior, and realize the all-cleansing power of Jesus' atoning blood to save from all sin. Then we can say—

"'Tis done! thou dost this moment save,
With full salvation bless;
Redemption in thy blood I have,
And perfect love and peace."

But some, after having received the blessing, have lost it, like Christian who lost his roll. How can they get it again? Return again to their first love. Neglect no duty. Many make shipwreck of faith by neglecting one duty after another, until they lose their interest and go wandering on the dark mountains of unbelief; all because they do not watch, and pray without ceasing.

Serve God from principle, and soon you will serve him from love. Walk by naked faith, and you shall soon feel heaven in your soul. Walk in the light as he is in the light, and if faithful, you will be made like him and see his blessed face. Live holy lives; possess that meek and quiet spirit that Jesus possesses, and be prepared to welcome him back to earth. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

SIGNS OF THE END.

The world is grown old, and her pleasures are past;
The world is grown old, and her form may not last;
The world is grown old, and trembles for fear,
For sorrows abound, and the judgment is near.

The sun in the heavens is languid and pale,
And feeble and few are the fruits of the vale;
And the hearts of the nations fail them for fear,
For the world is grown old, and the judgment is near.

The king on his throne, the bride in her bower,
The children of pleasure, all feel the sad hour;
The roses are faded, and tasteless the cheer,
For the world is grown old, and the judgment is near.

The world is grown old, but should we complain,
Who have tried her, and know that her promise is vain?
Our heart is in heaven, our home is not here,
And we look for our crown when the judgment is near.

"WHERE, LORD?"—Luke 16: 37.

D. EASTMAN.

This question was asked while hearing the prophecy fall from the lips of the Son of God, as he was foretelling the condition of the world at his second appearing. Men were to be carrying on the business of life, as usual; while the church would be looking for his appearing, although, perhaps, not aware of his coming so suddenly. For some are found in the field, some at the mill, others upon the house top. One shall be taken and the other left. Luke 17: 31-27. Therefore the admonition is given, lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. Mark 13: 36. We think the time will soon come when this great separation will be made. Some are taken; others are left. But who are those that are taken? It is quite certain, if we can determine the one, we can the other; as there will be but two classes on the earth at his appearing, the wicked and the righteous.

We read, the tares are bound in bundles to be burned. Matt. 13: 30-40; but the wheat is to be gathered into the Lord's garner. Where will the tares be burned? We answer, in the field, as the field is the world. We turn to Jer. 25: 33, and read, "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried. They shall be dung upon the ground." Thus we see the wicked are not gathered, but remain upon the earth after the saints are gathered; for he is to gather "his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth, to the uttermost part of heaven." Mark 13: 27.

If the righteous are taken, well might the apostles ask, "Where, Lord?" Jesus answered their question, in this same verse. "Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together." The apostle answers this also in his epistle to the Thessalonians: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. Thus we see the righteous are to be gathered with the body in the air at his appearing. "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Eph. 5: 30. Many other scriptures might be brought to prove that we are members of his body; and if so, why not Christ answer the disciples as he did.

"Where, Lord?" "Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together." But why are the saints called eagles? those who should be alive when the Lord comes? I turn to Rev. 4: 7, and read that John saw the four different states of the church represented by four beasts. "The first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle." I wish to pass over those beasts briefly. Yet we see a great similarity between those beasts and the church. First, we notice the world as it looks upon the lion church. It trembles before it. She speaks, and men drop dead before her, and great fear comes on all that hear it. She hurls the gospel of a crucified and risen Savior through every land with power from heaven, or the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. But we pass on and find the second beast, like a calf. The world now looks on the church as a fit subject for slaughter. The papal power prevailed over it, and blood flowed freely; but she is not always to continue in this condition, for we see the third beast having a face like a man, and free toleration is granted to the whole world. The Bible is translated into many different languages, and is exalted to heaven. The church looks upon the world as now being willing she should enjoy equal rights, represented by a pair of balances in the hand of him that sat upon the black horse.

Thus it is seen, lastly, she assumes the likeness of an eagle. The eagle church can fix her eye upon the Son, her only hope of rescue. She is to take her flight, and soar away into the air to meet her Lord. Who does not want to be caught up to meet Jesus when he comes? May every reader of this be ready.

PURE vs. "POLLUTED ADVENTISM."

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

That the teachings of the Scriptures on a subject inseparably connected with the Lord's coming, as is the doctrine of the unconsciousness of the dead, and the utter destruction of the wicked, pollutes the doctrine of his coming, to say the least, is in the highest degree absurd. To contend that a man is alive, and that it is necessary for him to be alive (for we cannot conceive it possible for a man to be conscious without being alive) in order to be raised from the dead, is simply ridiculous. Now if it is necessary to believe this absurdity in order to receive "Adventism" in its unpolluted form, we prefer to receive it in its stigmatized "polluted form," and thus join company with the apostle Paul, in believing there is a necessity of a resurrection from the dead, in order to future life. (See Paul's entire argument in his 15th chapter of 1st Cor.)

The Bible statement concerning man after the breath leaves the body, is, that he is dead. A few examples will make this apparent. "Moses my servant is dead." Josh. 1: 2. "For your master Saul is dead." 2 Sam. 2: 7. "Therefore David said unto his servants, Is the child dead? And they said, He is dead." 2 Sam. 12: 19. "Then said Jesus unto them, plainly, Lazarus is dead." John 11: 14. "And he that was dead came forth." ver. 44. It was the faith of all the patriarchs and prophets that a resurrection of the dead was necessary, in order to have future life; therefore we hear the patriarch Job exclaiming, "If a man die shall he live again?" and Isaiah, "Thy dead men shall live;" and Daniel, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting LIFE"; also Christ in John 5: 29, ... "they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life." From these quotations from the Scriptures, it is evident, that after a man dies, he remains dead until he is brought to life again by a resurrection from the dead; and there is no Scripture rightly interpreted that militates against these facts so plainly stated in the word of God.

The fact that this earth on which we live in its renewed state, is the only inheritance promised to man (and his condition after the resurrection as a material being will be perfectly adapted to his material inheritance, for both will be incorruptible, immortal, and glorious), makes it incompatible that he should live or be rewarded in any other condition or place separate from the resurrection, and the new heavens and earth. The Scriptures are abundant in their testimony on this point. God promised Abraham land for his future inheritance; and Paul tells us that land embraced the habitable world to come, including a "city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." He also speaks of a number like "the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the seashore innumerable. These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them," etc. Some of these were sawed asunder, slain with the sword; and others were tortured, scourged, imprisoned, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection.

Again, Paul tells us, Gal. 3: 29, "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." If it was possible for God's people to live in an unclothed state, Paul did not desire that condition; moreover the translated saints are never to know by experience such a condition; therefore, we conclude the suspension of mortal life, whether for six thousand years, or one year, will be alike momentary with the saints; and, as in this unclothed state, the saints will have no knowledge of the passing of time, or any thing else; but it will be like falling asleep under the pressure of mortality, and awaking in the vigor of immortality to behold the wonders of the glorified state. Therefore, Paul says of the salvation purchased by our Lord Jesus Christ, "Who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him." This life, or salvation, Paul speaks of, comes at the resurrection of the righteous dead, and at no other time. This view of the subject attaches an importance to the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead, that makes those two events indispensable, and on which the truth of the whole gospel depends. Therefore, this view must be "Adventism" in its unpolluted form; while the opposite, i. e., life, not necessarily dependent on the second coming of Christ and the resurrection from the dead, but on inherent immortality, is "Adventism" in its "polluted form." Amen.

TO-DAY.

C. W. TERRY.

"Verily I say unto thee to-day, shalt thou be with me in paradise."—LUKE 23: 43.

What Christ meant by this promise to the thief, has been a subject of doubt in my mind, and is to many at the present time; but if we turn to God's holy word, we will there find it explained in such plain terms, that a child can understand it. The thief made a request and this was Christ's answer. Now what was the thief's request? "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The thief understood that Christ was to have a kingdom when it was set up.

First, we must determine when Christ's kingdom is to be set up; then we can determine when the thief wanted Christ to remember him; whether it was at his death, or some time in the future. The prophet said there was to be born a King, that should rule the world; and the Jews understood that Christ was to be this King; but as Christ did not take the throne, they claimed he was an imposter, and accused him of claiming to be King, when he was not. They took him before Pilate to be questioned. John 18: 33-40. Pilate asks, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" Christ replies, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews" (that is, his kingdom is not of this world of sin and corruption, before its purification); "but now is my kingdom not from hence;" that is, not from this time onward. Here Christ says his kingdom is not of this wicked world, nor from his death onward. This Pilate saw, and questions thus: "Art thou a King then?" Jesus replies: "To this end was I born." Thus admitting that his kingdom was not of this world of sin, nor from his death onward, but still he was born to be a King. Now we ask, when? John the revelator in speaking of the end, says: "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Also Daniel in his prophetic word, when tracing the rise and fall of nations to the end, says (Dan. 2: 44): "In the days of these kings [that is the last earthly kings] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; . . . it shall stand for ever." Also Daniel 7: 13, 14: "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, . . . and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; . . . and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Christ in his teachings (Matt. 25: 31-46) says: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them," etc. When speaking of his coming, he says: "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me." When is it that he becomes King, and takes the throne? When he comes in power, at the last trump, and sits upon his throne and judges the world.

What was the thief's request? "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Now we see Christ's kingdom is set up when he takes the throne, and judges man; and it was then the thief wanted Christ to remember him, when man receives his reward for deeds done in the body; not the day Christ and the thief died; for the thief could not then receive his reward and be in paradise, unless he was an exception to mankind; for Rev. 11: 18 says, in speaking of the judgment: It is "the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants," etc. Nor could he have gone to heaven that day with Christ, for three days after Christ arose, he said to Mary, "I am not yet ascended to my Father" (John 30; 17), which was true, for if Christ did go to heaven and remain three days, the second time he came from heaven would have been a second coming; but the angel said to his disciples forty days after his resurrection, as you have seen him ascend into heaven, so shall he come again in like manner; therefore his second coming must be sometime in the future, and not at his resurrection.

Now, all we have to make us think the thief was rewarded at death is the punctuation of modern writers, which makes it read, "Verily I say unto you, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise;" which we have shown would be impossible. Punctuation is a modern invention, and is thrown in to suit the taste of the translator, as all will admit. Why stick to the punctuation of one verse, when it makes it contradict the rest of the Bible? The thief says, "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Christ replies: "Amen lego soi semeron met emou ese en to paradiso." Which literally reads, so let it be; I tell thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise. When? Just when the thief requested to be; Amen, or let it be as you request; and to doubly assure the thief, He says; I say unto you to-day (although it looks to you doubtful as to my having a kingdom), thou shalt be with me in paradise, which makes the thief's request and Christ's answer harmonize, and agree with the theory that man receives his reward after being judged.

— As it is great foolishness to forsake the clear fountains, and to drink puddle water; so it is great folly to leave the sweet doctrine of the Evangelists, and to study the dreams of men's imaginations.

THE MORMONS.

The Mormons appear to be a quiet, honest, temperate, industrious, sincere people; opposed to vanity, and the foolish fashions of the world. We were pleased with the modest, Quaker simplicity exhibited by the women. As a people, they are opposed to the use of all intoxicating liquors, tobacco, tea, and coffee, and rich food. The men and women look more healthy than in any other city we have ever visited. After careful observation for some days, we came to the settled conclusion that there is less licentiousness in Salt Lake City than in any other one of the same size in the United States; and were we to bring up a family of children in these last days of wickedness, we should have less fears of their moral corruption, were they in that city, than in any other. Swearing, drinking, gambling, idleness, and licentiousness, have made but small headway there, when compared with other places of equal size. As a body, they are a very sincere people, and believe the Lord led them there. They are close Bible students, and are very familiar with the Old Testament prophecies; upon which they dwell much in their preaching. Among them are a number of able men, who are capable of entertaining an intelligent audience. They preach without notes, and present such thoughts as come to them on the occasion. We heard three of their best speakers, who expounded their views of Scripture. They claim that their settlement at Salt Lake City is the true Mt. Zion, or the beginning of the kingdom of God upon earth, mentioned in the 7th chapter of Daniel, and symbolized by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which should smite the great metalic image upon its feet and dash it to pieces. They believe their Mormon kingdom will continue to spread and prevail till it shall fill the whole earth, and consume all other kingdoms. They say they are firmly established at Salt Lake City, and shall not be moved again. They believe in the literal resurrection of the dead, and the personal coming of Christ, when "the latter-day saints," as they call themselves, shall have prepared the kingdom of God for the reception of the King of kings. They claim that theirs is the only true church that has been upon the earth since the days of the apostles, because the apostolic succession was broken up, and was not restored till Peter, James and John came and laid hands upon Joseph Smith, their founder, and thus set him apart by divine appointment, to re-establish the true church, at which time the kingdom of God commenced, as represented by "the stone that smote the image."

Their views of baptism are the same as entertained by the Campbellites; that sins are not remitted till after baptism. When their children are eight years of age, they have them baptized, and then they are members of the church, provided they accept the Mormon faith. Any one can become a member of their church by adopting their system of belief, and declaring their intention to do right. They do not believe in revivals and conversions, as taught by the evangelical denominations generally; that is, a sudden change of heart. They say they do not take their peculiar faith from the Bible, but from the book of Mormon. But for that book, they would not be what they are. They accept it as a new revelation from God. They affirm that they receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands; that they have the gifts of healing, and of tongues, and of the discerning of spirits. In short, as a church, they claim to be just the same as the apostolic church in the days of Christ. They say they are frequently receiving new revelations.

THEIR POLYGAMY.

We did not talk with them much in relation to their plurality of wives. We heard one prominent preacher say in public, that he had but two wives. He supposed some one asking him why he had not more? His reply was, "It takes two to make a bargain." We learned from a reliable source, that most of the Mormons in Utah believe that polygamy is right, and ordained of the Lord; but that nearly all the women who have submitted to it are unhappy, unless it be the last wife, who is supposed to receive the warmest affections of her husband, while the others are left to shiver in the cold of jealousy. So long as they are human such results cannot be avoided. Mothers urge their daughters never to countenance polygamy; and say they would give all they have in this world to be back where they were before they submitted to it. But we do not believe polygamy was adopted by the Mormons merely to gratify lust; but because they were persuaded to believe it was the will of the Lord, as taught them by revelation, from certain angels. One of their prominent preachers said in our hearing, when addressing a large audience in the tabernacle, that "monogamy—[the doctrine that a man should have but one wife] came from pagan Rome and the Devil." We thought if such is the case, it is high time that the proof was published to the world.

OUR MEETINGS.

In Salt Lake City were seasons of special interest. Soon after our arrival, we met Mr. Caine, the editor of the Salt Lake Daily Herald, to whom we feel much indebted for his special kindness, who took us to the house of President Brigham Young, for the purpose of securing a place in which to hold some meetings. The President manifested a kind spirit toward us, and generously offered us the free use of the tabernacle. In addition to this, free hand-bills were printed, and widely circulated with great dispatch through the city. Although the first bills were not posted till about two o'clock in the afternoon, over one thousand people were present at the meeting that evening, who gave the very best attention. We felt special help from the Lord while speaking on the evidences that prove we are near the second coming of Christ. We have rarely had an audience that listened with more interest. Their familiarity with the Bible, and their love for the prophetic Scriptures, enabled them to receive and comprehend the subject with much pleasure. We felt that they gave the truth a hearty welcome. We continued the subject the next evening, when some eighteen hundred were present to listen with increased interest. The President expressed satisfaction with what he had heard during the two evenings. He was obliged to leave the city the next day, and consequently did not have an opportunity to hear any more. He arranged for us to have the tabernacle the next evening (Friday) and Sabbath at five P. M. They have their regular meetings at 10 and 2. Friday evening, we had an audience of about twenty-five hundred, and a deep interest was manifested in the strong evidence showing that the Lord will soon come. The Lord gave great help in presenting the subject, and the truth was received with joyfulness. The people were hungry and thirsting for more. Their appetite for the truth of the Bible is not a morbid one, like that we find in many places, but they have a hearty relish for its sacred teachings. They have made too much sacrifice for what they believe, to shrink back from any truth because it may be unpopular. Whoever wishes to convince them must go with Bible in hand, and follow closely its literal teachings.

At our next meeting, Sabbath 5 P. M., the tabernacle was full, with an audience of three thousand people. It was a bad time to get out in consequence of mud occasioned by a snow storm that day. Had the walking been good, the tabernacle would have been too small for the congregation. At noon, when we saw the unfavorable prospect for the meeting, we expressed regret that we had it appointed; but when we saw the crowd assembled to hear, our regret was all removed. Again we felt great help from the strong arm of the Lord while presenting the truth. This was our last meeting at Salt Lake City. We were urged to stay longer, or to come again. This appeared to be the universal expression of Apostles, Bishops, Elders, and all the lay members. We were treated very kindly by all, and we felt sorry we could not stay some weeks in that mountain-city home, and talk more about the contents of the sacred Book. We have been in no place where we have felt that our labors would be better appreciated, or be productive of greater good, than at Salt Lake City. The Mormons are ready to hear and receive whatever they conceive to be true. It is a pleasure to talk to such people, and that pleasure we have enjoyed; and feel thankful for the privilege so kindly extended by the President.

We felt a strong assurance that while we were at Salt Lake City, we were among friends. We enjoyed our visit, and would like to make another, if it be the will of the Lord. We carried friendship to them, and received the same in return; and it was not scanty measure. We think it would not be easy to tell it was a Mormon city from any outward appearances, if one had not been previously informed. They look, talk, eat, drink, dress, sleep, work, and breathe, just like other people. They are real human beings; and we are most fully persuaded that kindness will do them much more good than kicking and slander.

A FEW ITEMS.

At the close of the first meeting in the tabernacle, the President sent a gentleman from his house to inquire after our temporal welfare. We had arranged to stop with a friend at a private boarding house. After learning our situation, he said President Young wished us to go to the Townsend House, where we should be well entertained, as his guest, as he never took any to his own house. We replied, we did not wish him to feel under any obligations to take care of us. He said it would afford the President pleasure to provide us a good home, at his expense, while we tarried in their city. We could not well refuse such an offer, and accordingly accepted the favor, and took much comfort with the intelligent and distinguished guests whom we found at the Townsend House. Some were regular boarders, some were tourists between Boston and California, and had stopped to see the Mormon City; while others were eminent business men, who were connected with the Utah silver mines. Among these guests was Gov. Young, the governor of Utah, and his family; Gen. Sterling, Hon. Tom Fitch, Col. Mix, of Mexico, Alexander Majors, who formerly had charge of the overland transportation, having some three thousand men under his care. We found him to be a noble-hearted man, and a true friend. When engaged in the transportation business, he would assemble his men and talk to them of Jesus. We took much pleasure in his society. He is anxious to know the whole truth, and has a warm place in his heart for its reception. Among others, we met with Col. Gray, the American tourist, and general agent for western emigration, who was at Salt Lake to arrange for excursionists. We afterwards had the pleasure of his company from Salt Lake to Omaha. It was quite a privilege to travel with one so familiar with the route.

Among other pleasant incidents, were our frequent interviews with the editors of the Herald, the Deseret News and Tribune; besides agreeable conversations with the leading men in the Mormon church, and visits in various families.

We also formed an acquaintance with Bro. G. M. Peirce, the Methodist preacher at Salt Lake. He has been there about a year. We were very much pleased with him, and his amiable wife. He appears to be a true and faithful man in the vineyard of the Lord. He has arranged to have a noted tent meeting at Salt Lake, to begin next June, and continue as long as circumstances may demand. The tent will hold some three thousand people. It is now in California. It is under the direction of Bro. Inskip, the distinguished conductor of campmeetings among the Methodists. Some fifty ministers are expected at the meeting. Great interest, no doubt, will be awakened in the city, and the surrounding country. Bro. Pierce has bought a lot, and intends to erect a meeting-house soon, costing some thirty-five thousand dollars. He is an efficient laborer in the vineyard of the Lord.

The Episcopalians are also building a neat chapel. A party has lately broken off from the Mormons, at Salt Lake, known as "Godbeites," because led by a man by the name of Godbe. As near as we could learn, they have embraced Spiritualism. They, too, are building a chapel. Besides these, there are a number of Mormons, who follow Joseph Smith, Jun., in Ill., who claims to be the true successor of his father. He and his supporters repudiate polygamy. Thus the "kingdom" is divided into three parts.

JAPANESE. When at the Townsend House, twelve Japanese princes arrived from Japan, en route for the best colleges in the United States, and Europe, where they are to be educated. They were fine looking young men, neatly dressed, and quite gentlemanly in their behavior. They very much resemble the most intelligent Coolies, or China men in California.

When the time came to leave Salt Lake City, we received warm expressions of friendship from various sources. At the depot an interesting woman and her intelligent, lady-like daughter, came to bid us good bye, and to present us with a charming boquet of very sweet flowers, tastefully arranged. Of course we appreciated such warm expressions of friendship. The mother is a sister of Sr. Thatcher, in Philadelphia. Our last shake of hands in Salt Lake City, was through the car window with Mr. Caine, the editor of the Daily Herald, who left in our hand money to pay our fare to Ogden.

Well, to sum up, we are glad we visited the Mormons at Salt Lake City. We shall remember our sojourn there with much pleasure; and should we ever have occasion to visit their city again, we should expect to meet them as friends, to speak kind words, and bless each other with kind deeds. Mr. F. D. Richards, of Ogden, who is one of the twelve Mormon apostles, sent word for us to come and speak in the tabernacle, in that city, which we did on Monday evening, April 24th, the day we left Salt Lake City. Some five or six hundred were out, on a short notice, and listened very attentively to evidences which showed that Christ is soon coming. At the close of the discourse, Apostle Richards asked those to raise their hands who had been pleased with the discourse. We believe every hand was up. They expressed a desire to hear more. Thus ended our mission work.

FRANCE.

France continues in a critical condition. A civil war is raging between the different political parties. Theirs is a bitter cup, and they are drinking it to the very dregs. Their programme continually reads, "Worse and worse." But a change must come soon. The prospect for the return of Napoleon continues to brighten. The better class of people are really tired of the present state of things, and do not wish to make any more republican experiments. They find the proposed republicanism much worse than the rule of Imperialism. They are passing through the reign of terror. The signs of the times are now very ominous of the approaching end of this dispensation. The last sands of time are dropping out, and soon the great clock of time will strike the closing hour. What a solemn period is the one in which we are living, when the day-dawn of eternity is about to open upon an astonished world. How few are ready. Most are as indifferent to these things as were the Sodomites the morning that Lot left the cities of the plain.

This is the hour to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. In a little while we shall be praising the Lord in his kingdom, or be forever shut out. The time must come.

ALARM BELL.—Bro. C. Colegrove informs us that he intends to issue No. 3 of the "Alarm Bell," as soon as convenient, in the form of a book, containing from one hundred to one hundred and fifty pages. Besides other interesting matter, this number will contain a narrative of the wonderful visions of Wm. Russell, of Ontario, Canada; together with a full and thorough examination of the prophetic number, 666. Price 50 cts. Address Clinton Colegrove, Sardinia, N. Y.

EXCURSION.—Col. Gray, General Immigration Agent, is about getting up an excursion to Salt Lake City, and California. If any of our readers wish to avail themselves of the privileges of such an excursion, they will please send us their address.

HELP THE NEEDY.—We learn that Bro. and Sr. F. H. Chamberlain, Webster, Mass., are short of the necessaries of life. Give him a lift.

☞ Do not fail to read the article headed, "Above the Clouds." It is full of fatness.

PLEASING.—When we receive an article containing quotations from the Bible, it is very pleasant to find that the writer has taken pains to turn to every passage, and quote it just as it reads in the Scriptures. If all who write will observe this rule, it will save your editor much labor. When we have to hunt up every passage in an article containing much reference to the Bible, it often takes much more time than all the other corrections. Please be particular to quote the Bible just as it reads.

☞ NEW SUBSCRIBERS for the Crisis have come in more rapidly this year, thus far, than during any period for many years. We wish to thank our friends for their noble efforts. Do not slacken your zeal. Let us do all in our power to turn men and women from a belief in the popular fables of these last days. This is the time to work.

BOSTON.—We had a pleasant meeting in Boston last Sabbath, May 6th. Several requested prayers in the evening.

"HEBREW NEWS" is the name of a new paper, published by Jacob Cohen, 48 Chatham St., New York City. Price, $5 a year. More than half of the paper is printed in Hebrew.

MAKING WILLS.—As disease is sweeping off some of our friends, who must leave their wealth to others, and as some make wills, and forget to leave the Lord anything, I drop a thought on this point. Is it not well to will the Lord a share? In an adjoining State, a sister thus left a part of her estate, directing that it should be spent in erecting an Advent chapel. How praiseworthy the deed. And how much good may yet result from it. Others may do the same; or, what is still better, invest their money, while still living, in some such noble enterprise, and share in witnessing the results before death; or, if not in present danger of dying, witness the result of the enterprise before Jesus comes. The Lord's treasury is too often forgotten in this age of selfishness. Remember we are but stewards.

CHRIST AN "HEIR."—Saints are to be "joint heirs with Christ"; hence Christ is an heir, being "appointed heir of all things" (Heb. 1 : 2); and "he that overcometh shall inherit all things" (Rev. 21 : 7), after sin and death shall have been obliterated. Christ, though now in heaven, is still an "heir"; an heir to a kingdom yet to come. "All things," when renovated, will be given to Christ and the saints. "The kingdoms of this world," divested of sin and sinners, will "become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." When it was said of Christ (Matt. 21 : 38), "This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance," little was it thought that the resurrection would renew his heirship. He will soon claim his inheritance, and dispossess his enemies, and with his saints possess the kingdom.

THE SAINTS TO REIGN.

An inquirer asks, "Who are the saints to reign over, if there are to be no mortals left after Christ's kingdom is established, seeing all the saints are to reign?"

We reply, if in order for the saints to reign, they must have mortals to reign over, death must be an endless ingredient of the kingdom, for death is inseparably connected with mortality—mortals must die—for this reign cannot be restricted to a thousand years, and then end; but after reaching the new earth state, in which it is said, "There shall be no more death," it is said of the saints, "They shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 22 : 5.) So this "reign" of the saints continues after death comes to an end, even "for ever and ever;" and as it thus continues after death has ceased its work, there can then be no mortals to reign over, for while mortals exist, death will continue, as mortals must die sooner or later; and if the saints are to reign in some sense after death has come to an end, and as they are to enjoy but one reign in the kingdom, they never will reign in the sense of governing mortals.

There is a sense in which we speak of "diseases, which commonly reign in summer," in which it is said "death reigned from Adam," and in which the apostle could say, "let not sin reign," etc.; that is, prevail. Whether the saints are to reign in this sense, or in some other, it is certain that they are to reign after "there shall be no more death;" and consequently no more mortals to reign over. Then why assume, without proof, that they are ever to reign over mortals? They are to be so exalted, that they are said to reign, having triumphed over sin and death, being equal to the angels," having escaped the bondage of corruption," they reign as victors.

DEATH "ABOLISHED."

Paul asserts that Christ "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. 1 : 10. In reading this statement, we are led to inquire, What kind of death has been "abolished"? What kind of life has been "brought to light"? And what kind of immortality is "brought to light," and on what principle? In order to bring the matter fully before the mind, we will notice each point separately.

I. What kind of death did Christ abolish? Some kind of death was abolished, at least to some extent, which had not previously been abolished; for the statement does not read, shall abolish death, but "hath abolished death," a work already done.

1. Allusion cannot be made to moral death—a death in trespasses and sins—for that death reigns now just as really and just as extensively as it did before Christ's mission to earth; and although Christ now pardons sins, it is equally true that sins were pardoned before he came to earth; so if that act of forgiving sins could be made to mean the abolition of death, death was as really abolished before Christ appeared, as after his advent. But spiritual death reigns still. It has not been "abolished" in the case of man.

2. Allusion cannot be made to the abolishing of literal death over the race of man, else (1) all dead men would have lived again; and (2) no living man would subsequently have died, neither of which results have been realized. As neither spiritual death nor literal death have come to an end in the history of man, it is certain that no death has been "abolished" in the case of the race of man at large. Yet the statement of Paul has a meaning, and also agrees with the facts of the gospel, when understood.

3. The truth is, Christ "hath abolished death" in his own person, as "the first fruits," or sample, bearing away "the keys of hades and death." He is the first and only person in whose case death has been "abolished," it having only been suspended in other persons who had been liberated from its grasp. He was the first dead person ever immortalized; he became deathless, and thus "abolished" death, in his escape from its power; for "Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him" (Rom. 6 : 9); and his resurrection is an invulnerable pledge that the resurrection harvest of the holy dead shall correspond with the undying first-fruits, or specimen; hence, as death hath been "abolished" in the "first fruits," it must also be in the harvest of holy slumberers. So through the gospel Christ is held up to our view (1), as practical proof that death has really been abolished in his person, and (2), as a pledge that it will hereafter be as really abolished in the case of the dead saints, he being the "first fruits."

II. What kind of "life" did Christ bring to light?

1. Not spiritual life, called religion, for that had long previously been enjoyed by the saints; and when we bring anything to light, we manifest something not already exhibited, something new.

2. Not temporal life, for that, too, already existed among men, and was nothing new in the history of the world.

3. But Christ, by his resurrection from the dead, brought to light a new life—eternal life—a life never possessed by man; and this same life is offered to a perishing world through Christ, being proclaimed through the gospel, in which Christ is held up as a living sample of endless life, embodied in a personage once under death's power. Here is an exhibition of eternal life, after the power of death is broken, in a sample taken from the field of death. Man need doubt no longer; there is a life after death's reign is broken, and Christ is pointed to by the gospel as the proof of such a life; and above the storms of life, he is crying to dying men, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore." Rev. 1 : 18. There is eternal life manifested to a dying world, in the person of Christ.

III. What is immortality? It is nothing more or less than deathlessness; and in the person of Christ, deathless humanity is exhibited in the world; for after being released from death, he "dieth no more"; and among all the potentates of earth, he "only hath immortality," and in due time it will be shown that he is the "only Potentate" who has a right to reign on earth; but till that time arrives, he dwells "in the light which no man can approach unto," where he officiates as high priest, in which capacity "no man hath seen, nor can see" him. Immortality, or deathlessness, is the basis of eternal life; for a person made deathless can never die, and consequently must ever live, and that would be endless life. The saint is to put on immortality at the resurrection. Christ is the living illustration of immortality from the ranks of perishing men, being proclaimed through the gospel.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

That the early inhabitants of this continent were familiar with the revelations which God made to his ancient people, on the other continent, is safely inferred from many discoveries. I clip the following from the Deseret News, it being a report of a sermon preached by Orson Pratt, in the great Mormon Tabernacle, at Salt Lake; and though given to inspire confidence in that modern production, the Book of Mormon, as an ancient record, it is nevertheless valuable as an historic item, though used for a wrong purpose in this discourse; for the Book of Mormon contains much internal evidence that it is a document of recent date, palmed off upon the ignorant as an ancient production. Here is the part of the discourse referred to:—

"Perhaps some may say that we have neither witness nor testimony, save it be the Book of Mormon, and the living witnesses whose names are attached to that book, that the people of this continent knew anything about God or about revelation. But let me inform such persons that they are mistaken. Only a few years ago,—in 1865, thirty-eight years after the plates of the Book of Mormon were taken out of the earth by Joseph Smith, one of the great mounds in the State of Ohio was opened, near Newark, in Licking County. It was a very large mound; it measured, before they began to cart away the stones and dirt, 580 feet in circumference, and was from forty to fifty feet in height. After they had carted away from this mound several thousand loads of dirt and stone, for the purpose of canaling or fixing a canal, they found on the outer edge near the circumference of the base of this mound, just within the circle, several smaller mounds, built entirely of fire clay, that had the appearance of putty. When digging into one of these smaller mounds they came to something that had the appearance of wood, and after having removed the upper surface of it, they found a trough, and in that trough several metallic rings, probably the ancient coins of the country. They also found that the interior trough had been lined with some kind of cloth, but it was in such a state of decomposition that only the least bit of it would hold together, not even a piece as large as your thumb nail. There were also some human bones in this trough and a lock of fine black hair. Underneath this trough, still further down in the fire clay, they found a stone, and when it was taken out they found that it was hollow and that there was something inside of it. They found by inspection that it had been cemented together with hard cement. With considerable exertion they broke the stone in two. It was oval, or elliptical in form. They separated it where it was cemented together, and in the inside they found another kind of stone on which was engraven the Ten Commandments in the ancient Hebrew. This stone was immediately sent to Cincinnati, where many learned men saw it and they declared the inscriptions were in ancient Hebrew, and translated the Ten Commandments. The stone was nearly seven inches long, nearly three inches wide, and almost two in thickness. On one side of it there was a raised profile, the likeness of a man clothed with a robe,—that is, carved out of the stone, with his left side partially facing the beholder, and the robe and girdle upon his left shoulder; he had also a turban on. Over his head was written in Hebrew, Moshe, which is in the Hebrew name for Moses. They therefore represented this person, thus carved out, as Moses. Around about him, that is on the various sides of the stone, were written the ten commandments in ancient Hebrew."

If the Book of Mormon had been found written in Hebrew in a similar manner, subject to examination after its discovery, it would change the matter.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 25th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. Correspondence.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

BRO. GRANT:—I am truly glad to learn that you are having a good time at San Francisco. May the Lord ever bless you, and those who assist you there in your mission of love. May many converts be the happy result of your labors there. I often think of the blessed time I had under your preaching at Rochester, N. Y.. You and Bro. Pratt were the first to give me the true light on God's word. Ever since then I have been trying in my poor, stammering way, to give the light to others. Having for a time my lot cast near this people, I have had opportunity to learn their true condition. I find since the Mission closed last June, that most of them have been holding on to the faith, struggling against opposition from other churches; being laughed at for their faith, and for being left by the Mission Society without a place of worship. They have not had a suitable place for worship, but they have one in view, which they will make answer until they can get a larger one. Some of them seem very grateful to their teachers in the Mission and Society for the light and instruction they have received. I know they are, for I often hear them express a desire to see the dear ones who have labored here. I tell them, though they are far from them, they still love and wish them well. I also tell them to hold on, and the friends of the Mission will again help them, when they find that they are trying to help themselves. The friends who have aided this Mission need not think it has been in vain. I see the fruits of it in every part of the city. Many of the white people have become interested in our views of the Bible through this Mission, and the reading of tracts. They have become so interested, they express a feeling of sorrow that this people (I mean this colored church) have not a respectable place for worship. One white man here says that he will give $20 towards helping them get a house to hold meetings in; and others will give smaller sums; so I think with what we can raise here, and from the friends north, this people will soon have a home.

I have concluded, though I had intended using the profits of my little book to get suitable tracts for distribution, but knowing the condition of this people, I will give the profits of the book towards helping them to secure a place of worship, that is, if the brethren will assist them by purchasing the book, which costs ten cents by mail. It is a pamphlet of forty-eight pages, giving some incidents of my travels, as tract-missionary, and a dialogue between a missionary Baptist and an Adventist, which I trust will be interesting; besides other matter, receipts, choice sayings, etc. All who desire the book will please address J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich., who will send the book on the receipt of ten cents by mail. And also those who are able, and feel disposed to help this people, can send it to J. V. Himes or Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass.

Dear brethren, I do not ask you to send your dollars, for I know that there are many calls at present for help; but I trust you will help this people with a little mite, five or ten cents. Lay the matter before your neighbors, and probably in this way each reader of the Crisis can send us twenty-five cents, which will be of much help to this people. I have sold about sixty of my little books, and the pictures of Daniel in the den of lions, through the Crisis and the Times, for which please accept my thanks. I still have a few more on hand, which I will sell at $3 per dozen in the sheet, without the book. The size of the picture is 20 × 24. Yours in love. Please address, J. B. WADSWORTH, Memphis, Tenn., Box 634.

From Bro. I. K. Lombard.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been a long while since I have written a letter or an article for publication in the Crisis, and I have concluded that I would endeavor to break the silence somewhat, as I am now located with better opportunities for writing than I have had. I have been holding meetings here on Sundays, since I came here from Chelsea, and two weeks I was holding meetings in a new field, near here, with some encouragement. I find invitations to labor in different places near, and shall find enough to do, I have no doubt.

It is surprising to see how generally the people who go to hear the gospel get fed on husks, and how little they realize that there is anything better for them. And when we consider that so many will pay a high price for husks, rather than have the true bread for nothing, it seems stranger still. Some truths are indeed stranger than fiction. Well has Christ said that "men love darkness rather than light." I am glad that he has taught us a "more excellent way," and I hope we may have grace to keep in it unto the end.

Time is short, and soon this night of weeping will pass away, and give place to the morning of joy. I want to be ready to hail the Master with a glad heart on his return. I am so glad he is coming soon. I long to greet him as my Lord and Master, and with the redeemed bid adieu to these scenes of earth's sight. Soon will nature cease her "groanings" for deliverance; soon will sin cease its work of blighting, ruin, and death; and soon will Satan cease to tempt the struggling child of God. I want to have my loins girt about, and my lamp burning, and be found among the waiting ones when the Master shall call.

Hereafter my address will be Machiasport, Maine, where the friends can address me for my hymn books, or Admonitions, as they may need at any time. I have a supply always on hand. Yours in Christ.

Machiasport, Me., Dec. 30th, 1870.

From Bro. G. W. Turner.

Dear Crisis:—Thinking that a line from a pilgrim in the hedges of Wisconsin may add to the variety of our loved paper, I write a few words. I have been very much interested in the great work of Bro. Grant on the other coast; but while he has found some large clusters of ungathered fruit there, others, by crawling around amongst the bushes, find once in a while a large berry. Never was I more convinced than now that we are doing up the last gleaning work for this world. The mists of Demonolgy are settling down like a dark pall upon the minds of those that have "not the love of the truth"; and for this cause, God is sending "them strong delusion," that they all might be condemned, who believe not the truth. A church was organized of thirteen, and a number more are about ready to take hold at Williamsburgh, Wis. Seven were baptized in the likeness of the Savior's death by the writer, April 20th. Praise the Lord that the time of work and fighting is almost over, when we shall enjoy a time of recreation on the immortal, evergreen shore. Let us not be weary, dear fellow pilgrims.

Eau Claire, Wis.

Bro. S. W. Thurber, Sparta, Wis., writes April 10th:—"All is well with Samuel. I have settled down in Sparta, and expect to stay for one year. The Lord is with us. We are having good meetings."

CONN. A. C. CONFERENCE.

The Conn. A. C. Conference met at New Haven, Ct., April 28th, 1871. Vice President in the Chair. Prayer by Bro. Rockwell. Bro. G. L. Teeple was chosen Secretary pro tem. Ministers present: Bro. Rockwell, White, Teeple, St. John, Ripley, Stark, Durand, and wife. Delegates: P. W. Jones, Winsted; Alt Andrews, Bridgeport; James H. Stanclift, Pleasant Valley; Henry H. Mix, Yalesville; J. Whitney, New Haven.

Voted, That Bro. St. John and Bro. Stark be a committee to draft resolutions expressive of the mind of the conference in relation to the death of Elder H. H. Dickinson, our late President.

Resolved, That preachers not in sympathy with the Crisis and A. C. A. be respectfully requested not to send their Conn. appointments to the Crisis for publication. The report of the Treasurer was heard and accepted.

The report on the resolutions in relation to the death of Bro. Dickinson reported the following: Whereas, it has pleased God in his providence to remove from our membership Elder Henry H. Dickinson, who died April 19th, 1871, and who at the time of his death was the President of this conference; therefore

Resolved, That we place on the records of the conference this minute, thus testifying our appreciation of an able, earnest, and efficient preacher of the gospel, and a truly noble and christian man, with rare talents as a presiding officer, and business manager, and our consciousness that in his death each member of this conference has lost a true christian friend.

Resolved, That we also express our sympathies with the afflicted family of our deceased Bro., in the great loss they have sustained in the death of a good husband and kind father. May He who has promised to be the widow's God and a Father to the fatherless bless and care for them in their deep affliction. After appropriate remarks, it was unanimously adopted.

Voted, That the preamble and resolution be sent to the A. C. Times, Buchanan, Mich., and the World's Crisis for publication; also that a copy be transmitted to the family of the deceased. The reports of the delegates were then heard, who gave an interesting account of the various churches. Our ministering brethren have labored with success in the various fields, and seen some converted. They felt determined to labor on for Christ and his cause until he, who is our life, shall come and give us a crown of glory which will never fade away. Thus closed one of our precious seasons in conference. We regretted very much that we could not have been there, but were detained on account of sickness. May God grant that we may soon meet where sickness and death shall divide us no more.

The vacant chair of Bro. Dickinson was shrouded in black, expressive of our grief, with a branch of evergreen expressive of our hope. B. Hitchcock, Sec.

NEW CONFERENCE.

Northern N. Y. and Southern Pa.:—Brethren, I wish to say to you, through the Crisis, that I am heartily in favor of the organization of a conference in this locality. I think we need it, and if organized, and properly conducted, will prove a great help to us in promoting the cause we love. Some may think strange that they have not heard from me before, or seen me face to face; but all the excuse I have to make, is of sickness in my family. My heart is in the work, and, as time and opportunity gives me chance, I shall labor for the truths of God's blessed word. Let us hear from the brethren through the Crisis; Bro. D. B. Hunt, W. Marlatt, F. Mack, J. Wendell, and others. Brethren, pray on. Pray for me and my family, that if it be God's will, they may be again restored.

Yours in love of the blessed hope,

Springmills, N. Y. A. H. Briggs.

AN IMPOSTER.

A man of light complexion, light hair, blue eyes, about thirty-five to forty years old, medium height and size; not very tidy in his general appearance, claiming to be Dr. Foster, bragging of his great cures by the use of herbs, barks, roots, etc., has been humbugging several persons around here within a few weeks past. He claimed, when here, to hail from Chelsea; boasts of his wealth, and also of his benevolence; said he was an Adventist, and claimed acquaintance with many of the brethren there and in the surrounding towns. Said he studied with Dr. Bigelow, and was head physician at the City Hospital for three years, and also understood surgery. The fact is, he is a liar, a swindler, and quack; and don't know enough about medicine to doctor a cow. His remedies have, in several cases, to my knowledge, done more harm than good. Show the hypocrite up, and look out for traveling scamps like him.

A TRIBUTE.

To the Brn. in Christ, Greeting:—We, the undersigned, feel it a fit tribute to one so near and dear to us, as is Bro. Charles C. Ramsay, a minister of the gospel in Christ, to give him our hearty co-operation, and bid him God-speed in the cause he is so particularly blessed in, and so fully able to defend; and wherever he may go, our prayers will follow him, for the ties that bind us together are of the most endearing nature. We shall much deplore his absence from among us, and shall ever feel grateful to our heavenly Father, and thankful to our brother that we have ever heard such precious truths from a heart so full of the spirit of the Master, and so congenial to his kindred in the precious faith.

H. P. Wright, 1st Elder, L. C. Rice, 2nd Elder, of Adv. Chris. Society, South Green St., between Madison and Monroe, Chicago.

Obituaries.

Died in Wrentham, Mass., May 6th, Bro. Thomas Richards, aged about seventy-six years.

Bro. Richards had for many years been a firm believer in Christ and his gospel. He was a believer in the personal and near coming of the Savior to reign on the earth. He took the Bible for his rule of faith. He did not rely upon tradition of the fathers, or upon the teachings of men who have lived since the days of those who wrote the Bible. He received the teachings of Christ, and his apostles, without adding to or taking from them. He did not infer from one passage a doctrine that would contradict a fact stated in another. He was strictly evangelical in his faith. His whole religious life was uniform and consistent. By his request the funeral was attended by the writer, and remarks made from Col. 3: 4. Our Bro. had but few relatives, though a large circle of personal friends. He has left a widow, who is not only afflicted by his death, but by severe sickness of one of her children, not expected to recover. May the event be sanctified to all the surviving friends. J. S. White.

Bean. Died, in West Deerfield, N. H., April 11th, 1871, Sr. Sarah A. Bean, daughter of Bro Rufus P. Bean, aged eighteen years, eleven months, and eight days.

Sr. Sarah was an amiable, cheerful, and intelligent girl, and loved by all who knew her. In the summer of 1867 she gave her heart to God, and the following autumn was baptized by the writer, at Alton Bay. She died of consumption. She gave remarkable evidence that the Lord was with her by his Spirit. About three months before she died, she met with us in the prayer meeting. A large number of her youthful companions and school-mates were present, and her exhortation to them will never be forgotten. She told them that was the last time they would ever hear her voice in meeting; that she was going to die, with the hope of living again on the new earth; and she invited and urged them to prepare to meet her there. That was her last meeting. When the hour of dissolution came, she told the weeping circle which stood around her bed, that all was peace; and with a heavenly smile upon her face, she sweetly fell asleep. Funeral service by Elder John Parsons, John M. Quimby, and the writer.

Enoch Morrill.

Douglas. Died, in New York, April 25th, Jane C., wife of Franklin Douglas, aged thirty-eight years, three months, and fourteen days.

Bilious fever of one week's duration ended eleven years of suffering from rheumatism, during which time she has been unable to walk or stand. During the past three years she gradually lost the use of her arms, and the past year has been fed mostly by her three precious children. Her general theme has been the Christian's hope, Jesus and the resurrection. Her death was so sudden, she was spared the pain of parting with her family. Elder Cox and Sr. A. E. Smith presented Bible comfort to mourners and friends. She was taken to Syracuse for burial. Many relatives and friends met at the second funeral, and were comforted by remarks from Rev. Mr. Wightman, Wesleyan minister, who was personally acquainted with her. The children sadly miss a mother's constant presence, love and instruction. As days and nights pass, the vacancy increases, but the knowledge that "it's well with her" comforts her companion, and stimulates him to continued faithfulness. Franklin Douglas.

James. Died, in Rochester, N. Y., May 3d, 1871, Erastus A. James, aged forty-eight years.

Thus again has death entered our family, and another of its members fallen a victim to his power. Within a very few years death has made great havoc in our family. First my oldest sister, then another younger sister, then my father, then my youngest sister at my house, and now my only surviving sister's husband. But amid it all, we have had sustaining grace, and have been enabled to lean on the everlasting arm. All died in hope. He has been suffering all winter, and had two cancers taken out, but death was the result. He gave himself to the Lord several months before his death, and greatly desired to live to set a christian example before the world. The blow falls heavily upon his wife and two sons. May they be comforted by hope, be sustained by grace, and prepared when the trump of God shall summon forth the dead to meet him, and reign in everlasting life.

A. P. Moore.

Davis. Died, in Lake Village, N. H., May 5th, 1871, Martha E., daughter of Alvin and Mary E. Davis, aged twenty-one years and seven months.

Martha had an intelligent mind, and was possessed of an amiable disposition, which won for her many friends. In her last sickness, which was quick consumption, she gave her heart to God, and found Christ precious. She died in peace, and rests in hope. She leaves a father and mother of like precious faith, three brothers, and a large circle of friends to mourn, but not as others that have no hope. The writer endeavored to speak comforting words at the funeral, from Mark 5: 39—"The damsel is not dead, but sleepeth." A. Ross.

Also, July 21st, 1870, Mary, infant daughter of Alvin and Mary S. Davis. Funeral attended by Elder A. Damman.

Lewis. Died, in Thomaston, Ct., April 30th, 1871, Bro. Geo. A. Lewis, aged thirty-eight years.

Bro. Lewis has been a firm believer in the blessed hope a number of years, and an exemplary christian, faithful in every position in life. He was an affectionate husband, a kind and loving father, and a good neighbor. This glorious hope sustains his companion in this hour of deep affliction. May the widow's God and the Father of the fatherless continue to abide with her and her two children, and bring them with the sleeping one to share the glories of the kingdom of Christ,

"Where no farewell tear is shed."

W. R.

McCormickey. Died, in Charlesville, Barrington, N. S., Feb. 14th, 1871, after much suffering, Bro. Josiah McCormickey, aged sixty years.

Although our brother suffered much, he bore it with great patience. He was a firm believer in the second coming of Jesus to awake the sleeping dead, and give immortality and eternal life to all his saints. This blessed hope sustained him to the last. Words of comfort were spoken from Rev. 14: 13. Wm. Halliday.

McCormickey. Died, in Charlesville, N. S., March 17th, 1871, Sr. Rebeckah, wife of Bro. Josiah McCormickey, aged fifty years.

In former years, our deceased sister and her companion were connected with the Freewill Baptists in Barrington, N. S. When they heard of the speedy return of our Lord, some three years ago, they identified themselves with the first Advent church in Barrington. Our sister feared no evil as she passed through the dark valley. Her end was peace. Words of comfort were spoken from 1 Thess. 4: 14, by the writer,

Wm. Halliday.

Warner. Died, in Dover, N. H., April 15th, 1871, of consumption, Sr. Julia A. Warner, aged fifty-six years.

Our sister suffered much, but bore it with great patience. She leaves four kind sons and a daughter to mourn their loss. May they be prepared to meet where suffering, death and separation will never come. Funeral services by the writer.

J. G. Smith.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, May 9. It is reported here on good authority that a plebiscite will be immediately ordered. It is also reported that the country districts of France are unanimously in favor of Napoleon, and that by Monday he will be declared Emperor of France.

Versailles, May 10. One hundred and twenty-nine cannon were captured in Fort Issy, fifty of which were brought to this city. Large quantities of ammunition and provisions were found in the fort, as also considerable brandy infused with tobacco. The latter rendered fatal the wounds of those who drank it. The capture of Issy has caused terror among the Parisians.

The battery at Montretout continues a furious fire upon the southwestern portion of Paris, to which the Federalists make a feeble reply.

It is claimed by the government that the Communists statement that the garrison escaped from Issy before the capture of the fort, is untrue.

The Versailles forces are slowly but surely approaching the encients of Paris.

Paris, May 10. The Commune asserts that the garrison of Fort Issy has certainly escaped capture.

Gen. Rossel closes the communication to the Commune, complaining he had not received proper support, in the following words: "Two courses were open to our forces, viz., to break through obstacles which environ Paris, or to retire. The former has been found to be impossible, and therefore we have retired. I have the honor to ask a cell in Mazas."

Paris, May 11. Fort Vanvres was captured last night by the Versailles troops and was held for a short time, when it was recaptured by the Communist forces. There has been desperate fighting there to-day. The fort is in a very dilapidated condition, and the forces of the Commune will be obliged to evacuate it. The Government troops make daring attacks on Neuilly and Asnieres.

Paris, May 12. Under orders from the Commune the Bank of France has been searched for arms, but none were discovered.

It is rumored that the Federalists are evacuating Fort Vanvres.

Versailles, May, 12. A letter from Count De Chambord, making a strong bid for the throne, is published to-day.

Le Vengeur reports the increasing discouragement among the National Guard, and says that an attempt has been made to assassinate Dombrowski.

London, May 13. The Times' dispatch from Paris says that the clerks in the Bank of France have been armed and victualed, and are resolved to stand a siege from the Federalists.

More newspapers have been suppressed.

Fighting is reported at St. Owen, which shows that the sphere of attack is extending.

The German Commander has demanded the disarmament of the northern encients of Paris.

A naval combat has occurred at the Anteuil Viaduct, and one of the insurgent gunboats sunk.

Fifty thousand Versaillist troops will cross the Seine to-night to strengthen the force already in occupation of the towns of Boulogne and Billancourt.

A reconnoissance under Dombrowski has chased the Versaillists from Saltonville.

A permanent court martial has been established in Paris.

Versailles, May 13. The Seminary of Issy has been captured, with considerable loss to the Federalists. Eight cannon have been captured at Oiseaux, where one hundred insurgents were killed and several hundred taken prisoners. The approaches to the ramparts and fortifications of Paris are being actively pushed forward under the cover of a heavy cannonade of the entire Federal works.

McMahon has issued an address to his soldiers, which is apparently preliminary to a grand attack.

Numerous papers have been suppressed.

The Commune has ordered religious instruction to cease, and all crucifixes and madonnas to be removed from the schools.

The Siecle says that a vast Bonapartist organization exists throughout France.

Paris, May 14—Sunday noon. Yesterday Dombrowski ordered all officers refusing to obey their superiors to be shot. He reviewed five thousand troops this morning, at Neuilly, with great enthusiasm. After breakfast yesterday Dombrowski rode in front of Porte Maillot and was fired at by the Versaillists with rifles and two shells without hitting him. He took off his hat and bowed politely. The men cheered lustily.

Yesterday a grand procession of women, headed by bankers and drummers, marched to the Hotel de Ville and demanded arms. To-day a proclamation has been issued authorizing female battalions to be organized immediately to stimulate the men. All cowardly males are to be led to prison by females. The women are to march against the Versaillists.

Beslay, called the father of the Commune, retires from the membership of that body because the residence of Thiers has been despoiled.

All persons having sulphur or phosphorus in their possession are required to report it to the Commune.

There is indubitable evidence that there is a wide spread conspiracy in Paris for the overthrow of the Commune.

Paris, May 15. Twenty-eight Archbishops and Bishops of the Catholic Church have addressed a petition to Emperor Francis Joseph, requesting him to inform the King of Italy that the independence of the Pope is necessary to the Catholic Church, and demand that Rome and a suitable territory be immediately returned to the Pope. The petitioners say it is the duty of all other Catholic powers, and of the Protestant powers also, to make a similar demand.

DOMESTIC.

Fort Laramie, May 9. A great battle took place yesterday between several thousand Indians and United States troops, numbering several hundred, in the Wind River District. The troops were surprised in the attack, which was led by several of the most noted chiefs of the Snake, Cheyenne and Sioux Indians, of which tribes the Indian army was composed. The Indians were defeated after a very hard battle, in which several hundred of the redskins "bit the dust," including two of the bravest chiefs. The loss of the troops was comparatively small. It is feared that a general Indian war is inevitable, and every preparation will be made for it.

Terrible Ravages of the Yellow Fever in Buenos Ayres.—Letters received in Portland from Buenos Ayres give additional particulars of the fearful ravages of the yellow fever at that South American city. Mr. Edward E. Spring, whose death, March 28th, has been mentioned, left Portland last October. He was at the estancia of Messrs. Spring when the fever broke out one hundred miles away. Hearing some near friends were sick with it, he immediately hurried to the city and devoted himself to their care, and was soon himself a victim. It is also stated that there is absolutely no business in Buenos Ayres, and the fever was increasing. More than half the population have left the city. Out of 200,000 but 30,000 have remained. On the 3d of April the deaths were over five hundred. Some 15,000 have already died; 9,000 more are sick. One hundred native doctors have run away, the foreign doctors barely remaining. No business whatever is being transacted. The first death among Americans was Mr. John H. Bean of Brownfield, Me., a young man of fine qualities, widely known there and esteemed. His uncle, Mr. Andrew C. Bean, was attacked with the fever, and after being given up by four physicians recovered. The case of Dr. Ayer of Fryeburg, Me., was given up as hopeless. The American residents nobly stand by each other. Among those who, with true and christian bravery, were zealous in their good work are Capt. Nash of New York, Rev. Mr. Jackson of the Methodist Church, and Mr. Dexter Clapp, the American Consul. Mr. Jackson is reported dangerously sick with the fever. Advices received via Rio de Janeiro, Lisbon, London and New York give a fortnight's later news, up to April 17. The fever then was increasing, some seven hundred deaths per day taking place.

Conference intend to double their effort for the spread of Bible truth, hoping and expecting the brethren will help by their means and prayers. Let those who see a good opening, and desire a meeting in their neighborhood, write us of the prospects, and their desires, for we shall soon make arrangements for meetings. L. Boutell, For the Committee.

Notice.

The Mass. A. C. Conference will hold its next quarterly session in Salem, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 6th, and holding over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that the preaching brethren will make a special effort to attend this meeting, and come filled with a spirit of labor, so that the glad tidings of a soon coming Savior may be echoed throughout the length and breadth of the city. Maine S. A. C. Christian Conference.

EXTRA SESSION.

As the executive board has been petitioned to call an extra session of the Maine Second Advent Christian Conference, to be holden in Portland, in Union Hall, on Free Street, and as there are several items of important business to be attended to; we therefore appoint to meet at Union Hall, Portland, Tuesday, June 13th, at two P. M. A full attendance of the ministers and delegates is desired. Remember, each church or society is entitled to one delegate, and one additional for every ten members, duly chosen and furnished with certificates. Come, brethren, praying that the Lord may direct us in all our work, and make the conference a blessing to his cause. Let all collections for the Maine Mission and Tent cause be reported at conference.

I. C. Wellcome, Sec.

New York Campmeeting and Annual Conference.

Dear Brn. of New York Conference:—At a meeting of your committee in Rochester, May 1st, a quorum, as undersigned, being present, it was thought advisable, as suggested at last conference, and therefore decided unanimously, to hold a campmeeting in connection with the coming annual session in June. Certainly the cause demands a grand rally of all the working forces of this State to come up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

The meeting will be held in Stephen N. Whitney's grove, one mile and a half south east of Albion, commencing on Thursday, June 8th, 1871, and to continue one week. All trains stop at Albion, and ample arrangements will be made for the transportation of persons and baggage to and from the camp-ground. Further particulars hereafter. William E. Brown, Secretary.

The business of conference, which is rather important for this session, election of officers, etc., will be disposed of in the morning and A. M. sessions, as early in the meeting as possible. Let all ministers and delegates be as early at the meeting as they can. The large new State Tent will be put upon the ground for dedication. The old "State Tent" and the "Lord's Tent" will also be on the ground for the accommodation of strangers, and such as cannot well supply themselves with family tents. Let none forget overcoats, thick shawls, quilts, and such other articles of clothing and bedding as are necessary for camping out.

It is expected that as many as can will associate themselves in family tents, providing themselves with board, etc. But there will be a small boarding tent, though sufficient to supply all those that cannot arrange for themselves, at reasonable rates.

Wm. E. Brown, Lauren Grinnell, A. Riggs, N. Withington, N. McCulloch,	Committee.

Family Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held on the ground occupied last year, four miles east of Avalanche, commencing May 31st, 1871, and hold over Lord's day. It is desirable that all who come will be on hand the first day. It is a very small sacrifice to make for the perishing, in the name of Jesus. He made a greater one for us. Let nothing hinder us from coming the first day, but an impossibility; and come to work as never before. Let us try and pull some wanderer out of the fire, hating even the garments spotted by the flesh. Poles for tents may be obtained on the ground. The committee will furnish hay for all teams, whose owner's tent is on the ground. Bro. Thurber, of Sparta, will be in attendance. Whereas the committee and friends, who reside in the place, will (and intend to) bear the heaviest burden, we hope those who are able will not forget to help them. The poor will be cared for. Brethren and sisters, come to work. The Lord will soon come, then our work will be done.

For the Committee, P. W. Hough.

Wisconsin Campmeeting.

This meeting is to be held at Prairie du Sac (Upper Sauk), Sauk Co., on the old camp-ground, beginning on the 4th of June. We hope to witness a large gathering of pilgrims. Come with tents, if possible. All coming by R. R. between Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien will stop at Mazomanie, and take stage ten miles to the meeting. Those coming over the R. R. between Milwaukee and La Crosse, can take a steamboat every other day at Portage City, or a stage daily at Kilbourn City, direct to the meeting.

Wisconsin friends will please, so far as possible, to come in time to pitch tents on Saturday, June 3d. Fare from Mazomanie, by stage, only 25 cts. Usually boats leave Portage City for Sauk on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. We wish to begin on Sunday morning with a full grown campmeeting, at high water mark.

O. S. Knapp, P. W. Matts, Wm. Sheldon,	Committee.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The Wisconsin Conference will convene in connection with the State campmeeting at Prairie du Sac, and hold its first session on the 10th of June. Let the churches elect their delegates in time, and let all ministers who wish to unite come in season. Members and churches unable to attend, will please report by letter to the Secretary in season for the meeting. Wm. Sheldon, Secretary.

Conference.

The Conference for Southern Indiana will commence at Jeffersonville, Wednesday, May 24th, 1871. As we wish all the State to be included in the organization, it is desirable that there should be a full representation from all parts of the State. Let the churches, then, send delegates and provide for their traveling expenses. The church at Jeffersonville will make ample provision for all who may attend. N. Field, Pastor of the Church at Jeffersonville.

Conference.

The Advent Conference of Nova Scotia will hold its next annual meeting at Bear River, Digby Co., Nova Scotia, commencing Saturday, June 17th. A general invitation is extended to all, especially to preaching brethren. The churches are particularly requested to send delegates.

J. J. Woodworth.

Notice.

I supplied a number of brethren with works at campmeetings last year, and those who can possibly send me what is due by mail, in June, I wish they would do so, as I am much in debt for printing, and ought to pay up. If any can aid me in throwing off the unpleasant burden of being in debt, it will be thankfully received. Age and health prevent my obtaining means to live and pay debts as formerly. Direct to J. Blain, Buffalo, N. Y.

To Bro. J. S. Potter.—I received the barrel of flour from you, by the packet, for which I return many thanks, with the blessing of God: hoping that you will be blest with that reward that will be given at the resurrection of the just. I am so that I can walk out some. All glory to God. Amen. A. B. Swannburg.

WHO IS THE CHRISTIAN?

Who is the genuine Christian man?
Portray for me that righteous man.
Is it he who neither drinks nor swears,
But goes to church and says his prayers,
Looks pious, pays his tithes, and then
Thanks God he's not like other men?
Rolls up his eyes and cries, Ah, me!
How dreadful wicked sinners be!
And most intensely disapproves
Of all sin, save the sin he loves;—
Is he the Christian? Bless you, he Is just a snuffling Pharisee!

Who is he, then, the Christian man,
How shall we know the blessed man?
Is it he who feeds the poor with prayer,
And gives them cant for clothes to wear?
Is it he who, with a solemn whine,
Exhorteth me, but stealeth mine?
Who, casting Satan out on Sunday,
Invites him in again on Monday,
And deems the foulest wrong is right
If it be covered well from sight;—
Is he the Christian? Not a whit!
He's but a canting hypocrite!

Who is he then, the Christian man?
Come let us see the wondrous man.
Is it he who, ere the east is red,
On week days blithely leaps from bed,
And marches off with cheery song,
To toil for mammon all day long;—
But Sunday sleeps till noon, and then
Loiters to church and sleeps again,
Returns a visit, takes a ride,
And deems his God is glorified?
Is he the Christian? Nay, I paint
The features of a modern saint.

Who is he, then, the Christian man?
Point out the noble-hearted man.
Is it he, the pious soul, who pays
For preaching by his shouts of praise,
And gives, for fuel and repairs,
His exhortations, psalms, and prayers?
Then sits and sings with holy glee,
I'm glad, I'm glad salvation's free;
Nor of the wealth which heaven has lent,
Will ever yield the Lord a cent?
Is he the Christian? If he be,
Salvation must, indeed, be free.

Who is he, then, the Christian man,
Constructed on the gospel's plan?
Is it he who gives the Lord his pelf,
And therefore lives to suit himself,
Deeming the builded synagogue
Absolves him from the Decalogue?
Who never fasts and seldom prays,
But then how like a prince he pays!
And holds it cause for just complaint,
Unless you reckon him a saint!—
Is he the Christian? Nay, I guess
The Lord regards him something less.

Who is he, then, the Christian man?
Bring forth at last the righteous man.
It's he who with a soul sincere,
Loves God and holds his neighbor dear;
Denies himself, nor swerves from right
In darkness more than in the light;
Who renders God and man their due,
Even when no law compels him to,
And builds his life upon the plan,
That serving God is blessing man;—
Such men are Christians, but I fear
They are not over numerous here.

EXTRACTS FROM SPURZHEIM.

No. 2.

F. H. BURBANK.

"It is an error to say that animals act solely by instinct. It is true that some of their doings, such as the labor of instincts, are the result of mere instinctive powers, but many animals modify their actions according to external circumstances; they even select one among different motives, and often resist their internal impulsions or instincts. A dog may be hungry, but with the opportunity he will not eat, because he remembers the blows which he has received for having done so under similar circumstances. If, in following his master, he is separated from him by a carriage, he does not throw himself under the feet of the horses or its wheels, but waits till it has passed, and then by increasing his speed he overtakes his master. "This shows that some animals act with understanding. On the other hand, though new-born children cry, and suck the finger, they certainly do not act from understanding. And, if men of great genius manifest talents without knowing that such faculties exist; if they calculate, sing, or draw, without any previous education, do they not so by some internal impulse, or instinct, as well as the animals which sing, build, migrate, and gather provisions? Instinct, then, is not confined to animals, and understanding is not a prerogative of mankind. . . .

"Did animals and men learn all from others, why should individuals, similarly circumstanced in regard to manner of living and instruction, excel the rest? Why should one nightingale sing better than another living in the same wood? Why, amongst a drove of oxen, or horses, is one individual good-tempered and meek, and another ill-natured and savage? M. Dupont de Nemours had a cow which singularly knew how to open the gates of an enclosure; none of the herd ever learned to imitate its procedure, but waited impatiently near the entrance for its leader. I have the history of a pointer, which, when kept out of a place near the fire by the other dogs of the family, used to go into the yard and bark; all immediately came and did the same; meanwhile he ran in, and secured the best place. Though his companions were often deceived, none of them ever imitated his stratagem. I also knew of a little dog, which, when eating with large ones, behaved in the same manner, in order to secure his portion, or to catch some good bits. These are instances of genius among animals, which are by no means the result of instruction.

"Children often show particular dispositions and talents before they have received any kind of education. Almost every great man has, in infancy, given earnests of future eminence. Achilles, hidden in Pyrrha's clothes, took the sword from among the presents of Ulysses. Themistocles, when a child, said that he knew how to aggrandize and render a state powerful. Alexander would not dispute any prize at the Olympic games, unless his rivals were kings. At fourteen years of age, Cato, of Utica, showed the greatest aversion to tyranny. Nero was cruel from his cradle. Pascal, when twelve years old, published his treatise on Conic Sections. Voltaire made verses when only seven years of age. The number of such instances is very great, and it is unnecessary to mention more here, as they must be within the scope of every ones knowledge. . . .

"After having seen what nature does in man, let us inquire into the means by which she effects it. Religious people commonly believe in a mere supernatural dispensation of gifts; but there cannot be a doubt of natural causes also contributing to produce the phenomena of mind. "I may follow the example of other natural philosophers, and confine myself to proving a relation between the body and the manifestations of the mind, or, I may endeavor to determine the special powers of the mind and the respective organs. This latter task has been accomplished by Phrenology. Here I shall only show, in a summary way, how reasoning coincides with observation. It is important duly to appreciate my expressions upon the subject. I do not say the organization produces the affective and intellectual faculties of man's mind, as a tree brings forth fruit, or an animal procreates its kind; I only say that organic conditions are necessary to the manifestations of mind.

"I never venture beyond experience; and therefore consider the faculties of the mind only in as far as they become apparent by the organization. Neither denying nor affirming anything which cannot be verified by experiment, I make no researches on the lifeless body nor on the soul alone, but on man as a living agent. I never question what the affective and intellectual faculties may be in themselves; do not attempt to explain how the body and soul are united and exercise a mutual influence, nor examine what the soul can effect without the body. The soul may be united to the body at the moment of conception or afterwards; it may be different in every individual, or be of the same kind in all; it may be an emanation from God, or something else. Whatever metaphysicians and theologians may decide in regard to these various points, the position, that manifestations of the faculties of the mind depend, in this life, on organization, cannot be shaken. Let us then consider the proofs which reasoning affords of this principle of Phrenglogy.

I. Difference of the Sexes. The faculties of the mind are modified in the sexes; some are more energetic in men, others in women. Do then the souls of men and women differ, or is it more probable, that the faculties are modified because their organs or instruments vary? Phrenology shows that certain parts of the brain are more developed in men, others in women; and thus renders the peculiarities in the mental manifestations of each, easily explicable. There are, however, many instances in which the intellectual faculties of women resemble those of men, and the contrary.

"II. Individuality of every person. The mental faculties are modified in every individual. Now, is it probable that the soul differs universally, or is it more likely, that as the whole human kind has descended from an original pair, all modifications of the faculties may be explained by differences in the organs on which each respectively depends? Like species of animals, and man also, have essentially the same corporal structure, there is merely difference of proportion and development in the various parts of which the body is composed; and these differences in the organs produce corresponding varieties in the functions attached to them.

"III. Ages. Mental manifestations are modified by age. Either the soul, or its instruments, therefore, must produce these modified manifestations. It is ascertained that certain faculties appear early in life, or at a later period, according as the peculiar organs of each are developed. The same law holds in both affective and intellectual faculties; the manifestations of all are not simultaneous. Several of both orders appear in infancy, others not before maturer years; several, too, disappear earlier, whilst others endure till the end of life. Now as we know that manifestations of the mental powers always accord with certain organic conditions, it is impossible to overlook their dependence on organization."

In our next, we will give his "further proofs," which will be found to increase in power and interest. I think that all can detect readily his skepticism in regard to the common theory of man. All his reasoning conforms to the Mosaic account of the creation of man. If this age should continue a century longer, all christendom would be revolutionized, and the old theory of man, invented by the serpent, would be supplanted by the older theory of the Almighty, committed by him to Moses.

COLPORTEUR'S NOTES.—No. 2.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Called at a house in A—— and showed my books to the lady. She called a minister who resided in the house.

Colporteur. "Would you like a good book to-day?"

Minister. "What have you to sell?" He examined the books a little, and read their titles—"Signs of the Times,"—"Plan of Redemption,"—"Berean's Casket,"—"Christian Baptism," etc.,—and laid them down. "No, I don.t want them. Do you dare offer a work advocating immersion on this road?"

C. "Yes, sir, I am not afraid nor ashamed to offer any books I carry. Are you a Baptist minister?"

M. "I am, but all the people in this neighborhood believe in sprinkling, and they will be down on any one who meddles with that."

C. "So much more reason that we should be faithful, and put the truth before them. Here is a tract on 'The New Heavens and New Earth,' and one on the resurrection of the dead. Will you read them?"

M. "Yes, I will read them. Do you believe in a literal resurrection of all the dead?"

C. "Certainly. That is the promise of God, Christ, and the apostles.

M. "Hah! the whole earth would be covered twenty feet deep with men, if all who have died should be raised literally."

C. "Ah, do you adopt infidel ground to help the Lord out of difficulty? Did you ever enter upon a mathematical calculation of this subject to learn the truth? Infidels have blown up this bubble, and christian ministers should examine it and see its weakness, instead of adopting it. Please hear me read from 'The Berean's Casket' a true statement of facts on this case under the caption—

'AN INFIDEL OBJECTION EXPLODED.'"

M. "I would like to hear it read."

C. "Here it is. I will read concerning the entire population of the world from Adam until now, then the number of square feet of the surface of New York State, which gives room to bury twice the entire population of the globe since Adam."

M. "Let me examine that calculation." He took the book and very carefully examined the estimates, and replied, "Well, I am not the only fool you have found on this subject."

C. "No, no; there are many of them; but it is a great pity that Christians and ministers should allow infidel cant and ignorance to guide their ideas of religious theology, instead of investigating to learn facts."

M. "I never thought to look into this matter; but I shall do so now. Thank you for these remarks, and tracts. I hope you will call on me again."

Thus closed one half day's efforts to sow seed on all sorts of ground, hoping some would fall into good ground and bear fruit.

LONG SERMONS.

M. W. POTTER.

We often see pieces in the Crisis headed as the above. The general tenor of these pieces has been directed particularly to the ministry. We have often wished that some one would speak not only of "long sermons" in the pulpit, but of "long sermons" in the social meetings, and also of long prayers. We frequently go to meeting and hear some pray ten minutes, or more, and then speak as long by way of exhortation. Paul, in writing to his Hebrew brethren, commands them to exhort one another, and so much the more as they see the day approaching. It is better to speak often, than to speak so long that every one is anxious for the time to come when they will sit down. It would be a great deal better to speak three, or four, or even half a dozen times, than to speak so long that every body gets tired of hearing. The great beauty of speaking is to speak just what the Lord has for us to speak, and then sit down. When we talk just because we can talk, or pray because we can pray, it won't amount to much; but when we are led by the Holy Spirit, we shall speak just long enough, and pray just long enough to ask for the very things that we stand in need of.

The great difficulty is, we want to be somebody, and appear smart before the world. But if we could see ourselves in the same light that God sees us, it does seem that we should be more willing to be led by him, and to follow him whithersoever he leads. Our appearing well, or talking well, never will save us; we must have Christ formed within the hope of glory. We must have his Spirit, or else we are none of his. We wish that drags were unknown in a prayer-meeting; for of all the things disagreeable is a dragging prayer-meeting. Let us beware of dragging not only in prayer and exhortation, but also in singing. We like to have singing with the "Spirit and with the understanding also." But what Spirit can there be in a drag? Some have a peculiar fancy for singing the whole hymn, if there are a dozen verses; and if there is any life in the meeting, it is all gone by the time that the hymn is dragged through. May God give us grace and wisdom, and help us to know his will and do it.

Melvin Village, N. H., April 3rd.

[The foregoing is full of common sense, and practical thoughts.—ED.

CALLING NAMES.

D. T. NEWTON, Author of "Home Thrusts."

"Speak thou the truth. Let others fence
And trim their words for pay;
In pleasant sunshine or pretence,
Let others bask their day."

Call names? Who can help it? Who dares? Wherefore specify? Because God does. Good names and bad names, from Genesis to Revelation. He holds up wicked folks to the gaze of the universe, to look at; and also the good folks—the blessed evermore. See Abraham, the father of the faithful; look at him. Moses, also, the meekest of men; Joshua, who, in answer to prayer, caused the sun to stand still. David, the sweet singer of Israel; Solomon, the wisest of the wise; the good Hezekiah and Josiah; Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel; sons of thunder, sons of fire; the three blessed ones cast into the fiery furnace, heated seven times hotter that is wont. Wherefore called? For ensamples? Assuredly. O, for a host of Shadrach's, Meshach's, and Abednego's, who will stand the fire—fires on fires—come life, come death. Lord, send them.

But stop, where is Job, the most patient of the patient? Pass him by? Never, nor the true Bible reformers, Ezra and Nehemiah. Praise the Lord for these bold ones for God, truth, and love. Come nearer home. Take a peep at John the Baptist, filled with the Holy Spirit from his birth. Shrink from truth, from reproof, at the loss of his head? When? where? God of mercy, send us more of these thunderers, who spurn from their inmost soul cowardice in the field of battle. Its thunder, thunder, THUNDER. Load and fire; load and fire, but bombshells of God's truth, into the very midst of Satan's camp, leaving consequences with God for execution.

Then comes on the docket Paul, Peter, James and John. What were they? Sycophants? Ephraims? turning aside in the day of battle? time-servers, intemperate daubers, bowing here, bowing there to popular conservatisms? loving the praise of men more than the praise of God? Look and see, friends. These names are called out. What for? For us to look at, and imitate, with the Lord of glory himself? Who is on the Lord's side? Who?

Turn now your eyes to the bad folks. Seest thou Cain, the first murderer? His name is called out blazingly; so is Pharaoh's, the oppressor. Balaam, the false prophet, is rebuked by the dumb ass for his madness, and money-loving. Look at him, ye false prophets and soothsayers, lovers of "ill-gotten gains." Mark also Nebuchadnezzar. What did he do? Seek his own glory, and not God's? What now? Driven from men, and made to eat grass as oxen, for seven long years, till his hairs were grown like eagle's feathers, and his nails like bird's claws.

"I am the Lord; that is my name; and my glory will I not give to another; neither my praise to graven images." Isa. 42: 8.

Did time and space permit, we might allude to the bloody Manasseh, Ahab, and Jezebel; the hypocritical, time-serving, money-loving Scribes and Pharisees; Simon, the sorcerer; Demetrius, the shrine maker; Alexander, the coppersmith, whose names are called out—held up as beacons of warning; as pillars of fire, blazing out. Thus, in imitation of the blessed Lord and his faithful ones, we call names, for the same reason, the same motives.

The sinner that raises the puny arm against the Most High, in open day, is called out, that heaven and earth may hear. "They that sin openly, rebuke openly." When king David sinned, and his son Solomon—the greatest and wisest of men—mark how their names were called out, and held up to the gaze of all on earth and all in heaven, forever and forever. Even Peter, though he sinned under the pressure of a powerful temptation, is not screened, concealed, or kept behind the curtain. The denial of his Lord and Master stands recorded to this day, for everybody to to look at. Nathan said to David, "Thou art the man." No concealment here. This bloodguiltiness of David stands out prominently in all its naked deformity. Behold the adulterer and the murderer.

Take every instance of open transgression and public outlawry, from Genesis to Revelation; and is there any covering up of the offence, the guilt, or the criminality; any thing like daubing with untempered mortar, or prophesying smoothly? God speaks once, twice, three times, that all may see, all may hear, all may fear. These are Bible facts, placed on record for examples. The prophets called things by their right names, and so did the apostles, "Them that sin openly, rebuke openly, that others may fear." Paul tells Titus, not only to rebuke these open transgressors, but to "rebuke them sharply." "Thou shalt in anywise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him."

"I am not come to send peace on earth," saith the Lord, "but a sword." Matt. 10: 34.

"Thy saints in all this glorious war,
Shall conquer, though they die;
They view the triumph from afar,
By faith they bring it nigh."

Call names? How help it? The very stones would cry out. Call names? Louder and still louder; thunder them from pole to pole; thunder on thunder, peal on peal. Every one in public life, in the church professing discipleship, and still on the side of Satan, should be held up sky high, in all his naked, devilish deformity, in [illegible] of blood, as a beacon of warning to young and old, little and big. What, kill folks, body and soul, murder in open sunshine, deliberately, and no one to scream out, "murder! murder! MURDER!" Stop the murderer, hang him—quick! haste! hang him fifty cubits high.

A PECULIAR POINT.

H. MUNGER.

There have been some peculiar questions asked me of late in different places: Bro. M., what shall we do about trying to sustain our meetings? Some have backed out from helping to support them temporally or spiritually. We few have the whole burden to bear, and but few are interested; now, what is duty? In another place they say, We have had good meetings, some have seen the truth, and been converted; others were interested; but Bro. A, B, C, or D, has just spoiled the interest by pushing in a foreign subject, which the people did not receive, and which we could not comprehend, and the good Spirit is gone. Yet he persists in enforcing his views, because he has a right in the house. Now, what shall we do?

Answer to the first inquiry. If you felt it duty to hoist the flag to show the people the light, and they have had a chance to see and hear, and the interest is running down on account of their unwillingness to come out and help sustain it, and you have done your duty as you feel you have, then give it up, and pick up your living by giving to some other poor church, a few miles off. Help them on Sabbath, and have weekly prayer-meetings at home in private houses, and you will soon see who followed for the loaves and fishes, and who had a heart in the work. This is a peculiar message—not to gather the world, or large congregations, but to stir them up to look at it, and decide and come into the valley of decision; and if there are not enough to keep a public meeting running, without crippling a few in their financial affairs, you had better give it up and wait further developments from the Lord, as to duty. This is a message for this age, as a witness; and if you have testified to the people in your place, and they don't receive it, go to another place, and not try to weld cold iron by hammering it.

This applies only to such places as I have been requested to advise in these matters. There are other places, far different; so no rule of advice is adapted to all. We are a "peculiar people," looking for the coming of the Lord. This peculiarity subjects all that are called upon to advise, to consider the peculiar position they are in who ask advice. Some churches have men that are able and willing to sustain meetings steadily, and need no advice of this kind.

The second inquiry answered, as I look at it, after forty-five years of religious experience, being now sixty-five. You say you first hired a hall, and all had a right to speak as they pleased, and the Lord blessed you. Next, built a chapel, by choosing a committee to receive donations, and all that paid in had a right, according to what they paid towards it. Now, as your hearts were warm and honest, you supposed all were so that admitted the truth you love so dearly. You ought to have first formed a religious society, before you built, and then those joining your society had the right to act as directors, and no others. Then you could have chosen proper persons as trustees of the property, and furnished your house with the furniture suitable for keeping house in an orderly manner. This could be done without a church organization, which is far better in many localities. In this way you get rid of the element you have got in among you, that have taken advantage of your honest ignorance, and have assumed a position where they will rule or ruin. Such persons cannot give any heat to the body, nor light to a spiritual mind; or water to a thirsty soul; but can and will empty some slops into the bowl, thus defiling the whole, and the lambs will not drink.

Your only way is to endure it, live in a quarrel, or organise leaving him out, and tendering him what money he paid in, if he claims it before evidence. This has been successful in some cases, when they could not remove the cancer without. I know of no other remedy in your case. We must mark in some way those that cause division contrary to the gospel. Perhaps some other Bro. may suggest a better plan. There is a call for the best antidote.

APPEAL TO CHRISTIAN PARENTS.

L. M. WESCOATT.

In our meetings for prayers and exhortations, we hear an oft expressed desire to get nearer to God, to have a more perfect communion with him. Week after week is the same desire manifested, yet they do not seem to receive an answer to their prayers. Are they in earnest? Is it the desire above all others? Do they go to their Father in secret, and often? Do they ask for the assistance of the Holy Spirit, that they might gain this position? And will not the Giver of every good and perfect gift answer this petition? His word declares he is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children; so we see they must be in a position where God can bless them. Sometimes we hear a mother or sister saying it is so little they can do for Christ, that they are almost discouraged. Dear brother or sister, you who have children committed to your care, is it a small matter to train them for Jesus? Are you faithful in the discharge of your duty to them? Have you given them to the Lord, and are you watching over them with jealous care? Truly, we are living in perilous times. How few children do we find walking the narrow way. O! what a responsibility rests upon parents; those who profess to follow Him, who was meek and lowly. Are you leading your little ones in this same good way? teaching them by precept and example to make the golden rule the rule of their lives?

Oh! how my heart was pained one Sabbath, on meeting a part of a class (not from one of our fashionable churches, where such treatment might be expected, but from our own little Advent church), whose hearts were filled with sorrow, and their eyes with tears, as they spoke of the ridicule and contempt they were experiencing Sabbath after Sabbath from other members of the class, on account of their dress. I spoke of this to a member of the church. She says, "I cannot get one of my children into the Sabbath school on that very account." Soon after meeting another sister, I spoke of it again. She replied, "My daughter has refused to go again on account of remarks made upon her dress. I know of others who are in doubt if it is duty to compel children to attend the Sabbath school. How long, O Lord, shall this unholy passion rule and reign among thy people? Mothers, will you have mercy upon yourselves and your children? Are they not exposed to temptation on every hand? Will you, who have felt when living nearest to God, that the adorning of your persons was a sin in his sight, will you nourish the pride and vanity of your little ones, by making them bow down to the God of this world? Do you believe that if you sow to the wind, you will reap the whirlwind? Look around you. See how many of the young to-day are on the downward road to destruction, giving up parents, home, the love of friends, reputation, health, and often life, to gratify their desire for dress. How many mothers are to-day mourning their children forever lost; for the sorrow of the world worketh death, eternal death. Christian mothers, is not the admonition to you, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; . . . for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world?" O remembes, "when pride cometh, then cometh shame; but with the lowly is wisdom." Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.

How this desire for personal adornment is increasing, not only in our Sabbath schools, but in our daily schools. What necessity then for christian mothers to take a firm and decided stand against this sin. The world may remonstrate, Satan may tempt, ingenious arguments may explain away; it is enough for us, "Thus saith the Lord.' If our duty is difficult, bring it to the test of prayer. Let prayer consecrate every thing; our time, our talents, our joys, and sorrows. "A word spoken in due season, how good is it." Let us speak gently, yet speak faithfully. O let us beware of every thing that would tend to deaden spirituality of heart, and induce a perilous conformity to the world's tastes, manners, habits, and principles. Let us seek to live above its corroding cares and anxieties; "for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." We are called to labor, to fight, to wrestle, to agonize, and the heavenly reaping will be in proportion to the earthly sowing. O let us be faithful to these little ones committed to our care, that they, with us, may be included at last in the gracious benediction, "Come ye, blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

THE ESCAPED NUN.

Miss Edith O'Gorman, the escaped nun, addressed another large audience last evening in Liberty Hall, giving her closing lecture in New Bedford.

She commenced by appealing to Catholics to be no longer wheedled and cajoled, but to look into the facts and investigate the authority wielded over them. Any one who would enter a convent for six years would see enough to open her eyes. For the wrongs committed in the seclusion of Catholic institutions, the law cannot intervene. British law prevents the Hindoo widow from throwing away her life by the suttee, but the candidate for the nunnery rushes to the destruction of truth, reason, and virtue. And if one is bold enough to tell the truth, she is in danger of mobs instigated by priests in the confessional.

Miss O'Gorman stated that she is a native of Ireland, and though educated in Protestant schools, was a devoted Catholic, and being naturally of strong religious feelings, she became a nun by the advice of her confessor. She had not been long in the convent before she found that the superior was in the habit of entertaining a priest in a suspicious way, giving flimsy excuses for her conduct that would satisfy an inexperienced girl, but not one knowing the peculiarities of conventual life. A girl of an inquiring and reasoning disposition is generally dismissed at the end of her novitiate, on the plea that she does not possess the spirit of obedience, and is therefore not qualified for the veil.

The latter portion of Miss O'Gorman's convent life was spent in Hudson City, N. J. She had done much as a Sister of Charity to needy Catholics, but she felt she was doing them a greater service in exposing the evils of the hierarchy to which they are subject. Wherever priesthood reigns and the confessional is found, poverty, drunkenness, brawls and riots abound. In Hudson City, Father Remuter's congregation may number one thousand of the poorest class in the city, and yet they have to support two priests at salaries of one thousand to one thousand five hundred; and five Sisters of Charity at four hundred each, besides giving to numerous contributions; and though they had a church that with a little alteration and repairs would have been sufficicient, Father Remuter's zeal for the glory of the church has caused the construction of another which will cost one hundred thousand when finished. But Father Remuter never shows any favors or sympathy to his people; he never visits them except to beg. He also has an income of some four hundred for saying masses for souls at one dollar each, but there is no means of knowing whether the masses are actually said or not. He is harsh and domineering in his sermons, and though he condemns drunkenness, he will drink his two quarts of ale at dinner, and his house is well stocked with wines and liquors.

Miss O'Gorman exhorted her Catholic friends to trust for salvation in the merits of Christ alone, and not through the trappings and formalities of Catholic worship. It is not necessary to have the mediation of priests, saints, or the mother of Christ; he is ready to receive all, however unworthy they may be. The Catholic Church is destitute of the meekness and humility and the self-denial of Christ. The good shepherd left his flock to search for the stray lamb, but the Catholic priests, as far as the lecturer's knowledge extended, were wolves in sheep's clothing.

Becoming tired and sick of the hypocrisy of a nunnery, Miss O'Gorman made a visit to Newark, and the next day ran away, with only five dollars in her pocket, to Philadelphia. She applied to the Bishop at Philadelphia for a situation to teach, but could get no assistance unless she would enter a convent. She went next to Archbishop Spalding, of Baltimore, the Pope of America, and she never met a man whose conversation was more unbecoming to the character of a Christian priest. She indignantly left his palace with twenty-five cents in her possession, and walked back to Philadelphia, begging from door to door, and sometimes sleeping under the open sky. At Wilmington she called on Bishop Becker for employment, and he proposed that she should become his housekeeper and pass herself off as his niece, adding that under the circumstances she must see that it was the best thing she could do. She found that the priesthood, up to the highest rank, was rotten to the core. Some would have been glad to aid her, but feared the condemnation of superior authority. Great efforts were made to induce her to resume the veil. Had she applied to Protestants she would have saved herself much suffering, but she was determined to put the holy Catholic Church to the test, and it was found wanting.

Miss O'Gorman said some of the priests had boasted of their ability to turn her into a pillar of salt. They cannot do it, but they can despoil virtue, get beastly drunk, and bamboozle their parishioners, pander to illicit pleasures, and people the world with their doubly unfortunate offspring. The sacred vestments often cover a moral leprosy, and the black veil a lasting sorrow caused by priestly wrongs. The priest takes little notice of the funeral of a poor child, but will follow a rich man to the grave and preach a sermon extolling his virtues, because the rich man buys of the priest the right to eat meat on Fridays and in Lent, or to marry his cousin.

The duplicity, treachery and crimes of the Jesuits have made their name a reproach, and the people of this country must beware of them. The Pope, driven from his temporal power, would be glad to reinstate himself in America. Universal suffrage is against him, but his hope is that the Catholic vote may be held as a balance of power between other parties.—New Bedford Daily Evening Standard, Feb. 20th, 1871.

THE FEAR OF MAN BRINGETH A SNARE.—Prov. 29: 25.

"Mother, said Bessie Dumont, "there was a queer girl came to school to-day. Her father had just moved into the village from the "Uplands." The "Uplands" was a name given to a remote and somewhat uncivilized portion of the township.

"I am glad he lost no time in sending his daughter to school," said Mrs. Dumont, not choosing to notice the epithet Bessie had used.

"She had the coarsest calico dress on that I ever saw, and her shoes were great, thick, heavy things."

"Was her dress clean?"

"Yes, ma'am, it was clean; but it was so coarse, and she looked so frightened, that all the girls laughed at her."

"Did they all laugh at the poor girl?"

"Yes, ma'am; I think they all did."

"And my daughter was one of the number?"

"I didn't want to laugh at her. I felt sorry for her; but all the rest of the girls laughed, and so I laughed, but not much."

"That is, you were not quite so cruel toward her as some others were. Is that a valid excuse?"

"I don't think I was cruel. I only laughed a little with the other girls."

"Did the laugh give her pleasure or pain?"

"I suppose it gave her pain."

"Had she done anything that rendered it proper and right that her schoolmates should inflict pain upon her?"

"I don't know that she had."

"Was she to blame for wearing a coarse dress?"

"No ma'am. I presume her father could not afford to get her a better one."

"Was she to blame for being embarrassed among strangers?"

"No, ma'am."

"Wouldn't it have been better to have gone up to her and spoken kindly to her?"

"Yes, ma'am. I wanted to, but I was afraid the girls would laugh at me if I did. I felt very sorry for her when she came into the school-room, and stood looking so uncomfortable."

"'The fear of man bringeth a snare.' I am very sorry that the fear of your thoughtless companions should lead you to repress your better feeling, and to affect a cruelty that you did not feel."

I am afraid that Bessie is not the only girl who has been prevented by the fear of others from doing what she felt to be her duty. It is very strange that an intelligent being should be ashamed to do right.—Ex.

EVENING HYMN.

Have us in thy holy keeping,
Jesus, through the darksome night,
Guard and shelter us while sleeping;
Bring us to the morning light.

Let us, on thy love reposing,
Fear no evil, feel no care;
But, with wearied eyelids closing,
May each conscious thought be prayer!

PRAYING AND WATCHING.

Is it not a sad thing that we should think it wonderful for God to hear prayer? Much better faith was that of a little boy in one of the schools in Edinburgh, who had attended a prayer-meeting, and at last said to his teacher who conducted it,—

"Teacher, I wish my sister could be got to read the Bible; she never reads it."

"Why, Johnny, should your sister read the Bible?"

"Because if she should once read it, I am sure it would do her good, and she would be converted and saved."

"Do you think so, Johnny?"

"Yes, I do, sir; and wish, the next time there is a prayer-meeting, you would ask the people to pray for my sister, that she may begin to read the Bible."

"Well, well, it shall be done, John."

So the teacher gave out that a little boy was very anxious that prayer should be offered that his sister might begin to read the Bible. John was observed to get up and go out. The teacher thought it very rude of the boy to disturb the people in a crowded room, and so the next day, when the lad came, he said:—

"John, I thought it very rude of you to get up in the prayer-meeting and go out. You ought not to have done so."

"O, sir," said the boy, "I did not mean to be rude; but I thought I should just like to go home and see my sister reading her Bible for the first time."

Thus we ought to believe and watch, with expectation for answers to our prayer. Do not say, "Lord, turn my darkness into light," and then go out with your candle as though you expected to find it dark. After asking the Lord to appear for you, expect him to do so, for according to your faith, so be it unto you.—C. H. Spurgeon.

"IT KEEPS IT IN MY MIND."—It would be hard for most people to give a better reason than this for attending on the social means of grace. A clergyman writing for the American Messenger, says:

"Several little girls were in my study, seeking counsel to aid them in becoming christians. One of them, a dear child, not much more than eleven years old, said:

'I haven't been to two or three of the meetings lately.'

Desiring to test her, I answered:

'It don't make us christians to attend meetings, Lizzie.'

'I know that,' she replied at once, 'but it keeps it in my mind.'"

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

HEALTH AFFECTED BY DIET.—The body is not the only part that becomes morbidly affected by errors in diet; the mind suffers with it. There is great sympathy between the organs of digestion and the brain. These are closely and intimately connected by nervous communication, so that you cannot, to any extent, affect the one, without affecting the other; and to the degree that you affect the brain, to the same degree do you affect the mind; for it is by the action of the brain that mind is produced. Unhealthful food irritates the nerves of the stomach, and through them, the irritation, to a greater or less extent, is conveyed to the brain, causing it to act abnormally.

Many an individual has often wondered why he could not better control his mind, and why his evil passions should often and so easily gain the mastery over him, and become irritable, fretful, peevish, and fault-finding; when, if he would but correct his bad habit of eating, and live on plain, simple and unstimulating food, he would find that his mind would be more easily controlled, and be in a much better condition to bear the trials and difficulties of this life, and he would have a better prospect before him of securing that which is to come.—Dr. Day.

SECRETS OF LONGEVITY.—"To chew well and to walk well," said Bosquillon, "are the greatest secrets of longevity that I know of." One of the most pernicious habits that can be acquired is that of eating fast. The loss of teeth is not necessarily conducive to a short life, if the imperfection in chewing is remedied by a more careful and slower process. Simplicity in diet is another great point. Two, or at the most, three dishes ought to suffice, but monotony should be avoided. There should be variety in simplicity. It is also of importance to preserve a certain degree of regularity in repast. The number of repasts may vary with age and constitution; but three repasts, a light breakfast, a good dinner in the middle of the day, and a light supper, are admitted more favorable to health than late dinners, which leave the stomach unoccupied for a long interval, and overloaded at night. It is further of importance that the mind should be at ease during meals. That which is pleasant promotes digestion; everything that is reverse is obnoxious. Plutarch declared laughter to be the best sauce. Exercise should precede alimentation, not follow it.—Ex.

HINTS TO NIGHT-WATCHERS.—A person who is sick enough to need night watchers needs rest, and quiet, and all the undisturbed repose he can get. If one or more persons, are in the room reading, talking, or whispering as is often the case, this is impossible. There should be no light burning in the room unless it be a very dim one, so placed as to be out of sight of the patient. Kerosene oil should never be used in the sick room. The attendant should quietly sit or lie in the same room, or, what is usually better, in an adjoining room, so as to be within call if anything is wanted. In extreme cases, the attendant can frequently step quietly to the bedside to see if the patient is doing well, but all noise and light should be carefully excluded. It is a common practice to waken patients occasionally for fear they will sleep too soundly. This should never be done. Sleep is one of the greatest needs of the sick, and there is no danger of their getting too much of it. All evacuations should be removed at once, and the air in the room kept pure and sweet by thorough ventilation.—Herald of Health.

TOBACCO.—I know two respectable physicians, who were well satisfied that they had broken their constitutions, and brought themselves to the borders of the grave by the use of tobacco. I know two other gentlemen, the one a minister of the gospel, who were for years greatly emaciated and troubled with a severe cough, with other symptoms of diseased lungs, who, on being persuaded to give up the use of tobacco, both became immediately better, and are now, and have been for many years, perfectly healthy men. I know another case of a very respectable man, who has told me that he knew he was injuring both his body and mind by it, but had not resolution to give it up. Another still, a minister of the gospel, who was so much affected with a determination of blood to the head that he would sometimes, when walking the streets have to sit down on the first thing he could find, to keep from falling. This man, after giving up the use of the filthy plant for a few months, told me that his head had become clear and ceased to trouble him.—Dr. Wismer.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE SINNER'S ONLY PLEA.

Jesus, my advocate above,
To thee I bring my sinful load,
And cast myself upon thy love,
Trusting the merits of thy blood.
I would present no other plea,
But this, that thou hast died for me.

Thy wounds are eloquent in prayers
For all who humbly trust thy grace;
The Father on his oath declares
He waits to answer and to bless;
Then reconciled I now may be,
Since thou, my Savior, died for me.

Thou canst not plead my cause in vain;
I cannot trust thee and be lost;
The Father now accepts my claim,
And now I make thy death my boast;
My load is gone, my soul is free,
Because my Savior died for me.

A NEW ERA.

J. S. CLARK.

This is an age of revolution and changes. There is a mighty struggle between truth and error. The armies of heaven are marshaling to the final conflict, and are sure to triumph at last. The Lord of hosts is the leader of this angelic company. Truth will triumph. All false doctrines will disappear before the triumphant march of heaven's army. The time has come; the work is begun; the end will be glorious. A new era is about to dawn upon our dark, fallen world. The prophetic periods, the signs of the times, both moral and physical signs, indicate the speedy close of this dispensation, and the ushering in of that age when the Lord will be King over all the earth.

The question, What is to be accomplished before and after this mighty change? is of no small account. We are to watch, and act well our part, lest we be found sleeping and unprepared when the Master comes. "Behold I come as a thief." Rev. 16: 15. "Whoso readeth let him understand." As a thief will the day of the Lord come upon those who are not found watching. Christ himself will come as a thief, as a thief in the night; and they will not know, till they wake up and find their goods gone. Too late! the thief has come and gone, and they are left to mourn their loss. So it will be in the end of this world. The great work accomplished during the transition period will be such that those who are not watching will not believe, will not know, till they are found outside of the kingdom. And is it saying too much, when we assume that we are living (in this our day) in the transition period? The voice of one crying in the wilderness can be heard by all those who have ears to hear; and a mightier One is soon to appear in all his glory; even that dear Savior, who desires all men to be saved by believing on his name. The Jews were cut off because they knew not the time of their visitation. So there will be a class of professors, at the close of the gospel day, who will be counted as foolish virgins, because they have no oil—no faith in God's word. Nevertheless, man's unbelief will not hinder the great work and plans of God.

The new heavens and new earth will appear, and the first heaven and the first earth will pass away. And the New Jerusalem will be seen coming down from God out of heaven, and there will "be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, . . . for the former things are passed away." The mighty One will make all things new, and "he that overcometh shall inherit all things." The great change is at hand. The bride, the Lamb's wife, is to be all ready to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb; for none but "the pure in heart shall see God." "The fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Rev. 21: 8.

We are to be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die, for our works are not perfect before God. We are to repent, and hold fast; to watch and pray always, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping.

THE NARROW WAY.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Christians are exhorted to walk circumspectly, and to take diligent heed to their steps; or, as the original word in Eph. 5: 15, signifies, "Take heed to walk accurately," not carelessly or foolishly, but like wise men. The path is too narrow for pride, with its train of supporters; too narrow for hatred, envy, covetousness, lust, evil thoughts, and each and all of the works of the flesh. All these are in the broad road, the downward road, that leads to death. As the poet says—

"Broad is the road that leads to death,
And thousands walk together there;
While wisdom shows a narrow path,
With here and there a traveler."

This path is wide enough for "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance, and all the fruits of the Spirit; and those who possess all these traits of character, are true pilgrims, and are walking in the way of life, the narrow way.

The hypocrite pretends to walk in this way; but above all others, this pretense is indeed a "vain show." Doubtless, some think themselves in the right way who are not; for "there is a way which seemeth right unto a man," but the end of that way is death. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." Luke 13: 24. "For wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. 7: 13, 14.

MOSES AND PISGAH.

O. R. FASSETT.

Have the dead knowledge and eye-sight? After Moses wrote his valedictory, and delivered it in writing to Israel, as Jehovah gave it him, and as he was charged to do, he received command to go "up into this mountain Abarim, unto Mount Nebo, ... and behold the land of Canaan, ... and die in the mount." Deut. 32: 49, 50. "And Moses went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho; and the Lord showed him all the land." Deut. 34: 1. How can this be reconciled with the popular and spiritistic faith, that the dead have knowledge of the world, and all that transpires therein, and "know more than all the living," and are the witnesses and spectators of earth's passing scenes? Moses was "a hundred and twenty years old; . . . his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated," when God called him to go up into the mount that he might show him the land, and that he might "see" it before he died "in the mount." Deut. 34. Did not God know that he could show the land to Moses after his death as well as before, and even to far better advantage, and without this trouble of his climbing the mount? And did God not know that Moses after his death would see the land any-how from "either plains," whether he showed it to him or not?

One of two things is very apparent from this record. Either God was ignorant that Moses could "see the land" as well after his death as before, in the spiritistic state, and with his spirit eyes; or the prevailing doctrine that the dead have knowledge of "the mundane sphere," and of this world's affairs, or the affairs of the universe is a "fable." Shall we be long in deciding which horn of the dilemma to take?

But has not God showed to Moses "the land" in the spirit state also, at least on one occasion, and that on the transfiguration of Christ? No, sir. For Christ says of the whole transaction witnessed by the disciples, that it was a "vision"; and a vision is not a reality. Neither Moses nor Elijah were there, though Elijah could have been, for he never saw death as did Moses. "The vision" of Moses and Elias, seen by the disciples, was no more an actuality than John's vision of "a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues," standing "before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands" (Rev. 7: 9–17), was an actuality. This scene beheld in "vision" by John is to be repeated, but in fact; and it is laid beyond the scenes of "the judgment of the great day," and subsequent in chronology to the redemption of the whole number of the elect saved. See Rev. 6 and 7. Christ himself was upon the mount, but he was "transfigured." His appearance was changed, so that he appeared immortalized, as he now is, and will appear in his kingdom; but he was not actually made immortal, nor glorified.

WATER BAPTISM.

C. B. KNEESWORE.

Water baptism by immersion, I believe, is clearly taught in the word of God, and has always been believed by us as a church. We have believed that Jesus was baptized of John in the river of Jordan, setting forth an example for us to follow, and that Jesus' disciples every where preached repentance, and baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Not only did they baptize, but they enjoined it upon believers immediately after they believed. I say, we as a church have believed in water baptism. When I embraced the light on the second coming of Christ, and gave my heart to God, I understood the ordinance of baptism as binding upon the Christian church, and accordingly went down into the water, and was baptized. I did not understand the full force of that ordinance for years afterward; and I find that hundreds of others can testify to the same thing. Neither did I see it at all until in searching the Scriptures I saw that glorious figure of the death and resurrection, by baptism. By referring to Acts 22: 15, 16, we hear Ananias talking thus unto Saul, who is afterwards called Paul. He says: "For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now, why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

Why does he say, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins"? We find, according to Webster, the definition of wash to be (1) to cleanse by ablution, or by rubbing in water; (2) to wet, to fall on and moisten; (3) to overflow; (4) to overflow, or dash against, to cover with water, etc., etc. I think this clearly proves that the term wash, used by Ananias, meant water baptism. A few drops were not sufficient for Paul, but he had to be covered with water. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Col. 3: 1. If ye be risen from what? Why, from the watery grave. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Col. 2: 12. BURIED WITH HIM IN BAPTISM. Now this does not read much like Holy-Ghost baptism. Let us see what Peter says on the subject. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. This clearly shows, I think, that Peter alludes to water baptism.

Let us hear also what Paul says. Here we get at the root of the whole matter. Paul sets forth that beautiful figure of the death and resurrection, by water baptism. Now hear what he says: "Else, what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all; why are they then baptized for the dead?" 1 Cor. 15: 29. Again. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with Christ by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 3–5. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death"; and "if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." What a beautiful picture. It is the foundation of the christian's hope. I think that all of us must come to the conclusion that this view of the subject is correct. The more we look at it, the brighter it grows. It seems to me that if all those who are hesitating about being baptized would study these passages, that are quoted above, in connection with others, they would come to the conclusion at once that water baptism was one of the first principles of the Christian religion.

To me, there is no picture more beautifully illustrated in the whole Bible than this figure setting forth the death and resurrection by water baptism. Christ is the door. He that "climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." 1 John 10: 1. Christ has set us the example, by being baptized himself of John in Jordan; and I think we must accept it as the only way, or else make ourselves thieves and robbers. Besides, if we could climb up any other way, it would be changing the plan for which Christ died. Jesus said unto the eleven, as they sat at meat, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark 16: 15, 16. After he had thus spoken, he was received up into heaven, from whence we look for him the second time, without sin unto salvation, as he promised. Glorious day. Who would not rejoice that it is soon coming, that they who are faithful may dwell in life and immortality forevermore. Let us try to be there.

WHY NOT BE UNITED?

J. W. THOMAS.

United in what? In choosing a minister to come and labor with you as pastor. Does it pay to be always in a state of division in regard to this matter? Is it scriptural? Does the Lord bless a church in pursuing a course which is not in harmony with his word? Have you not seen the evil effects of too much transient preaching? Are not many churches to-day in an awfully crippled, shattered, and mangled condition, just because they have had no shepherd to watch over them and look after the lambs? What would the apostles say if they could come into some of the churches, who profess even to be looking for the soon coming of Jesus, and find them all in a state of confusion, contending and quarreling about ministers? Would not they administer some cutting rebuke? Listen to Paul for a moment: "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal and walk as men? For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal? Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase."

I verily believe that much injury has been done to the cause of God, in many places, because of this same spirit which Paul found among the Corinthians. I am neither old in years, religious experience, nor in the ministry, but I have not been a careless observer of the course which the Advent people, especially, are pursuing. I believe this system of constant traveling by nearly all of the preachers, is detrimental to the cause. It is true God has called some to be evangelists, and it is their duty to see that they perform the work of an evangelist; but he has also called some to be pastors and teachers. One is just as important in his place as the other. After the evangelist has labored in a church, or in a new field, and a great interest has been awakened, and many converted, then it is the pastor's work to stay and water and cultivate the seed which has been sown, and guard the tender plants. Every local church should have a pastor, and they ought to have religion enough to love and support him. Evangelists should teach the churches to be united with and help their pastor. But to-day, how is it? The churches have had so much transient preaching, that their mental and spiritual appetite is completely perverted. Every Sunday they must have something new. They will pray, "Lord, send by whom thou wilt," and then get right up and send for the smartest man in the country. This looks like trusting God, doesn't it? "Oh," say they, "we must have a smart man, or we shall lose our congregation." Yes, and perhaps you will have a little more scrip to pay, because the Gentiles don't put quite so much in the old contribution box. I think if you have any hearers who as so fantastical and voluptuous that they cannot listen to God's plain, unvarnished truth from an ordinary man, they had better stay away. Jesus Christ says to every church to-day, as he did to the churches of Asia, "I know thy works." The hour of solemn and eternal retribution is hastening on, and if Jesus comes and finds the churches in a state of wrangling and confusion, what will he do?

Would it not be wise to stop talking so much about ministers, and begin to talk more about Jesus? Would it not be wise to inquire first in regard to a preacher, Is he a "good man, full of faith and the Holy Ghost," instead of, Is he great, smart, and can he preach "some new thing"? Why not stop now, and inquire for the "old paths"? Paul never left a church without a pastor. Get on the right track. Obey God, and then you will prosper. Be united; love the brotherhood; live in peace; sustain your pastor.

TRUST.

How sweet it is to trust the Lord,
And in his goodness e'er confide;
To hearken to his precious word,
And ever by his truth abide.

So good a friend can ne'er be found,
He is our guardian and defense;
His mercies compass us around,
And sleepless is his providence.

On him make haste to cast your care,
And dwell secure in every place;
He'll never lure you to a snare,
Nor leave to ruin or disgrace.

Though friends forsake and foes assail,
He'll never false or recreant prove;
His faithfulness will never fail,
Nor his supernal, changeless love.

Then trust the Lord, and be at rest;
Let no distracting thoughts arise;
What he decrees for us is best;
He rules in love supremely wise.

HEAVEN.

A. L. ADAMS.

Heaven is my ideal home, pure, inviting, satisfying. How often do I look up and crave a blessing from the only place where my weary soul can find rest. In heaven all my sorrows are known. All the longings of my heart are unconsciously directed toward heaven, as the place from whence all my help must come. When I am sad and lonely, then I try to sing,

"Heaven is my home."

To know all of heaven that can add to our happiness is to live forever. I love to think of God, heaven, the great white throne surrounded by angels, and my Savior pleading with the Father for fallen men. I think of heaven as the home of all that is good and lovely, the synonym of perfection and beauty. I involuntarily associate God, heaven, perfection. Father and Son, heaven and home, perfection and immortality, constitute my trinity. There is help in heaven, and blessings without number.

To the christian, heaven is a comprehensive word, full of rich blessings. Our lives should be much in heaven, if we would be owned of God. I never doubt where heaven is. It is not far off. The nearer we get to Jesus, the nearer we are to heaven. The fully rounded christian life is not far from the kingdom of God. Heaven may be on this earth; if not now, when Eden shall be restored; and the saints shall inherit the earth. Jesus will be here, and that will make it heaven enough for me. Heaven will always last, though hell may not long endure. Heaven is a perfect word for home, love, joy, satisfaction, rest, perfection.

The worth of your life is told by counting your hopes of heaven. You may imagine the condition of this earth without the sun, but what imagination can picture the blackness and despair of earth without a heaven? In our Father's house are many mansions. In heaven there will be no night. If we would live in heaven, we must have our names written in the Lamb's book of life. In closing, I beg of you to read the last two chapters of the revelation to St. John. I cannot afford to lose heaven, though it cost all the glory of earth. Live for heaven.

CHURCH DIVISIONS.

THE CURE.

A. A. PHELPS.

4. "Be not wise in your own conceits." Where opposite opinions are entertained in regard to a given subject, both parties may be, but one must be mistaken. Whether the issue be of a doctrinal or practical character, it is but the dictate of wisdom that you seriously consider the possibility of your occupying a wrong position. "To err is human." You cannot claim exemption from mistakes. It is not well to imagine that you have reached the acme of human knowledge, or that wisdom will find its grave with you. Egotistical utterances and consequential airs are as false to the facts of philosophy, as they are fatal to the spirit of Christian love and unity. If you have any desire to promote harmony of feeling, do not assume that whatever is worth knowing has taken up lodgings with you, and that whoever dissents from your conclusions is necessarily wrong. It will take more than one ecumenical council to confer the gift of "infallibility" on a poor, ignorant, blundering, short-sighted mortal, like yourself. Therefore, lay aside all pomposity, and cherish the spirit of genuine humility. Consider your own frailty, and be willing to acknowledge that others may be as honest, as intelligent, and as correct in their positions as yourself. The less of conceit and dogmatism, and the more of the Master's meekness we possess, the better will be our qualifications to purify the turbid waters of strife.

5. Give up your own way for the sake of God's suffering cause. Compromises in Christianity is always wrong, for it involves a sacrifice of principle. But concession is both honorable and commendable, as it implies the surrender of a given preference, prejudice, or opinion, for the sake of peace. What though your opinion may be abstractly correct; is it best to shatter to fragments a whole society of believers by the tenacity with which you cling to some unimportant theory? It were better to maintain a favorite notion in patient silence, than to obtrude it upon the unwelcome attention of others, and then push it with such reckless furor as to leave nothing to mark its pathway but contention and strife. Such a course would argue more zeal than knowledge—more grit than grace. Where the issue is of such a nature that one of the parties must yield in order to bring about a conciliation, is it not as reasonable that you should make a surrender, as to ask one of your antagonist? As you really desire him to give up his own way and accede to you, so he desires you to yield the controversy and come over on his side. Suppose now you apply the golden rule, and do yourself just what you have been demanding of him. The probability is that the exhibition of such a Christian spirit will effectually melt the ice that has been collecting around your opponent's heart, and he will be willing to meet you more than half way. How sweetly your softened hearts run together now, and your only wonder is that they should have kept apart so long, with no better reason for the alienation. Far better is it that self should subside than that the cause of God should suffer.

6. Be willing to confess your faults. Church divisions generally involve more than a diversity of sentiments. Practical departures from the path of duty, and sometimes gross immoralities and heaven-daring sins, are interwoven in their sad history. In all such cases, of course a real reformation can only be secured by a radical repentance of the guilty party. The bitter cup must be drained. The heart must be burdened with a godly sorrow for sin, and the lips must give utterance to an honest confession. "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." Jas. 5: 16.

If you are the guilty one whose crooked career has been a stumbling-block to sinners, and a cause of grief to the faithful, make all haste to confess your faults both to God and the church; for "he that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." Prov. 28: 13. Let no pride of character, no love of "consistency," prevent you from humbling yourself in child-like simplicity and penitential grief. Nothing is so consistent as for those who have been pursuing a wrong course to turn squarely about and go the other way.

It would be exceedingly bad policy to run in the wrong road to ruin, for the sake of sustaining the reputation of a "consistent character" that never changes. It is time to change, the very moment the discovery is made that you are not right. Further delay only makes a bad matter worse. It is hardly possible for church difficulties to continue where the spirit of mutual confession becomes prevalent. Such a spirit implies a mellowness and docility that are eminently promotive of Christian concord. It does us good to acknowledge even those mistakes by which we unintentionally afflict our brethren; how much more ought we to confess and forsake what we know to be sinful in the sight of God, and damaging to the interests of our fellow men. Confession will bring forgiveness. Confession and forgiveness will secure Christian fellowship.

FAITH.

E. E. ALEXANDER.

Who can comprehend the depth of meaning in that little word? It is so great, that the wisest minds may not guess it; yet is it exercised even by infants in their mother's arms. Behold on the great ocean that noble vessel. It is rocking to and fro amidst the roaring of the wind and the gathering storm, which threaten every moment to cast it down in the maddened waters, to rise no more. All on board are in anxiety and fear. A little girl is standing beside her father holding his hand. We see no alarm on her childish countenance; and why is this? She trusts with all her heart to that father, who has always shielded her from harm; and she simply looks to him for protection. This is faith; and yet that child could not if she would explain it.

Again: a fair young girl, reared in the lap of luxury, and who is the very sunbeam of her parents' home, is about to leave those loving hearts, and all those hallowed scenes of the past, and go with one who only a short time ago was a stranger; it may be, even to distant lands, never to return. Whence this purpose, and why this separation from home and friends? It is faith. She trusts the one to whom she has given her heart's affections, and she trembles not to place the future in his care. And then, in the daily events of our lives, what faith we have in the word of a fellow creature. We read accounts in history which have transpired years ago, and we believe them as implicitly as if they had taken place before our eyes.

Now shall we not have the same confidence and trust in that great and loving Father who has watched over us from our infancy, and guarded us from many an unseen danger? Although our pathway may be strewed with thorns, and our bark sailing on stormy waters, yet let us look up and fear not, but say with the patriarch Job, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Weak and faltering disciple, while you may doubt whether you have really passed from death unto life, because your faith may not be as others, remember the great Teacher's words, that if your faith be as the grain of mustard seed, which is indeed the least of all seeds, ye shall ask what ye will in my name, and it shall be done unto you. It is not the degree of faith, but the principle, which he requires. May our prayer ever be with the disciples of old, "Lord, increase our faith."

And to those who trust not in the merits of a risen Savior, but are throwing around them the cloak of their own righteousness, God grant that their eyes may be opened, and that they may see in that spotless Lamb slain for their sins, and who rose again for their justification, all that they need for their complete and eternal salvation; and may their prayer ever be, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

BUSY FOLKS—FOLKS THAT ARE BUSY.—WORK! WORK!

D. F. NEWTON, Author of "Apples of Gold."

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—ECCL. 9: 10.

"God gives the bird its food, but does not throw it into its nest."

"Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

Paul told the Thessalonians, "If any would not work, neither should he eat." 2 Thess. 3: 10. See also Eph. 4: 28.

"Labor with what zeal we will,
Something still remains undone;
Something, uncompleted still,
Waits the rising of the sun."

Look at the birds, any idlers here? The fishes, any idlers there? Lift your eyes to the starry heavens, the planetary systems, worlds on worlds flying through infinite space; any idlers or dosers up there? Look at the skipping, dancing animalculæ, millions on millions, before the setting sun; any idlers there, dosers, or sleepers? Behold nature dressed in living green, waving fields, beautiful landscapes, fruits and flowers; any idlers, dosers, or loungers, seen or heard of here?

Every thing in nature and grace are active, full of life and motion, on the wing. The sun, the moon, the sparkling heavens, the birds, the floods, the rippling brooks, and flowing founts. The birds warble on every tree, in ecstasy of joy; the tiny flower, hidden from all eyes, sends forth its fragrance of full happiness; the mountain stream dashes along with a sparkle and murmur of pure delight. The object of their creation is accomplished, and their life gushes forth in harmonic work. O plant! O stream! worthy of admiration to the wretched idler.

Idleness is the bane, the moth, the gangrene, the curse of life.

"Dream not, but work. Be bold, be brave;
Let not a coward spirit crave
Escape from tasks allotted.
Thankful for toil and danger be;
Duty's high call will make thee flee
The vicious—the besotted."

The secret of all success in life, of all greatness, nay, of all happiness, is to live for a purpose. There are many persons always busy, who yet have no great purpose in view. They fritter away their energies on a hundred things, never accomplishing anything, because never giving their undivided attention to any one thing. They are like butterflies, that flit from spot to spot, never gaining wealth; while the ant, who strictly keeps to a certain circuit around her hole, gradually lays up stores for winter comfort. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise."

These early business-like habits and moral inculcations, watered by the dews of heavenly grace, shield the juveniles from temptation's snare; they grow up to manhood's prime, become useful, benevolent citizens; shine as lights, if so be Christ is formed in the soul the hope of glory.

"We need only labor as hard as we can,
For all that our bodies may need;
Still doing our duty to God and to man,
And we shall be happy indeed."

Young readers, will you please listen to these few gentle hints by way of improvement? Parents, will you? But let us glance at life and activity in a spiritual and heavenly light. How is it here touching things God-like, things divine? Are you on the wing, flying here, flying there, on deeds merciful and gracious? Some little folks, and some big folks calling themselves disciples, are snail-like, dumpish, mopish, doltish, clinging to earth. Multitudes of christian professors are locked up in Doubting Castle for want of work. No marvel, what else could be expected, so long as they take the easy-chair, sleep while angels sing, "glory, glory"!

What is a soldier? for what does he enlist? To slumber at his post, sleep on downy pillows? "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the hair have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Did Job, think you, doubt or despond while searching out objects of charity and mercy, when he delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him? when the blessing of Him that was ready to perish came upon him, and when he "caused the widow's heart to sing for joy?" Job was eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, and the cause he "knew not he searched out."

Did Paul, think you, suffer with doubts or despondency, while on the wings of love, pouring in the liquid flame of God's truth? Were Peter, James, or John, ever troubled with dumps or dumpishness, or were they ever locked up by Giant Despair in Doubting Castle after receiving the pentecostal baptism, the tongue of fire? And may not our sweet little ones, though yet very little, have this same pentacostal baptism and tongue of fire? Is not the blessed Lord just as ready and willing to bestow this baptismal fire and tongue of fire on the littlest of the little, as on the biggest of the big? This activity in doing good, diffusing light and life, is the great secret of warding off Satan's fiery darts, of growing in grace, of holy living. "Why stand ye here all the day idle?"

"Live for something; be not idle,
Look about thee for employ;
Sit not down to useless dreaming,
Labor is the sweetest joy."

"The poor ye have always with you; and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good." In ministering to the poor ye minister to Jesus. "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Matt. 10: 42. "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love which ye have showed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister." Heb. 6: 10. What saith Jesus to those on his right hand, in Matt. 25: 34? "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Wherefore?

"I was hungry, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; I was naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." "Inasmuch of ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

"Be thine the joy that angels know,
Who visit oft the abodes of pain,
With interest list to tales of woe,
And bid the dying live again."

"ONCE, AND NOW."

WM. KELLAWAY.

The above is the title of an article by a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. It first appeared in the Telescope, and was copied into the Christian World, May, 1825. It bears a second title—"Or Methodism in days that are past, and days that are present." It is so full of truth—sad truth, alas!—and so fully and literally counterparts the prophecies which speak of the love of many waxing cold, and of a form of godliness—in short, the power—that I have thought it useful to write it for the Crisis.

"Once the preachers went from house to house, preaching the wonder-working gospel of Jesus Christ; and the word was attended with such amazing power, that many fell down like men mortally wounded in the field of battle. Now, we seldom have a sermon, except in a certain large building, called a church; here we may hear them three or four times a week, but nobody cries for mercy; nobody falls down under the soul-piercing power of the word; so far from this, that some sleep soundly. Once, the Methodist preachers used to work with their own hands for their support; now they must be supported by their brethren. Once, if they had food and raiment, they were therewith content; now, they must have fine carpets, mahogany tables, and gilded chairs. Once, to be a Methodist preacher, was to be the filth and offscouring of all things, and to be despised and hated of all men for His name's sake. (O the glorious legacy!) Now, it is 'the Reverend Mr. S. has kindly offered to deliver a discourse in the Presbyterian church, in Wall street.' Once, the Methodists held their public worship in private houses, among the poor, in barns, and in the open fields and highways. Now, they must have a goodly number of churches, and some of these must be pretty dashy inside, though they should have to go in debt for the same, and never pay; and some others must have tall steeples, and sell their pews to pay for them.

Once, the Methodists loved one another with a love that many waters could not quench; and their hearts were knit together in this love, like the hearts of David and Jonathan. Now, they bite and devour each other; brother goeth to law with brother, and that, too, before unbelievers. Once, they sang in their devotions like the angels above, and their simple songs made sweet melody in heaven, because they all sang together in the Spirit. Now, the singing is by no means general in a congregation; it is done mostly by a few, who sit together in what is called the gallery. They are taught the art of singing, from time to time, by a kind of captain among them, being kindly assisted on certain occasions (intended as a season of instruction) by a huge fiddle! What would Paul have said to this nondescript worship? Notwithstanding many of their poor brethren, more spiritually-minded, are grieved with this practice, yet they persevere.

Once, the Methodists were a plain-dressing people, contented and happy in cheap and homely clothes, looking down with holy contempt upon all the fashions and gaities of this poor deluded world. Now, many dress like the children of this world; and a few females, though they do wear plain hats, yet these, together with the other parts of their dress, are costly, and their ribs squeezed into so small a compass by corsets, that they can scarcely breathe. Are they learning of Him who was meek and lowly in heart, when they are girting themselves up with these engines of misery and death?

Once, the Methodists, when in prayer in the great congregation, were mighty, having power with Elijah's God, and prevailed. Yes, when only a few of these poor, despised people assembled for prayer, the great King of kings himself would descend from heaven, and walk with terrible majesty through the congregation, filling some hearts with heavenly comfort and unspeakable joy, and others with amazing grief and anguish of spirit. O, the mingled sounds of joyful sinners just converted, of weeping mourners, and the shouts of saints! This is heaven below. But oh, the mournful contrast now! These seasons are seldom, or hardly ever seen. There is not that travail of soul for the conversion of sinners, and the consequent wrestling with God for this end. There is too much formality; too much cold-hearted singing; too much exhorting and preaching by those who need converting over again themselves. Indeed, people in this day are killed with preaching; too many cold, long, grammatical, heartless, lifeless sermons; and quite too few of them that are dictated and warmed by the Holy Ghost. And what proves the awful and dangerous state of the preachers and people is, that such a proportion of them cry 'Peace,' when sudden destruction is near; and if you represent these facts, they will perhaps insult you, or say as Thomas Mason, a Methodist minister, did to a person some time ago, who stated that the Methodists were rapidly declining in religion. Said he, 'You are under a delusion of the devil.'

In short, they have now become so dark, that they rise up against the truth, as you have daily instances of since you commenced your publication. Truly may it be said, that 'all flesh have corrupted their way before the Lord'; and when Christ comes, as the apostle asks, 'shall he find faith on the earth?'"

Dear readers of the Crisis, God grant that we may profit by these things. Let us take warning, lest we also fall in like manner.

OUR HOMEWARD TRIP.

Our return trip from California was quite pleasant. The Central Pacific R. R., from San Francisco to Ogden, in Utah, and the Union Pacific from thence to Omaha, Nebraska, are well built roads, with nice cars, pleasant conductors, and pass through the most interesting scenery of any roads on the continent. For these reasons, tourists, who wish to travel for pleasure, and see beautiful, wild, grand, and sublime scenery, should not fail to make an excursion to the Pacific coast, and from the Cliff House look far away upon the great western deep, and adore Him who made all these great wonders; and made them too, for the convenience and happiness of man. But bless his holy name, better things are in reserve for those who love and obey him.

After leaving Ogden, in Utah, at the junction of the Utah Central R. R. from Salt Lake with the Union Pacific and Central Pacific, at this point, we passed through Weber canon [pronounced can-yon], noted for its wild scenery. On each side are towering rocks and hills, some two thousand feet high, with the Weber river winding its way in quietude at their base, in the deep canon below. The scenery is truly majestic, romantic, picturesque, and wild, mingled with sublimity. An attempt to give a pen-picture of those wonders of nature would be like an effort to paint the sunbeams—a failure. For many miles it looks as though wildness had run wild, and stopped in the midst of its fright, and there remains petrified, to feast the eyes of the beholder. Rocks, like steeples, stand alone; others of immense size are piled like cobble stones on the tops of towering cliffs, threatening a terrible fall if slightly disturbed; then comes another deep canon dividing the mountains from top to bottom, affording a yawning gulf, where the sun never shines; and thus we travel on mid scenery as changeable as that of the kaleidoscope.

After climbing the Rocky mountains through a new variety of strange scenery, we arrive at Sherman, where we stand on the top-most point upon the road, eight thousand two hundred and forty-two feet above tide water. Here we found the ground covered with snow. In the distance may be seen "Long's Peak" and "Pike's Peak," covered with their snow caps, and looking far away upon the surrounding country. From Sherman, we go down, down, till we come to the valley of the Platt river, apparently as boundless as the ocean. As far as the eye can reach, we can behold nothing but a beautiful grassy plain. The land is said to rich, and we think it cannot long remain unoccupied. Enterprising farmers, and western emigrants, will then find plenty of room for doing a large business. When we arrive at Fremont, between forty and fifty miles west of Omaha, we come to the junction of the Sioux City and Pacific R. R. At this point, a lively interest has been awakened, and a pleasant village has sprung up that bids fair to enjoy a rapid growth. At Omaha a substantial R. R. bridge is being built across the Missouri river, which will be a great convenience to the traveling public, especially in the winter season. It will take some two years for its completion. After crossing the river at Omaha into Iowa, we pass through a rich farming country all the way to Chicago, the grand central depot for the produce of the northwest. This city of unparalled enterprise is growing rapidly in everything but virtue. If worldly prosperity produced holiness, Chicago would be a very righteous city. As it is, there are some noble men and women, who truly love Jesus.

OUR MEETING IN CHICAGO.

Sabbath, April 30th, was one of special interest and profit. We had the pleasure of meeting Bro. F. Burr and C. C. Ramsey. The latter is about leaving the city for Floyd, Iowa, where he purposes to make a home for the present. He hopes that this change of climate will afford much benefit to the health of his wife, who is still quite feeble. Bro. R. has done a noble and self-denying work in Chicago, during the past few years; and his labor in the Lord has not been in vain. Bro. Burr has come to take his place, as pastor of the church. We are rejoiced to know that such a true man of God is to succeed Bro. Ramsey. We shall expect to hear of the continued prosperity of the church under his watch-care, and faithful pastoral labors. The situation is not an easy one, but one of special responsibility. May the Lord give our dear Bro. great wisdom of speech and action, and make him eminently successful in leading the church into green pastures, and in winning souls to Christ.

We had also a pleasant visit with Dr. Manning, whom we introduced to our readers last autumn, as one who had been eminently successful as a revivalist in former years; but who had been thrown into doubts and darkness by the fabled theology which he was required to indorse. As a result, he stopped preaching, and took up the medical profession. In this situation he came to our meetings in Chicago, last year; returned to Christ, was blest, and is now on his way to the celestial city. We recommended him to those who would like to have a series of revival meetings.

We had a delightful visit with Bro. A. H. Billings, in his pleasant home, where we ever find a hearty welcome. He is an ardent lover of pure and undefiled religion; while at the same time he is one of the noted business men of the city. He is most firmly settled in the great truths of the Bible, is abundantly able to defend them, and has done much to assist in their promulgation.

We found the Chicago church in a healthy condition, and longing for the coming of the Just One, whom they soon expect to see in his glory. We learned that a new interest is being awakened in other churches in relation to the coming of Christ. The subject is being agitated, and the people are anxious to hear on the prophecies of Daniel and John. Several requested prayers, and many warm testimonies were given at the close of the Sabbath evening meeting.

We learned that Bro. Snyder, the German preacher, whose stirring testimonies we have often heard in the Chicago meetings, is very feeble. His health has been poor for some time. He is an earnest lover of the blessed hope, and has stood up nobly in its defense. Pray for him.

Leaving Chicago, we arrived home May 6th, and found all well as usual, and in a prosperous condition. Thank the Lord.

"BAD HABITS."—Under this head will be found an article from Bro. Munger, on long sermons. If those who preach the long sermons could hear the complaints that are made against them, we feel sure there would be a reform. Why should the preacher tire out himself and a large number in the audience with a long sermon, when one half as long will accomplish twice as much? Why? Let such read Bro. Munger's article, and ponder it well. It is time there was a reform. Those who can preach long sermons, and make long prayers and exhortations, can certainly give short ones. Condense, and double the power. Instead of reading and singing long hymns, it is much better, as a general rule, not to read more than one stanza, and not sing more than three. If we would have interesting and profitable meetings, every thing like dragging must be avoided.

DRY.—When looking over some professedly religious papers, once noted for their warm devotional spirit, we are astonished at their dryness. There seems to be scarcely any life in them. They are filled with the spirit of the world, instead of articles to awaken a devotional frame of mind. They lead into a cold formalism instead of an increase of love for Christ and his coming. Is not this a sign of the times? Do not the Scriptures clearly indicate that such will be the state of things at the time of the end? True faith in the word of the Lord seems to be departing from the people.

PASTORS.—Our readers will find in another column some practical thoughts on the subject of pastors, by Bro. J. W. Thomas. His remarks on the subject demand attention—immediate attention.

"SOCIAL" METHODISTS IN BOSTON.

There are no long-faced Methodists here. The Methodists have become the most sociable denominational Christians in New England, and they cultivate sociality as a science. Wesleyan Hall is in the upper story of the new Methodist Episcopal Church Publishing House on Bromfield street, and here are held monthly gatherings of laymen and the clergy of the city and vicinity. They are Methodist social unions, and, as may be inferred, the membership is somewhat select. An hour, perhaps, is spent in social intercourse; a good supper is then discussed, in which all the et ceteras are included, and then follows the feast of reason and flow of soul. Occasionally an outsider, connected with the Baptists, or the Orthodox, or the Unitarians, is invited in for the purpose of showing him how the Methodists inject true pleasure into their every-day religion, and make still stronger the bonds of friendship that unite the laymen and clergy of the Church.—Boston Cor. of Chicago Jour.

We have been thinking that the Methodists at Bromfield St., Boston, "inject true pleasure into their every-day religion" in a way quite unlike that practiced in the days of John Wesley.

"MODERN SCEPTICISM."

Under the above heading, we find a report in the Montreal Daily Witness, April 19th, 1871, of an address by Prof. M'Vicar to the Y. M. C. Association, in which is the following. After showing the dangers to which young men are exposed from the spread of pantheistic sentiments, he takes up "MATERIALISM," and says:—

"This is a species of scepticism strongly allied to pantheism. It blots out all soul and spirit, and claims that the body is the whole of man, and that when he dies all dies with him; that man and the world are material and not spiritual. This is the old Sadducean doctrine; aiming at the overthrow of the doctrine of a future state, and specially of future punishment. The answer to this doctrine is simple. The soul and body can be easily distinguished in thought. The old Greeks knew and felt this. The soul has a separate existence as a thinking being. We do not teach our body philosophy, but our soul. There was a mass of Scripture evidence that could be adduced to disprove this dogma. Our Savior commended his soul not his body to God, and the apostle St. Stephen, when stoned to death, cried to Christ to receive his spirit. The writings of St. Paul showed that the spirit must be cleansed from the lusts of the flesh, and the Bible was replete with such distinctions between the body and the soul. In the resurrection of Jarius' daughter, 'her spirit came again,' says the apostle, showing that it had been separated from her body and had returned. This materialism was a form of scepticism very injurious to young men, as it lessened their respect for religion and God's laws."

When telling the young men how to meet scepticism, he recommended them to study the Bible more thoroughly. This was excellent advice; and if carefully followed, can hardly fail of convincing them that the Scriptures do NOT teach that man has a soul which "has a separate existence as a thinking being." If this distinguished Professor could step into some of the meetings in the Minna street church, San Francisco, we think his love for truth would oblige him to say, "this materialism" has done wonders towards reforming young men, and wonderfully increased their respect for religion and the Bible; leading them from the service of sin and Satan to become the delightful followers of the Lamb of God, who has taken away their sins, and filled their hearts with abounding love, joy and peace. And further, when Bro. M'Vicar sees the clear light shining on the sacred page, in relation to the fact that man has not an immortal soul, which "has a separate existence as a thinking being," we believe he will love God and the Bible better than ever before; especially when he sees that the Scriptures most plainly teach the destruction of the wicked, instead of their eternal torment.

BR. J. W. THOMAS IS DEAD.

Just as we were going to press, we received the following sad intelligence:—

Providence, R. I., May 20th.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I have sad news to write you. My dear companion is dead. She died this morning, at half-past eight. Truly I am passing through the deep waters, and the floods of grief overwhelm my soul. O when will the morning come that shall dry up all our tears, and awaken with its rising glory our loved ones who sleep in Jesus?

Yours in deep affliction, J. W. THOMAS.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

That statement fell from the lips of the Savior, and in due time it will be verified, let men disbelieve it and scoff at the sentiment as they may, by saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Here we have the promise given by the Savior himself, and given in such a connection as forestalls every effort to spiritualize the promise. "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again." Did he literally "go"? Certainly. Then he will as literally come again." We cannot literalize the departure, without also literalizing the return, unless we do violence to the language; for the same "I" that was to "go," designates the personage to return—"I will come again."

A large class of theologians freely concede the fact that Christ will literally return from heaven, but having overlooked the object of his coming, they feel uninterested in the great question. Let it be understood that Christ not only announced the fact of coming, but also specified the object for which he was coming, and an interest will be necessarily felt in the matter. The full statement of Jesus is as follows: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 1–3. He is coming for the important purpose of receiving the saints unto himself, and if they are not to be "received unto himself" till he comes, his coming is an important event.

That he will not receive them unto himself prior to his return is further evident from the fact that he "shall judge the quick [living] and dead at his appearing" (2 Tim. 4: 1); and certainly he will not receive unjudged men into realms of felicity, to be subsequently summoned to leave a world of happiness to be judged; and consequently, unless men enter glory unjudged, they cannot enter till Christ's "appearing," for he is not to judge either the living or the dead till then; and another result grows out of this conclusion, which augments the importance of the Lord's coming: if the dead remain unjudged till Christ's "appearing," they must also remain unrewarded till then; for judgment involves the decision of the Judge for or against men, and the execution of that decision; and the decision in favor of the righteous cannot be executed before it is made. Whatever the saints enjoy in the world to come will be the result of judgment rendered in their favor by the divine Judge, unless they judge themselves in defiance of Jehovah's arrangement. And if it were possible for the saints to obtain the bliss of futurity previous to the judgment, the judgment would thereby be invalidated. But the truth is, judgment is not only due at Christ's appearing, but reward comes after judgment, both according to reason and scripture, as the following text will show: "Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints." Rev. 11: 18. The saints of all ages, including the ancient prophets, remain unrewarded till the dead are judged, and the dead remain unjudged till Christ's appearing.

As there is no reward till the judgment, and no judgment till the coming of Christ, future reward depends upon the coming of the Lord, agreeing with Paul's statement: "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. 9: 28); thus deferring the completion of salvation till Christ appears. This makes the advent of Christ an event of no ordinary importance, a theme of unparalleled interest, it being an event which brings our future reward; and the Scriptures often present the matter in this light.

Paul testifies: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 3. Should the question be asked why we must wait till that event before we can appear with Christ in glory? the answer is not difficult: the judgment does not come till then, and unjudged men cannot enter glory. Peter affirms: "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5: 4. But why must the saints remain uncrowned till that event? Because the judgment does not come previously, and it is the work of the Judge to dispense the crowns.

Jesus asserts: "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27. "And behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be." Rev. 22: 12. Here are two testimonies from Christ himself, connecting "reward" with his coming; not for a few merely, but for "every man," and that takes in all, both dead and living. But why are all to remain unrewarded till then? The answer is easy: the judgment does not come previously. "I will come again"—come as Judge, come to give reward, and come to receive the saints unto himself to reign with him in his kingdom forever. W. S.

A DEATHLESS NATURE IN MAN.

When men are desirous of learning what is really true, they will carefully examine both sides of a question; but when they arbitrarily assume that a certain sentiment is true, and bend all their energies to prop it up, and to make it true, they often select some very poor props. This is specially true of the efforts to prove the deathless nature of the soul. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life." John 3: 36. The claim is made that the physical man has not eternal life, and therefore reference must be made to the soul. But if this is the case, the soul cannot possess everlasting life prior to believing on Christ, for only "he that believeth" possesses it, while it is expressly affirmed that the unbeliever "shall not see" it,—that is, if this claim is correct, the soul becomes immortal at conversion, and the souls of the unconverted never become immortal, and hence must die; so this effort to prove a deathless nature in man, proves the reverse in the case of the majority of men.

The saint "hath everlasting life" only as an investment in Christ, but not yet in actual possession. "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son" (John 5: 11), instead of being in us; "and this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life" (1 John 2: 25); "in the world to come eternal life." Mark 10: 30. W. S.

"RECEIVE MY SPIRIT."

The petition of Stephen, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit" (Acts 7: 59), and the dying language of Christ, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (Luke 23: 46), are adduced as proof that man survives death; but these texts say nothing about a personal spirit. As only one spirit leaves man at death, indicated by the statement, "The spirit shall return unto God who gave it" (Eccl. 12: 7), and as God "gave it," not as a pre-existent personality, but simply as a pre-existent element, it will not return to God as a personality, but as the "spirit of life." Two facts show the pre-existence of this spirit; (1) God "gave it." He could not give that which did not exist; (2) it is to "return to God"; and it could not "return" if it had never come from God. But did it pre-exist as a personality of life and intellect? Then why do we not all remember such an existence? It was a spirit of some kind when it was given, for God "gave it—the spirit—and only that spirit leaves man at death. If it was not a personal spirit of life and intellect, before given to man, it will not be such a spirit after leaving man. Being stoned, bruised, and mangled, with no hope of recovery, or mitigation of suffering, or even alleviation of pain, Stephen uttered a reasonable request: Receive the spirit of life; let me die and escape this torture, as recovery is impossible. The claim that a personal spirit leaves man at death is not susceptible of proof, but at war with both revelation and reason. W. S.

"CALIFORNIA GAB."

It will do I suppose for "C" to give such a scurrilous name to his own correspondence, but I am sure it will not go down with the Crisis readers. After feasting us with reports and stirring articles all winter long, he suddenly comes to a halt, gives them the above mentioned title, and bids us all "good bye."

I think this is very abrupt. To be sure I have no business to find fault, for "C" has the perfect right before man to quit us if he pleases, and I, for one, am truly thankful for what good advice he has already given to us, and hope to profit by it; but I would say to "C" that if he can conscientiously resume his communications to us in the Crisis, call them by what name he will, I think that many hearts would rejoice as they read them.

Come out from retirement, "C"; put on the whole armor of God, give us a broadside every week, and let your voice also be heard in the defense of the gospel. This is your duty, and God help you to do it. F. B.

NEW YORK CAMPMEETING AND ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Dear Brn. and Srs. of New York and Penn.

The New York State conference is to hold a general campmeeting in connection with the annual conference, commencing June 8th, to hold one week. Are we awake to the awful responsibility resting upon us, as christians? God has called us out in these last days to give the last note of warning to a perishing world. The signs of the times speak in thunder tones that the Lord is coming, and that very soon. Are we doing all we can to help others to see this great truth? Come, dear brethren and sisters in Christ, let us make one grand rally, and come up to this annual gathering in the name of our God. Come praying, ready to take hold of the work the first day. The Lord will bless us, and we shall see the power of the Lord manifested in the conversion of sinners. Let us all break through every seeming hindrance, and come up to this meeting. O Lord, help, is my prayer.

Dansville, May 18th. D. COGSWELL.

"WHO ARE SADDUCEES? OR, TRUTH VINDICATED. By Geo. Thomson. Being a Review of a work of I. P. Warren, entitled, 'The Wicked not Annihilated, or Modern Sadduceeism Refuted.'"

I. C. WELLCOME.

We have read the above work with much interest and satisfaction. We had seen and read Mr. Warren's work with mingled feelings of gladness that the truth on "the nature of man" had taken such a wide range and strong hold of the public mind, as to arouse the attention of the largest religious publishing establishment in America; and of regret that the editors and combined wisdom of the managers of the "American Tract Society" were so ill-informed in Bible truth, and so reckless of consequences, as to publish a work filled with perverted statements, false use of words, false statements of the views of their opponents, illegitimate deductions, and weak efforts, with exceedingly bad logic, to sustain the dogma of the immortality of the soul, and then call it a "Refutation of Modern Sadduceeism," meaning of the "mortality of man," and "the destruction of the wicked."

Bro. Thomson has done well in his "Review" of said work; and it is not a labored work, for it was an easy task to show the sophistries of the work of Mr. Warren. It is a candid and important work, vindicating the truth of the Bible against the attacks of men who resort to all means, except legitimate Bible arguments, to sustain error. If the "Board of the American Tract Society" ever read Bro. Thomson's Review, I think they will blush in shame for having decided to publish Mr. Warren's effort. The Review costs but 10 cents single, and should be widely circulated to meet the influences of the other. Published by Geo. Thomson, Attica, Wis.

☞ MORALITY without religion is only a kind of dead reckoning—an endeavor to find our place on a cloudy sea by measuring the distance we have run, without any observation of the heavenly bodies.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

TRAVELING THROUGH CHICAGO.

I have seen it stated in papers that there was but one "union depot" in Chicago; and for the benefit of those who may be passing through this city, I wish to make a true statement of this matter in the Crisis. Nearly every passenger depot in the city is a "union depot" for an eastern and a western route; and travelers from the New England States, can generally so choose their routes, if they wish, as to have no transfer in the city, and so save expense, and also time when on close connections. The union depots are as follows: Michigan Central, from the east; and Burlington and Quincy, and Illinois Central, westward. Michigan Southern and Lake Shore eastward, with the Rock Island and Pacific, westward. Pittsburg and Fort Wayne eastward, with the Alton and St. Louis westward. The Indianapolis and Cincinnati depot is across the street from the Wisconsin branch of the North Western railway. The Galena Division of the North Western R. R. stands unconnected with any eastern road.

The cost of transfer between depots is fifty cents for each person; but this can be saved by travelers frequently by a little calculation beforehand, and sometimes also a tedious delay in consequence of trains being behind time, although every effort is made by the R. R. companies to prevent delays, and make timely connections. Through fares are usually the same on all the different routes, and the accommodations about alike on them all.

MISSION WORK.

F. & W. DEVO.

BRO. GRANT:—I took the cars Feb. 22nd to go to Tama City, Tama Co., Iowa, a distance of one hundred and twenty-five miles. I had about five hours to wait at Marshalltown. I went to the P. O., and inquired who took our papers. I found that a Bro. A. Wilbur was taking the Crisis. I soon found his house. He is a member of the M. E. church. A friend east had persuaded him to take it three months. He liked it much. They treated me kindly, and gave me my dinner. He told me that there was another man who was reading it, who had been one of our preachers. He took me to his shop, and, to our mutual surprise, we had met before. It was Bro. T. F. Marshall. I spent about an hour with him, and after receiving a faithful promise from him that he would return to the Lord and duty, I went to the depot, and was soon landed at Tama City, and was warmly greeted by Bro. U. C. Newcomb's family, from Manchester, Iowa. Having about an hour to give out notice, I had a good hearing for the short time, and the first night. Things looked favorable, as there was already a theological upheaving in the place. Eld. J. B. Tallmadge, of the M. E. church, a preacher some twenty-two years, who had read Storrs' "Six Sermons" some eighteen years ago, for the last few years had been a firm believer in the truth we hold. A short time ago he applied for a letter and obtained one from the Presiding Elder, and had preached four sermons about five miles from the city, which had made a stir all around. The circuit preacher had given out to preach on the immortality of the soul; so I was just in time to add to the stir, which was done with the best of results.

On Saturday, I requested the minister to bring just one text that said the soul was immortal, and I would give it up; I should be there in the morning to hear him, then I would reply in the afternoon. Not many were out to hear him. He said the sermon was not prepared in view of what had been said the few days before, but would quote three texts for my benefit, as proof of the immortality of the soul, as follows: John 11: 26; Luke 20: 38; Rev. 6: 9. These I answered, as not being positive proof; so I saw no good reason to change. March 4th, I immersed two. The next day came the M. E. preacher's third sermon, and five of his members withdrew—Bro. M. A. Newcomb and his family. He had been a licensed exhorter for the three years past, and was acting as class-leader at the time. We organized a church of thirteen members that night, and took the Lord's Supper. This Bro. Newcomb is a justice of the peace and Notary Public, and just nominated for the mayor of the city, the last of the week. On Monday they had the town election. Some voted for him because he took the step he did, but the Methodist church went with almost their entire strength against him, because he had left them, which was the common electioneering plea of the day. I was told they run a man who was not a professed christian. Bro. N. only lacked five votes of being elected. I am thus particular, to show how truth is hated, and that professed christians will stoop and take such things to the polls. What would they do if they had the power in their hands?

March 7. As the Baptists refused me the baptistry, we went to the Iowa river and immersed twelve. Some of them were children of the Baptist members. I closed the meeting March 8th, with thirty-six names on the church book.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. K. Flagg.

BRO. GRANT:—I know it is interesting to the brethren and sisters to read accounts of what the Lord is doing in different localities of the gospel vineyard. Since the campmeeting at Springfield last fall, I have been preaching all of the Sabbaths, and nearly every evening. I have witnessed the conversion and re-consecration to God of a good number of sinners and backsliders, as the fruits of the many prayers, exhortations, pleadings, and teachings of the flock during the united and harmonious efforts put forth by the church and ministry for the salvation of sinners, and the waking up of the Laodiceans. I have attended protracted meetings with the church at Bridgeport, Ct., 24th St. church, N. Y., Waterville and Collinsville, Ct. I labored two weeks in Philadelphia, Pa., preaching, mornings and evenings of the Sabbaths to the church worshiping corner of Ninth and Spring Garden streets, and in the afternoons to the church in Camden, N. J. Both of these churches have the pastoral care of Bro. F. H. Burbank, whose labors among them have been rewarded with success. They have also the labors of Bro. Samuel Ashman and Bro. J. M. Stetler.

The church in Camden commenced at the close of the tent-meetings held there during the summer and fall of '69, most of its members embracing the faith of the ancient saints at that meeting. During my stay at Philadelphia, Bro. J. M. Stetler, in accordance with a wish unanimously expressed by the church, was set apart and ordained an Elder to the work of the ministry, Bro. Ashman and myself officiating. Both churches are in a prosperous condition.

The church at Bridgeport, Ct., worship in a little chapel of their own. They have the pastoral care and labors of Elders Andrews, Leonard, and Stowe, all members of the same church. They are united and harmonious in their efforts to advance the cause of truth. During my stay of two weeks, a good number from the other churches attended our meetings, appearing to be much interested in the different points of our faith. I found the church at Waterbury, Ct., in a very prosperous condition. Quite a number of our Free Methodist brethren had come in to labor together with the church for salvation. Although differing on some points of doctrine, yet they brought with them PEACE, and earnestly contended for an entire consecration to God of soul, body, and spirit. This is an element we very much need at the present time; and although we may think ourselves rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing, in view of the many and glorious truths we advocate, with hearts in a lukewarm condition; yet God will spue us out of his mouth unless our zeal originates from a clean and pure heart, and with a life consecrated to God.

During the two weeks I labored at N. Y., the meetings were exceedingly interesting. A good number of ministering brethren of the city and its surroundings were present, each contributing their share to the work of reformation during the meetings; and although differing on points of prophecy, yet perfect harmony prevailed throughout the whole course of meetings. I have visited and preached to other churches in Ct., and Mass., Sundays and evenings of each week, as the way seemed to open for good. In nearly all the places I have visited, I found a growing disposition on the part of some of the Advent and other christian churches to cultivate a more kind and charitable feeling towards each other than formerly. It cannot be denied, however, that there is an alarming state of lukewarmness existing throughout the Advent Christian body; and at the very time, too, when the events of every day and hour can be found marked in the delineations of prophecy to be fulfilled during the preaching of the last message, "Behold I come as a thief," etc. Rev. 16: 15. Yet there is a deep feeling of interest waking up among some who are trimming their lamps and preparing to meet the Coming One.

From Bro. P. B. Manning.

BRO. GRANT:—I see by the Crisis that you are expected to be in Boston about this time. I should like to see you once more in this world, but I do not expect to see you till Jesus comes; then I shall see you in the kingdom, if I am faithful to God till I am changed from mortal to immortality. Well, my dear brethren and sisters in Christ, what a winter I have passed through, but I have been almost to the grave, yet a few weeks at the most. It does seem to me I cannot stay here much longer. I am sure God raises me up again. I now have to lie on my bed most of the time in distress. But I can say with Paul, that 'I am now ready to be offered.' I am satisfied my time is at hand.

I thank the dear children for their help in my distress. Brethren, do think of me in your prayers. I received $5.00 from a friend in Bath, Me. He did not give his name. I wish the dear brethren and sisters would send me their names, so that I can answer them. I am trying to live for the Lord every day, and be ready for the judgment. It must be soon. The Brn. and Srs. will not have to help me much longer. I am satisfied that I must go into the grave soon. So let it be. Bless the Lord forever. May the Lord bless all the dear saints, and save them in the kingdom, is my prayer. Thy poor sick brother in Christ.

Goffstown, N. H., May 14th, 1871.

From Bro. S. Woodruff.

DEAR BRETHREN:—How often have I been cheered by your letters in the Crisis; and the thought came to me this morning that perhaps in like manner, in return, I might comfort some throbbing heart sighing for our Lord's return. Many are the afflictions of God's dear children here, for this is truly a vale of tears. Many are the hours of weeping in our pilgrimage. We are told to refrain our voice from weeping, and our eyes from tears, because our children are not, knowing they will come again from the land of the enemy; but we may weep over the lost and perishing of earth, for we are told to sow in tears, and reap in joy. How can one help but weep over the perishing, when salvation and eternal life are offered so freely, without money and without price? How can we but weep knowing the shortness of time, and the mighty host that are rising to pleasure, who are soon to meet the vindication of God's righteous judgments; for the word declares the end of all things is at hand—the hour that will bring our loved ones from the silent grave. A few years ago, we laid away our little boy to his cold resting place, to wait the trump of God at the last day; and the 11th of this month (Feb.), we followed again the hearse, which carried our aged father to the silent tomb. Many weeks had he prayed that the Lord would let him rest in the tomb. His prayers are answered.

Dear brethren and sisters, it is a blessed thought that the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth. Our fathers, our mothers, and our little boys and girls, will be numbered with those that come from the land of the enemy. Blessed be the name of the Lord for the prospect before us. The tombs cannot always hold the now silent dead. A little while, if faithful, we shall mingle our voices with theirs in the Eden of love, where all will be beautiful and lovely. No chilling winds, no dying groans, no grave-yards there; no tolling bells to greet our ears; but our Jesus will be there, the Lamb of God, the Captain of our salvation. Yes, and the loved of earth saved eternally with Jesus our Lord. O sinner, would you be there? Get ready ere it be too late. Jesus calls you. I pray you hear his voice; take heed to his words, and live forevermore.

From Sr. C. M. Case.

Bro. Grant:—Will you permit me to speak to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, in behalf of our southern mission? Dear friends of the mission: I have been spending a few weeks at Black Walnut, Va. That mission is under the direction of Bro. Hastings, and is prospering finely in charge of Bro. Brundage, who makes his home there, but whose field of labor extends from Richmond into North Carolina. His labors are incessant, and so arduous that unless he has help before long, I fear he will break under them. He has been south the last three years; has been teaching and preaching continually, night and day, most of the time. O could our friends of like precious faith see things as they really are in that beautiful land of darkness,—could they but hear the cries that go up daily from those cabin homes, and realize as we do with what eagerness they are looking to them for instruction in the way of life and salvation, their hearts would go out to them as ours do, and they would feel their responsibility as we do. Where are our young men, all imbued with the spirit of their Master, who are willing to forsake all, take their lives in their hand, trusting in Him alone who feeds the ravens, and go forth to this noble work? Yes, I mean you, my brother, just starting in life, and your companion with you. You are just the one needed. Many a sister stands ready to join in your labor of love, if your home and presence were open to shield her from the shafts of calumny that are flying in every direction, in this land of the enemy. Could you but see how earnestly they seek that knowledge that has been almost forced upon you from your earliest childhood, walking from five to eight miles after toiling hard all day, in order that they may read God's holy word for themselves, you would feel that no sacrifice was too great to assist them in their endeavors to gain everlasting life.

I feel there are very many of our brethren and sisters north, who will be glad to do something in this direction, who cannot go themselves. To such I would say, Send your offerings, asking the blessing of God upon them, and do not hesitate because you cannot send your dollars. Let the tens, twenty-five and fifty cents be sent with kind, sympathizing words to the dear ones, who are literally sacrificing all for Christ and his truth; and the Lord will bless you four-fold. I assure you anything sent to Bro. Brundage will be judiciously expended, and these little rills running in from all directions will form a mighty river, flowing through Old Virginia, and watering the whole sunny South, bringeth forth fruit to the glory of God. Try it, my dear friends, and do not delay. The time is short. Christ is coming very soon, and what is done must be done quickly. Try it, and see if the Lord does not bless your efforts. Send your offerings to Elias Brundage, Black Walnut, Halifax Co., Va. Your sister waiting for Jesus.

Philadelphia, March 13th, 1871.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. E. S. Gilbert, Dowagiac, Mich., writes:—"I am very much interested in your paper, and, I trust, edified by the explanations of Scripture. I am often pleased, surprised, and thankful for this new light shining on texts, which before were not more than half understood; and also am gratified that your paper is conducted in such a frank and candid manner toward the orthodox churches, and that so little ridicule is employed, which seldom convinces of error, and would be, I think, descending from the high tone your paper occupies, as a general thing.

We must remember, were it not for what those churches have done, the Bible and missionary societies, with all their grand results, would not have existed, and the world might still have been in heathenish darkness; besides, were not we converted to Christ in those churches, and do we not owe them a debt of love? I intend to pay that debt, as well as I may, by circulating your writings among them, whether they will hear or forbear."

Sr. P. T. Wright, Hope Valley, R. I., writes:—"Being a constant reader of your valuable paper, the Crisis, and a firm believer of the truths therein advocated, I scarcely know how to express my gratitude for the light I have received from its columns. I feel you are doing a great work in spreading the truth, and fighting against the errors that are fast becoming rooted in the minds of many people. There is much prejudice in the place where I live; yet there are a few who are looking for the Master, and are not afraid to testify to the truth. Although we are scoffed at, and called many harsh names, still we have the blessed assurance that Christ knoweth them that are his; and though friends despise and forsake us, we have a friend who said, I will never leave or forsake you. There are many precious promises to the obedient. May the Lord be with all his faithful ministers, and help them to declare the whole counsel of God, and bring them with all his dear children to that rest that remains for all them that love his appearing."

Sr. L. V. Bailey, Jacksonville, Fla., writes April 17th, 1871:—"I thank God for the true light that shines, and to think that I am spared to be able to sit under the teaching of Bro. P. A. Smith. I don't think we can do without a preacher here in Florida. I had the pleasure of hearing Bro. Smith yesterday. He preached a powerful sermon."

☞ There is some place in which we may all work—rich and poor, young and old. Coveting earnestly that best of all gifts, love, we shall not be long in finding opportunities. While those endowed with great intellectual abilities are grappling with deep questions and interests that present themselves to mature mind and thought, gentle, loving souls are bringing as deep thoughts into the mind of childhood, and leading the young heart into the way of life.

Obituaries.

Fowler. Died, in Corinna, Me., May 7th, 1871, Ephraim D. Fowler, aged fifty-one years and six months.

Bro. Fowler attended church the day and evening of his death, spoke of his hope, retired about nine o'clock in good health, apparently, and at eleven, a son of fifteen, who lodged with him, awoke only in season to see the last gasp of life. Thus we are admonished of the uncertainty of life. The funeral services were conducted by N. F. Nason, of Weeks Mills, Me. Discourse from words found in Isaiah 26: 19. H. H. Davis.

Smith. Fell asleep in Danbury, N. H., May 10th, 1871, Dea. Amos Smith, aged seventy-four years.

The subject of this notice has been firm in the service of the Lord for many years, and an ardent lover of the blessed hope. Pilgrims have ever found a hearty welcome at his board. Words of comfort and sympathy were spoken by J. G. Knowlton, from 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8: "I have fought a good fight," etc. S. F. Leavitt.

Cook. Died, at Mill Creek, May 9th, 1871, John, son of John and Caroline Cook, aged eight years and six months.

We mourn the loss of our dear son, but not as those who have no hope; for we believe he sleeps in Jesus, and soon he that raised up Christ from the dead, will also quicken his mortal body.

John E. Cook.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Paris, May 21. The Federalists have abandoned their positions at Malakoff, Petit Vanvers and Grand Montrouge, which only maintains communication with Paris by a subterranean passage.

The Federal forces are re-entering the city in the greatest disorder. Shells are falling on Montrouge. The inhabitants are terror-stricken and many have been killed.

Versailles, May 21. The Versailles forces entered Paris at four o'clock this afternoon. The entrance was effected simultaneously at two points—at the Gate of St. Cloud, near Point du Jour, and the Gate of Montrouge, on Boulevard Brune. The insurgents have abandoned the rampart.

Paris, 21. The Versaillists have not attempted an assault on the South. A terrible bombardment sweeps the ramparts. The Federalists are making desperate efforts to repair and protect the gates. The only Generals now outside of the walls are Dombrowski, who is in Bois de Boulogne, near Porte de la Maette, and Wroblewski, who is making a stand at Gentilly. The Versaillists attacked and captured part of the latter suburb. Auteuil and Passy are subjected to a violent bombardment. The Auteuil gate has been abandoned by the Federalists, whose forces have fallen back inside of the city.

Versailles, May 21. A circular from Thiers officially confirms the entrance of the troops into Paris. It says: "The gate of St. Cloud having been battered down, Gen. Donai rushed in. Generals Ladmirault and Clinchamps are preparing to follow."

Since the issue of the above circular good news has been received. Donai's men held their positions in the St. Cloud gate, where they have cut the telegraph wire communicating with other portions of the enciente. A flag of truce was hoisted at Auteuil gate. Two regiments entered there and proceeded beyond the Viaduct Circular Railway, meeting with feeble resistance.

General Cissey reports that Malakoff and Fort Montrouge have been abandoned by the insurgents, and will soon be occupied by his command, but the batteries on the ramparts opposite are still firing.

There is a panic at Paris. It is said that Pyat, Grousset, and other rebel leaders have disappeared.

The inhabitants of Malakoff and the villages near Vangirard and Montrogue are fleeing from their dwellings.

Paris, May 22. In all, over 70,000 Versaillists have entered Paris, and more are now coming. They marched in all night, coming through six gates, and met with but slight resistance. The barricade was not defended, and no mines were exploded.

The Versaillists are now moving on the Hotel de Ville, where the Communists will make their last stand. The Versaillists behaved splendidly, committing no excesses.

L'Admirault telegraphs that every thing is satisfactory, and although fighting may continue several hours, the city is absolutely won. Many of the Commune leaders were taken and there were some awful massacres.

Versailles, May 22. In the Assembly to-day Thiers made a congratulatory speech on the surprising success of the Government arms. He said that he had not expected to effect an entrance into Paris for three or more days, and gave an account in detail of the movements on Sunday which terminated so victoriously. He announced that the Government was determined to visit with rigorous punishment the most criminal insurgents.

Bills were introduced to restore the Chapel of Expiation and the Column of Place Vendome, the latter to be surmounted by a statue of France. A vote of thanks to Thiers and the army was adopted by acclamation.

London, May 22. All communication with Paris is suspended, the Northern Railway having been cut by the Prussians.

It is reported that Gen. Dombrowski has been captured by the Versaillists.

The bombardment of portions of the fortifications of Paris still held by the Federalists continues.

Versailles, May 22. Paris has been completely isolated by the Prussians, and no news has been received from there since midnight. Half the army is within the walls of Paris, and hold the gates of St. Cloud, Passy and Auteuil, Trocadero and Muette, as well as the Arch of Triumph. Eighty thousand Versailles troops have entered Paris. A sharp cannonade is heard, doubtless against the barricades near the Arch of Triumph. Gen. Uurich took six hundred prisoners last night, of whom four hundred, including M. Assy, have been brought to Versailles.

DOMESTIC.

The German Emperor and the Pope.—The ultramontanes of Germany have found a solace for the Dollinger schism in a declaration of the Emperor William, made to a deputation of his Catholic subjects while he was sojourning at Versailles, in reply to an address in favor of the independence of the Pope. The Emperor's reply, but recently made public, is said to have been to the following effect:

"My sentiments toward the Pope, as the religious sovereign of my Catholic subjects, have always been the same. I look upon the occupation of Rome as an act of violence and arrogation on the part of Italy, and after the termination of this war, I will, in connection with other monarchs, consider upon steps to be taken against it."

The war being at an end, a supreme effort is making to induce the Emperor to act upon his promise. A taut reign is also kept over the Catholic communities to prevent the spread of independent thought. The priests are exhorted by the bishops, and charged in turn to exhort their flocks against this newest form of heresy, and, remarks a correspondent at Berlin, not a nobleman, statesman or any influential individual who is not taken in hand for more stringent than any political organization ever attempted, and made to work in behalf of the cause of Papal supremacy and Papal infallibility, and for the suppression of the Dollinger heresy.—Boston Journal.

Religious Items.

—— If Pope Pius IX. lives to the 17th of June, he will be the only one of the two hundred and fifty six Popes who has equalled the founder of the dynasty in reigning a quarter of a century; and if he lives over the 24th of August he will have been the longest reigning of all the Popes.——There are said to be one hundred and sixty nine Second Advent ministers in New England.——The national association of christians opposed to secret societies will hold its annual meeting this year in Worcester, Mass., on the 7th, 8th, and 9th of June.——The Interior (Presbyterian), of Chicago, has laid down a new rule for the guidance of the religious press. It says the junction of a religious journal is not to discuss current events and facts, but "to imbue the minds of the readers with those principles which are as old as John on the Isle of Patmos."——The price of a Bible in the time of Edward I. was thirty-seven pounds, while the price of a day's labor was three half-pence; at which rates it would have taken a laborer over sixteen years to earn a Bible.——During the siege of Paris the prominent Protestant pastors remained in the city preaching the gospel not only in their churches, but in the streets, to all who were willing to hear. They were never allowed such a privilege before.——A new Russian sect, that of the "Sighers," has just been formed at Kalouga. This sect believes that the time has now come which was foretold by the prophet, when there should be no true church on earth, and when all that men can do is to send up their sighs to heaven and pray for salvation. The "Sighers" have no churches, priests, or religious ceremonies of any kind.——Devoted and talented women have suddenly appeared in Methodist conventions and conferences, as well as in churches. Some reporters say that it is well worth while for the preachers to hear them, if only to learn how to preach. We not only hear about Miss Leonard, away off in Kansas; of the singularly eloquent Mrs. Willing, from Chicago to New York, and from New York to Boston; of Mrs. Whittemore of Philadelphia; but in the latest reported case, of a whole corps of them invading the Pittsburg Conference—Mrs. Bishop Clark, Mrs. Eastlake, Mrs. Willing—and carrying triumphantly the votes of the session for their good cause.——The Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago is evidently a live institution. Last year it found employment for 3490 strangers, and its committees visited 40,203 persons with a view to their general and spiritual welfare.

In Brief.

—— Louis Napoleon used to write sentimental poetry for the New York Mirror when he sojourned in that city.——Which Pope is infallible? Pope Innocent XII. excommunicated all who used tobacco in any form; Pope Pius IX. smokes and uses snuff.——A fiery volcano of large proportions has suddenly appeared in the interior of Mexico.——The Post Office Department sold $16,581,000 worth of stamps and stamped envelopes and wrappers during the last fiscal year.

In connection with the above meeting, the Iowa Christian Conference will hold its fifteenth annual session. Let ministers and delegates be present. Ministers are required by the constitution to report by letter, if not present. Tent Meetings.

The time has almost come for the Mission Tent to be in the field, and the mission work to be vigorously prosecuted. The Mass. Conference intend to double their effort for the spread of Bible truth, hoping and expecting the brethren will help by their means and prayers. Let those who see a good opening, and desire a meeting in their neighborhood, write us of the prospects, and their desires, for we shall soon make arrangements for meetings. L. Boutell, For the Committee.

Notice.

The Mass. A. C. Conference will hold its next quarterly session in Salem, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 6th, and holding over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that the preaching brethren will make a special effort to attend this meeting, and come filled with a spirit of labor, so that the glad tidings of a soon coming Savior may be echoed throughout the length and breadth of the city. And will not the brethren from the adjoining churches endeavor to attend en masse, so that this gathering may result in good to all, and bring glory and honor to God?

C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

Maine S. A. C. Christian Conference.

EXTRA SESSION.

As the executive board has been petitioned to call an extra session of the Maine Second Advent Christian Conference, to be holden in Portland, in Union Hall, on Free Street, and as there are several items of important business to be attended to; we therefore appoint to meet at Union Hall, Portland, Tuesday, June 13th, at two P. M. A full attendance of the ministers and delegates is desired. Remember, each church or society is entitled to one delegate, and one additional for every ten members, duly chosen and furnished with certificates. Come, brethren, praying that the Lord may direct us in all our work, and make the conference a blessing to his cause. Let all collections for the Maine Mission and Tent cause be reported at conference.

I. C. Wellcome, Sec.

Vermont Tent-Meeting.

The Vermont tent will be pitched at Woodstock, Vt., June 14th, and meetings will be held day and evening, as long as duty may require. We want a general rally of the King's forces from far and near. Brn. Grant, Couch, and Mathewson are expected. Particulars soon. H. F. Carpenter.

New York Campmeeting and Annual Conference.

These meetings will be held in Stephen N. Whitney's grove, one mile and a half south east of Albion, commencing on Thursday, June 8th, 1871, and to continue one week. All trains stop at Albion, and ample arrangements will be made for the transportation of persons and baggage to and from the camp-ground.

The business of conference, which is rather important for this session, election of officers, etc., will be disposed of in the morning and A. M. sessions, as early in the meeting as possible. Let all ministers and delegates be as early at the meeting as they can. The large new State Tent will be put upon the ground for dedication. The old "State Tent" and the "Lord's Tent" will also be on the ground for the accommodation of strangers, and such as cannot well supply themselves with family tents. Let none forget overcoats, thick shawls, quilts, and such other articles of clothing and bedding as are necessary for camping out.

It is expected that as many as can will associate themselves in family tents, providing themselves with board, etc. But there will be a small boarding tent, though sufficient to supply all those that cannot arrange for themselves, at reasonable rates.

Wm. E. Brown,
Lauren Grinnell,
A. Riggs,
N. Witherington,
N. McCullock, } Committee.

Family Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held on the ground occupied last year, four miles east of Avalanche, commencing May 31st, 1871, and hold over Lord's day. It is desirable that all who come will be on hand the first day. It is a very small sacrifice to make for the perishing, in the name of Jesus. He made a greater one for us. Let nothing hinder us from coming the first day, but an impossibility; and come to work as never before. Let us try and pull some wanderer out of the fire, hating even the garments spotted by the flesh. Poles for tents may be obtained on the ground. The committee will furnish hay for all teams, whose owner's tent is on the ground. Bro. Thurber, of Sparta, will be in attendance. Whereas the committee and friends, who reside in the place, will (and intend to) bear the heaviest burden, we hope those who are able will not forget to help them. The poor will be cared for. Brethren and sisters, come to work. The Lord will soon come, then our work will be done.

For the Committee, P. W. Houck.

Wisconsin Campmeeting.

This meeting is to be held at Prairie du Sac (Upper Sauk), Sauk Co., on the old camp-ground, beginning on the 4th of June. We hope to witness a large gathering of pilgrims. Come with tents, if possible. All coming by R. R. between Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien will stop at Mazomanie, and take stage ten miles to the meeting. Those coming over the R. R. between Milwaukee and La Crosse, can take a steamboat every other day at Portage City, or a stage daily at Kilbourn City, direct to the meeting.

Wisconsin friends will please, so far as possible, to come in time to pitch tents on Saturday, June 3d. Fare from Mazomanie, by stage, only 25 cts. Usually boats leave Portage City for Sauk on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. We wish to begin on Sunday morning with a full grown campmeeting, at high water mark.

O. S. Knapp,
P. W. Mayte,
Wm. Sheldon, } Committee.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The Wisconsin Conference will convene in connection with the State campmeeting at Prairie du Sac, and hold its first session on the 10th of June. Let the churches elect their delegates in time, and let all ministers who wish to unite come in season. Members and churches unable to attend, will please report by letter to the Secretary in season for the meeting. Wm. Sheldon, Secretary.

Grove Meeting.

If the Lord permit, there will be a grove meeting in Belchertown, Mass., Dark Corner school district, Sunday, June 11th. Pilgrims in adjacent towns are invited to the feast. Some four or five are to be baptized. M. L. Curtis.

Notice.

The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held at Hartford, Me., commencing Thursday, June 8th, at five o'clock P. M., to continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped there will be a general attendance of all the faithful in that section of the State.

Jesse Gay.
E. M. Haggett.

Notice.

There will be a meeting, the Lord willing, at West Rumney, N. H. (Plain school-house) commencing Tuesday evening, May 30th, 1871, and continue over the Sabbath. Let the brethren and sisters in that vicinity come and labor for the salvation of the perishing.

Edward Cox.
B. W. Davis.

Conference.

The Advent Conference of Nova Scotia will hold its next annual meeting at Bear River, Digby Co., Nova Scotia, commencing Friday, June 16th. A general invitation is extended to all, especially to preaching brethren. The churches are particularly requested to send delegates.

J. J. Woodworth.

Minnesota Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held at Kasota, beginning June 26th, and closing Sunday evening, July 2nd. Kasota is a station on the St. Paul and Sioux City R. R., about three miles above St. Peter. The Winona and St. Peter R. R. also (which is just completed) runs within half a mile of the camp-ground, making this point the most convenient for a general gathering from the different parts of the State. We hope to announce soon the arrangements for half fare tickets, and other particulars. Edwin T. Hecox, Chairman of Com.

Notice.

I supplied a number of brethren with works at campmeetings last year, and those who can possibly send me what is due by mail, in June, I wish they would do so, as I am much in debt for printing, and ought to pay up. If any can aid me in throwing off the unpleasant burden of being in debt, it will be thankfully received. Age and health prevent my obtaining means to live and pay debts as formerly. Direct to J. Blain, Buffalo, N. Y.
